appearing publicly in Court; but by the Charter a privilege is given to waive this, and allowing these prejudices as long as they do not militate against the course of justice. The prisoner is tried for murder in the Coroner's Jury; but as the Grand Jury has thrown out that bill, if this jury thinks the same they can find a verdict for the minor offence, or if they consider prisoner guilty of the higher offence, they can convict her on this indictment. If they doubted the evidence of the principal evidence for the prosecution, viz. Belaul, on whose evidence alone the charge hangs, then they can acquit the prisoner altogether. The Judge then said, that an attempt had been made to impeach Belaul's evidence. He then stated that the evidence of Ameerun and Khanunjee, who state that Belaul tied the wrists of the deceased and suspended her and beat her, although not a contradiction to Belaul's evidence, because he was not questioned on this point, yet his suppressing it would materially shake his evidence. However, there is against Ameerun's evidence, her stating that she did state this circumstance of Belaul suspending and beating the deceased, when she had not actually stated it to Mr. Robison, for it is not likely that Mr. Robison would have omitted so very material a circumstance if she had stated it. But another thing again, he stated, that the prisoner did not urge to the statement, is that between the period when this witness Ameerun was examined at the Police, and her deposition at the Coroner's Inquest, where she first made this statement, it can be supposed that she had either forgotten it at the Police, being then in a perturbed state of mind from being in custody, or had remembered when less agitated at the Coroner's Court, or else that she had instantaneously trumped up the tale to free her mistress, throw discredit on Belaul's evidence, and gain favor with her employer. The Judge then stated, that it has even by the evidence of Belaul, been shown, that the prisoner was generally a very kind mistress, and it has been shown that Belaul was certainly not very favorably disposed towards the prisoner, from her stinting his necessities as admitted by him, although there is nothing shown that Belaul was actuated by either malice or hatred, to give the information he did in this case at the Police office. Further an attempt is made to shew that Belaul was in ill terms with this deceased and had maltreated her, but certainly the facts of this case have not proved this clearly. Another circumstance is, there is no proof even in the evidence of Belaul, that the prisoner was ever actuated by any other motive beyond a desire to punish the girl for theft and general misconduct, and her applying medicines and sending her to be cured, shows, that she never intended her death. Again, if the jury are even of an opinion, that the prisoner inflicted these wounds, even then, if the Jury believe the evidence of Mr. O'Brien, that the deceased was subject to the disease of the spleen, although this has been directly contradicted by Dr. Bam, the Police Surgeon, and supported by the native doctor, examined in this case. If Mr. O'Brien is to be believed, then it further appears by the evidence of Drs. Raleigh and Martin, that such a state as the deceased is described to be in when she received this injury, was conducive to increase the ulcers from the slightest abrasion. The Judge remarked that in such cases where a person has a disease, and another inflicts an injury on him which although it would not cause death in a more ordinary healthy person, may aggravate the disease of this person and hasten death, it is manslaughter. In the same way if a person receives from the hands of another any hurt which although not of a nature in itself considerable, nevertheless by ill treatment may end in gangrene and ulcers and cause death; this the law also holds to be manslaughter; for although the gangrene and not the hurt caused the death of the deceased, yet the hurt was the cause of the gangrene which caused the death. Here the Judge said it is evident that in the present case turpentine oil, chunam and turmeric, some of these being ingredients of a strongly irritative quality, were applied in this case. He then said, in conclusion, that the law holds that any person who under any circumstances inflicts any injury on a body, unless upon very strong provocation and at the impulse of the moment, and this injury causes death, that person is liable to the full consequence of their act, is liable to be punished for murder; but in all cases it is incumbent on the Jury to find out the motives which could urge a person to this act. He then remarked that it is not likely that persons of the habits and capacities of the prisoner in this case, could have been aware of the consequences likely to result from such slight bruises on the body of the person in that sickly state of health in which the deceased is described to be; nor is it likely that the beating was very severe; for it has been proved that the deceased's hands were put on the floor and beaten with an instrument, which, had the blows been violent, would undoubtedly have broken all the bones in the hands of a child of the age of the deceased. There is no doubt that the blows were given more as a chastisement to the deceased, for the theft, than from a malicious motive, and that the deceased, even after this correction, although not efficiently, could still do her household business on that day and the following day, and under this case arises the question, whether the prisoner for all external appearance did suppose the deceased to be shamming to avoid work, or whether she really maliciously carried on an evil disposition towards the child and caused her death, and in which case the verdict must be of murder and which can only be returned on the conviction in the minds of Jury that the death of the deceased was caused by the injury from the severity of the punishment maliciously exercised, and which in its nature was itself sufficient to cause death in any ordinary subject. But if the Jury believe, that the chastisement was merely sustained however injudiciously, she is guilty of manslaughter only; but if they doubted the evidence of Beaulat altogether, then they cannot but acquit the prisoner.

The Jury, after a short deliberation, without retiring from their seats, returned a verdict of not guilty.

The prisoner was then tried on the charge of manslaughter on the bill found by the Grand Jury, who ignored the bill for murder. The prisoner pleaded not guilty on this charge. The Judge said to the Jury, that as the evidence which was given in the former trial was the evidence which would be taken on this trial likewise, it would be unnecessary to put the witnesses again into the box and examine them again, as he had no doubt that the substance of those depositions, were fresh in their memory: he therefore left the case with the evidence which had been taken and the charge which he had made in the former trial to the consideration of the Jury; he certainly did not think it necessary to go over the same evidence again unless the Jury required it.

The Jury were satisfied with the evidence taken and instantly returned a verdict of not guilty.

The prisoner was then released, and the Court broke up at half past 9 o'clock p. m.

Previous to the examination of Dr. Bain, the Judge offered the Jury their choice to postpone the case for the next day. This he said was time for them, if they felt disposed to defer the rest of the trial for the ensuing day, to do so before they had perhaps by tomorrow either forgotten—what they had heard, or very slightly likewise added, that if the Jury thought that for about three hours more they would not be so exhausted as to be prevented thereby from paying the due attention required from them to the Judge's address and calmly deliberate on it, he would then advise them to prefer proceeding with the case; but if they thought the exhaustion would be too great, then he would advise them to prefer a postponement: the Jury were about to prefer a postponement under the following idea, that they would be allowed to go to their houses at night and come again the next morning at 11 o'clock a. m. to the Court; but when they understood that they would be detained in Court during the adjournment, they preferred going on with the case. This was at 7 o'clock p. m.; the whole of the proceedings did not end till about half past 9 o'clock, and it was about a quarter to 10 o'clock before the Judges and the other persons in the Court had all retired. The Court was crowded to excess during the whole trial, more particularly so towards the close of it.

AUGUST. 10, 1837.

Owing to the indisposition of Ibrahim, who was committed by the Coroner verdict on an indictment for murder, his case has been postponed, and that of Bruce and Shand v. T. Ferguson, comes on to-morrow, (to-day) at 11 o'clock, A. M.

We were informed yesterday, that the Advocate-General had been directed by Government to apply to the Court to summon a Grand Jury, to enquire into the capture of Pirates brought here in the Hulk on a representation made by Captain Stanley of that vessel, that he is under orders for England and cannot wait until the next sessions!—Hurkaru Aug. 11.

AUGUST 11, 1837.

Rex on the Prosecution of Bruce, Shand and Cragg, v. Thomas Ferguson.

Mr. Grant opened the indictment.

Mr. Clark opened the case for the prosecution, and began by observing, that if the case had been tried in London it would have been tried before a special jury; but here, although the case was a case between merchants, yet such was the opinion both of the prosecutors and the defendant, that no application for a special jury had been made; this was in his opinion a high but a proper compliment to the jury empannelled. The learned counsel here, after indulging in some sensible comments upon the propriety of there being laws to restrain the licence of the press, and citing a passage from an address of Lord Brougham, when at the bar, to a London jury in corroboration of these views, then stated that the jury he addressed were the interpreters of this doctrine in the present instance, and if they thought the case before them presented an infringement of the doctrine laid down, they should give their verdict accordingly. The learned counsel then enlarged on the importance of which it was to all men, and in no small degree to commercial men, to preserve intact and to enjoy to its fullest extent all the advantages arising from a good reputation, and the good opinion of his fellow men; one foul act, one error, might, however, destroy a reputation; and after a few more remarks the learned counsel cited a passage from Mr. Starkie's book to this effect. A part of the defence will rest on the mode of remedy which we have resorted to. It will be said we ought to have resorted to an action, and so have given the defendant an opportunity of justifying; that the greater the truth the greater the libel, observations of Charles Fox, in a celebrated cause, were here read by the learned counsel on this proposition; the learned counsel then stated, that from the nature of the attacks made by the defendant, which were of a general nature, it was impossible that they should be justified; they went to the whole actions of life, and a man who could indulge in such observations, was a public pest, and deserved no consideration. But he would rather have the opinion of twelve fellow citizens on a matter of character, than any tribunal in the world; such a tribunal he could not have had for his clients, if he had brought a civil action. The inconvenience and expense arising out of the civil action, was illustrated by the learned counsel, in the instance of Bryce against the Hurkaru newspaper, where the defendant justified. The plaintiff finally recovered 800 rupees damages, but he could not get his costs, and although successful the plaintiff had to pay 6000 rupees for his triumph. The learned counsel then stated, that the firm of Bruce, Shand and Co. was known to the jury; Mr. Fergusson, is also known to you; with what disputes may have taken place between them, we have nothing to do; you have to consider the libellous matter contained in the three letters set out in the indictment. The prosecutors have only had recourse to this remedy after the annoyance became almost daily, and when it came to a question, whether or not Mr. Fergusson should be permitted to libel them with impunity. The learned counsel then read the following letters:

28th January 1837.

SIRS,—I consider the whole bearing of your conduct on the subject of our recent correspondence, to be perfectly in keeping with the flagitiousness of that, which I had previously in other respects experienced at your hands. The time, however, I trust, is not far distant, when the policy of your treatment of me will be put to a test, that will separate truth from falsehood, honor from infamy, and faith from perfidy. In the interim you will clearly understand that I shall hold you responsible for whatever sum I may be endangered by the non-employment of the Heroine, and further that I reject (and view with the sovereign contempt which the insolence of the proposal merits) the measures, which in the plenitude of self-sufficiency you have had the audacity to suggest as a substitute for these.

Mr. Hurry was the medium of communicating from you, and upon which my treaty with Rustomjee was based and influenced.

I am, Sirs, yours, &c. &c.

Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co. THOMAS FERGUSSON.

LETTER No. 2.

SIRS,—The contempt and scorn which your last communication of Saturday excited, took such an ascendancy over my indignation as to restrain the expression of my disgust at the temerity with which you continue to commit yourselves to assumptions, which you well know to be wholly fallacious and destitute of all foundation; and as I conceive that the tissue of falsehood with which almost every syllable of the letter, which you have addressed to your agents, on the subject of the Heroine's insurance, places your assertions beyond the pale of all rational, or argumentative discussion, I do not now take up my pen either to complain of, or refute them, but merely to tell you, that whilst the shallow stratagem you have thus resorted to, affords ample illustration of your aptitude for the practice of any contrivance however untenable, and fraudulent that might aid you in eluding a responsibility to which you stand both legally and morally bound, the artifice in question betrays on your part, such a want of capacity, and such gross ignorance of the rules of business, as any school boy would be ashamed of!

In conclusion, I have merely to reiterate my resolution to hold you accountable for the demurrage of the Heroine, a penalty which, with reference to the employment now available to me, will be found of no inconsiderable import, on whomsoever it may fall.

I am, Sir, yours, &c. &c.,

Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co. THOMAS FERGUSSON.

The learned Counsel then commented on the very general nature of the libels in these two letters. They might have related to any of the jury as to Bruce, Shand and Co. He then read the 3rd letter of the 20th March.

LETTER No. 3.

Calcutta, 20th March, 1837.

Sir,—I was not at home on Saturday evening when your communication of that day was delivered, or it should have been contemptuously returned to you by the bearer of it; and I only refrain from the adoption of such a course now, in the view of hereafter exhibiting the measures of falsehood which characterize the precious contrivance, and of adding it, to the other records in my possession of your baseness and folly.

I may as well, however, intimate, that I should consider it nothing short of yielding to a species of contamination, which out of respect for myself I am bound to resist, were I in future, to permit myself to be open to the reception of any further direct communications from so polluted a source; and I must therefore desire, that you will never again presume to take the liberty of addressing me on any subject whatever, except through the medium of a third party, because from the experience which I have had of your treacherous disposition, I naturally view with distrust, suspicion, and horror, everything that emanates from parties, whom I know to be so familiar with the practice of acts, that the less vile would shrink from the perpetration of, and who are at this moment recklessly luxuriating in the temporary possession of property, of which I have been cheated and defrauded by the most surreptitious artifices.

It will be my province, however, to use the exuberant means yet so happily in my power, to bring you to your proper bearings; and depend upon it there shall be no relaxation of my energies, on that behalf, until we are not partially, but wholly, and substantially redressed, and you are consigned to the degradation, which sooner or later overtakes such hypocrisy and imposition as I have to complain of at your hands.

I am, Sirs, yours, &c. &c.

Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co. THOMAS FERGUSSON.

Mr. Clark then observed, that he need not make one single comment on these letters; but he merely drew attention to the general nature of the charges, the almost unmeaning abuse lavished on the prosecutors. The learned counsel then indulged in some ironical observations, in which the words filling-gate and ducking stool occurred, and with some forcible general observations concluded his able address.

William Gallagher was then called, who proved the partnership of Bruce, Shand and Co. in March. Knows by sight the defendant; he is a ship owner, but is not aware if he trades. He has had several ships, he has got two now; the Heroine is one of them. Knows Rustomjee Cowasjee, he is a merchant. In February and March the Heroine was here. The letter of 28th of January is the whole of it in Fergusson's hand writing, also the signature; the letter of the 30th is also his writing and signature, (the Counsel for the defendant refused to produce the letter of the 18th March.) A letter was written by Bruce and Co. to defendant on the 18th March. I sent it myself. I have a peon book, this it. (Here the defendant's Counsel handed over the letter of the 18th March and the account appended to it.) I saw the letters of the 23rd and 30th January in the Counting House of Bruce and Shand. I must have seen them about 10 days after the receipt.

Cross-examined by the Advocate-General.—Mr. Cragg shewed me the letters. Mr. Fergusson has been a great constituent of Bruce and Shand: he was the owner of a great many ships. Can't say if the house had mortgages on these ships. Mr. Shand went to England in 1835, and returned in 1836; the partnership was altered in August 1836. I never had any communication with Shand and Fergusson, and was not sufficiently near to hear what took place at a meeting between Bruce, Shand, Cragg, and Fergusson. The Robarts, David Clark, Nacario, Argyle, and another ship were sold to liquidate Mr. Fergusson's balance to the house. The ships were large ships, of 5 or 600 tons. Mr. Shand is in Glasgow: he went before this bill for injuring his character was preferred: he went in January. I was before the Grand Jury, it was in March last. I do not know of any bargain that was made about the Heroine. I enclosed the account (shewn him) by my own good will. It was with the assent of Mr. Cragg I proposed it. He said "yes." This was an account about the Robarts received from London. At that time the Robarts had been sold on account of Bruce, Shand and Co. There was going on at that time an arbitration between Fergusson, and Bruce and Shand. The arbitration was terminated on the 18th of March, when the letter was written. I now know, that the claim on the Robarts, was before the arbitrators. I know that Mr. Fergusson was very angry at the claim contained in the letter of the 18th. I would have sent the letter without the authority of Cragg. I know that the subject of the account, and demand made by the letter of the 18th, was before the arbitrator. I now know that the claim was ordered to be paid by Bruce and Shand, by the arbitrator. The proceeds of the sale of the Robarts carried to the credit of Fergusson was near upon a lakh of rupees, it was not more than a lakh.

Re-examined by Mr. Grant. I do not know if the award was published at the time, I sent the letter on the 18th of March.

Mr. Grant, is an assistant to Mr. Fergusson: he was residing in Calcutta in March. He has been a considerable time with Mr. Fergusson and knows his handwriting, (letter of the 30th March shewn him). The signature is in the hand writing of Fergusson, (letter of the 28th January shewn witness.)

Mr. Clark asked witness if he had ever seen the letter before.

The Advocate-General objected to the question, they were bound to prove the libel as laid in the indictment verbatim, and this was not the proper mode of doing it. The Judge took a note of the objection, but allowed the question. The witness then stated that he supposed he had seen the letter before, but not read it, as the direction was in witness's hand writing. Does not remember receiving directions from Mr. Fergusson to the best of his belief, the letter was put on my desk sealed with a direction from Mr. Fergusson to forward. I can't recollect what was done with the letter, at this distance of time. I think Mr. Fergusson took it up after I addressed it. Mr. Fergusson has a letter book. I believe it is in Court. I know of no copy being made of it. Can't say if more than one letter was on that day written to Bruce and Shand. I have no recollection of what has been done with this letter (of the 28th February). Letter of the 30th March, shewn witness. That is also, writing and signature, in the hand of Mr. Fergusson. I have seen it before. I can't say how I came to see it, but I suppose

Mr. Fergusson shewed it me. I see an alteration in my hand writing, and that makes me think I saw it.

Mr. Clark told him to point it out.

The Advocate-General. I caution you, you are not bound to answer it, you will criminate yourself.

Witness declined to answer the question. Witness cannot say on what day he saw the letter. I don't know what became of the letter after I saw it. I believe the address is in the hand writing of a native scribe; he was in the service of Mr. Fergusson on the 30th of January. I don't know if any copy was made of the letter. (Letter of 30th March shewn witness). The signature is Mr. Fergusson's. I don't recollect Mr. Fergusson's saying any thing to me about this letter: I would not swear that any exact copy of this letter was ever made. I have seen the letter before, at Mr. Fergusson's office. I really can't say if when I saw it the signature of Fergusson was to it, or whether the signature of Mr. Fergusson was put to it the last time after I saw it. The body of the letter is not in Mr. Fergusson's hand writing, nor the direction, only the signature is his.

The Advocate-General admitted notice, but refused to produce Mr. Fergusson's books. Refused also to produce the draft of the letter of 30th March.

Witness. I really cannot say if I ever saw the draft of the letter of the 30th March. I some times write from dictation, and some times copy his letters. He certainly never saw any draft of that letter. I can't recollect if the letter was written from dictation.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith.—I am intimately acquainted with the matters in dispute between Fergusson, and Bruce and Shand. The agreement to refer to arbitration was in writing and I believe the arbitrator sat. I know there was an award. Mr. Fergusson has been a large ship owner, and has had large dealings connected with this sort of property with Messrs. Bruce and Shand. Mr. Fergusson has been subject to great embarrassments lately.

Mr. Leith, by whom were they produced?

Mr. Clark objects, (question not put). Never heard from Mr. Shand what the discussions between Shand and Fergusson were about. Saw Mr. Cragg 2 or 3 times, with regard to the policy of insurance to be effected on the Heroine. (Here Mr. Clarke objected).

The Advocate-General submitted, that Mr. Leith might put the question relating to the disputes between Fergusson and Bruce and Shand, because it was of consequence to shew that the alleged libels were written on matters connected with the interest, of the party writing them, and not mere general abuse, and submitted that he was entitled to go as near the truth of the libel as possible, without proving it absolutely. Cites 1st Starkies Law of libel, 322; the case referred to by Starkies is the 1st Campbell MacDowal v., —also Starkies' Law of libel, page 315.

Mr. Clark—The whole of these cases now cited, are civil actions, and do not apply. Lord Leicester v. Walter cited by Mr. Pearson was merely a case as to mitigation of damages.

Mr. Justice Malkin. Well, I shall also here pass sentence.

Mr. Clark. Not before the jury have returned their verdict. He then continued his argument, in support of his objection, and contended that it might be matter of mitigation of punishment, and that was the time to bring these circumstances forward; this is not matter for the jury, it forms no part of the issue they are to try

Mr. Justice Malkin.—Mr. Advocate General, it rather seems to me I ought not to receive this evidence. I will take a note of your objection.

Mr. Leith resumed his examination, the object of which was to show, that in consequence of the letters of Mr. Fergusson (the libels) relief was obtained, and that goes to shew that there was no malice.

Mr. Advocate-General, to an objection of Mr. Clark at this stage, observed, that suppose the letter of Fergusson to Bruce, Shand and Co. was shewn to his clerk, Mr. Grant, with a view to correction, and that the object of the letter was to obtain relief or redress from Bruce, Shand and Co., then such shewing could not be taken as a publication of a libel to injure the character of the prosecutors, and positively negatived all malice, one of the principal ingredients of the offence charged. The questions were taken a note of by the Judge and Mr. Clark having objected, this line of examination was held by the Judge irregular and abandoned by Mr. Leith.

Witness then stated. We frequently made erasures in letters of Mr. Fergusson on matters of business, without reading them. He does not think the letter of the 30th March was given to him to read, but for the purpose of making a very trifling alteration, after which Mr. Fergusson took it from him. He would not swear that he read it.

Re-examined by Mr. Clark.—I don't think I read the letter. The letter with the erasure was directed by the native.

Mr. Soppings, examined by Mr. Grant.—Knows Mr. Fergusson. (Letter of the 28th January shewn him, also the letter of the 30th, also that of March 30th). To the best of my belief I never saw those letters before except when on the Grand Jury. Mr. Fergusson shewed me a letter of a very violent nature, written to Bruce, Shand and Co., something of the nature and bearing of those now shewn me. After I was on the Grand Jury I talked to Mr. Fergusson on the subject of the letters—I had seen on the Grand Jury. Mr. Fergusson I think shewed me a letter on note paper before I was on the Grand Jury.

Cross-examined by the Advocate-General.—Mr. Fergusson told me that he thought he had been very ill used by Bruce and Shand. Mr. Shand never told me that Bruce and Cragg had behaved ill to Fergusson. Really I can't speak as to the particulars of their conduct towards him, but I know there were disputes.

William Cobb Hurry, examined by Mr. Clark.—Knows the defendant and the prosecutors. (Is shewn the three letters, the alleged libel.) I have seen some of them before, but I can't be certain which. (Shewn E. The signature is Mr. Fergusson's.) I am not certain that I ever saw E. I saw one letter in Bruce and Shand's office, but never saw it on any other occasion. I have had some conversation with defendant, about one of the three letters. Mr. Cragg requested me to see the defendant on the subject, and requested him to withdraw it. It was shewn to me at the time the request was made. I told that to Mr. Fergusson, but he refused to withdraw it. It must have been before March that I saw Mr. Fergusson on the subject of the letter, but I am not certain if the arbitration was closed at that time or not.

Cross-examined by Mr. Pearson. Has a general knowledge of the transactions between Bruce, Shand and Mr. Fergusson.

Mr. Pearson.—Ah! well, I am not at liberty to ask you what you think of them (a laugh).

Mr. Clark. I wish you were.

The Advocate-General.—Why did you stop us then when we were about it?

Mr. Clark.—That is my case, upon the letters being read.

Mr. Justice Malkin.—Well, it seems to me there is no evidence of publication.

Mr. Advocate-General, then submitted there was no evidence to go to the jury, no evidence of publication. I admit that if the indictment was drawn that the letters were written with a view to provoke a breach of the peace, then the sending the letters to the party himself would be a publication.

Mr. Justice Malkin. I am rather disposed, Mr. Advocate, to call on Mr. Clark to shew that there is any evidence of publication.

Mr. Clark then addressed the Court on this point.

Mr. Justice Malkin, before he heard Mr. Clarke at any length, observed that upon consideration, he thought there was evidence of publication to Bruce, Shand and Co., but not to Mr. Grant, defendant's clerk, or to the native who wrote the address to the letter, but that the case, would, if it went to the Jury, of course, go there with the learned Judge's opinion on the point of law.

Mr. Advocate-General.—The publication to Bruce and Shand is no publication at all, as the indictment is now drawn. Throughout the whole of the indictment the injury is alleged to the firm, and an injury to their general reputation.

Mr. Justice Malkin.—It is of no consequence, Mr. Advocate, whether the indictment charge a general injury to the firm, or to them individually, because the publication to themselves could never injure their character.

Mr. Clark, then contended, that there was evidence of publication, and that Mr. Fergusson had caused a libel to be written down, and had then affixed his signature to it, and that is a publication to Mr. Grant. Now in one of the letters, the body is written by Grant, and signed by Fergusson. I admit that he cannot say whether he wrote it from dictation, or from a copy given him. If a man dictate a letter to his servant and sign it, that is a libel. The learned counsel contended at some length on these and other grounds, that there was a proof of publication, and cited several cases. Production of a libel and proof that it is in the hand writing of defendant, is strong presumption of a publication by him, was the amount of one case cited. The learned counsel cited a variety of other cases to shew that in the present case, sufficient proof of publication had been adduced. If a man writes a libel for his own amusement without intending to publish, and it accidentally get abroad, he must take the consequences.

Mr. Advocate-General.—That has never been law, except in Algernon Sydney's case.

Mr. Clark continued.—A libel may be published either by speaking or singing, &c.

On Mr. Advocate-General rising, Mr. Justice Malkin observed, that upon the first six counts, there is no evidence of publication; but on the last six counts, there may be evidence of intention to injure the characters of the prosecutors (as we understood the learned judge,) and that there is no evidence of publication upon those debars inference to be derived from the fact of the sending the letters to their destination and that upon such counts of the indictment as may be sustained, the only question is whether the jury are satisfied that those letters were sent with a view, as charged in the indictment, to injure the general characters of the prosecutors.

The Advocate-General then commenced his address to the jury. After asking them if they wanted to hear, and receiving the consent of silence from the jury, the learned Counsel stated he should not follow Mr. Clarke, through his dissertation on constitutional law, and the liberty of the press. He understood better what his friend was at, when he anticipated the objection to the form in which the proceedings had been brought. Mr. Clarke talked of the expence, and the difficulty of proving a justification, and that that was a reason for not bringing an action, but for prosecuting an indictment. Now what have the length of the proceedings and the expences of a justification to do with the prosecutors in this case. The injury and expence and inconvenience is ours; we should have all the expence, and inconvenience, and not Messrs Bruce and Shand, and I only wish they had brought an action: we would have put upon a record a justification and we would have proved it. Then again the expence is another excuse urged by my friend for the form of the present proceedings: their character and fame is dear to them, but they will not run the risk like Doctor Bryce, of triumphing at an expence of 6,000 rupees. I mean nothing of the character of the prosecutors, but it is quite clear they don't think it worth 6,000 rupees. A pretty character must it be truly. It was also stated by my friend that he should shut out no evidence. What is his conduct when we came to examine into the circumstances and transactions between the parties? why he objects. We wanted to go into a justification of these letters as far as it is by law permitted us; but no, the prosecutors will not permit it, they instruct their counsel to object, the proceedings will not bear disclosing. But when was it that the unfortunate may not complain? Here is the defendant who has been a proprietor of many ships; he had received injury at the hands of Bruce and Co., he wrote letters, and has obtained redress.

Mr. Clark.—No, that was one of the questions to Mr. Seppings objected to: if it had been put, I should certainly have called witnesses to contradict such evidence.

The Advocate-General—Then why did my friend preclude himself by his own act from calling witnesses who could speak well of his clients. The learned counsel then came to the letter of the 18th March sent by the prosecutors to defendant, enclosing the account about the Robarts, containing a demand upon Ferguson which was fraudulent, because Cragg, by whose sanction it was sent, knew very well that this very claim was before the arbitrator, and yet Mr. Cragg, on the very day the award was signed, made the very demand which was already before the arbitrator; and can you, gentlemen, be astonished that after this Mr. Ferguson writes such letters as those complained of? I say, therefore, these are not libels; these are letters written under circumstances of provocation, that will never be held by any man to be libels. I repeat had they brought an action I would on the very cross examination of the witnesses produced, have justified the whole of the letters, and if they had dared to bring an action, no jury under the circumstance would have given them six-pence of damages. I say, therefore, these letters are justifiable and are not libels. Why, the subject of the demand of the 18th made by Bruce, Shand and Co. on Ferguson was ordered to be paid by the arbitrator to Ferguson himself! was not this demand a fraud? The learned counsel then went on to the subject of publication, and confessed he could not understand how upon an indictment for injuries on an individual or individuals in the public view, the sending a letter to the individuals themselves can be called a publication likely to injure their character with the public. Why, they might have kept the letters as secret as the grave—no one but themselves need have known any thing of the matter. I don't mean to say that an indictment for sending a letter tending to provoke a breach of the peace, might not have been sustained; but that is not the course they have adopted. The learned counsel continued at some length upon this point of publication. I think I have said enough, that there is no intention to injure the prosecutors, for if the fact itself of the sending the letters to the parties themselves, could not injure them, you are too sagacious not to see that as the overtact does not and cannot wash away an injury, it is difficult to conceive that that intention in which the act itself originated was injurious.

Mr. Justice Malkin, addressed the Jury on the point of publication. The learned Judge, as we understood him, stated there was evidence on some of the counts (we did not catch which) of a publication of the letters to the parties themselves; but it was for the Jury to say whether this publication to themselves was indicative of an intention to injure the general character of the prosecutors. There is no evidence of publication upon the other counts, although the attempt was made on the part of the prosecution to prove an absolute publication to other parties than the prosecutors of the contents of the letters. In point of law there is no proof of this sort of publication.

The Jury then retired taking with them the indictment, Verdict.—We find the defendant guilty of writing and publishing the letter of the 30th January and 20th March, and not of the 18th January. On the publication to the clerks, verdict given of guilty on the 7th, 8th, 11th and 12th counts.

Mr. Justice Malkin—I will not pass sentence now, but allow the defendant to be at large on his own recognizances, merely until the first day of next term.—Hurkaru, August 12.

Clermont versus Goodshall and O'Brien.

This case for assault and false imprisonment, which was slightly adverted to in yesterday's paper, had been called on the day before; upon which Mr. Leith, the Counsel for the Prosecutors, Mr. J. R. Clermont, of the Calcutta High School, and his brothers, applied to the Court for leave that the parties might "speak together," i. e. that the Prosecutors might not proceed with the Prosecution, owing to the Defendants—two of the Police Officers, named Goodshall and O'Brien—having reconciled themselves to the Prosecutors. The Judge thought it, at first, unusual to grant the application; but Mr. Leith added, that in this case the Defendants had acted as agents and servants of a person in authority, and under such circumstances he, the Counsel, entreated the matter might be permitted to be hushed up. The application was then granted. It is said by the Prosecutors themselves, that they have thus dropt the affair from a generous feeling towards the Defendants, who have families, and that two letters (which the Prosecutors are willing to publish if necessary) have been addressed to them—one by the Defendants themselves, expressive of deep regret at their past, and a promise of circumspection in their future conduct—another by Mr. McCann, their superior Officer, through whom they in like manner express their compunction, and make a promise to pay all the costs which the Prosecutors may have been put to in getting up this prosecution.—Calcutta Courier, August 12,

August 10, 1837.

Before Sir B. Malkin, Knt.

J. L. Miller, was tried for a forgery; but the evidence of Mr. J. Bell, of the custom house, in which he stated the manner in which the bills were passed and paid, not having, in the Judge's opinion, established the crime laid to the prisoner's charge, the Judge stopped the proceedings and directed a verdict of acquittal, and the verdict of not guilty was given accordingly. This prisoner was then tried on the charge of fraud, in cheating P. Russell of a sum of money, by passing on him certain papers falsely stated to be orders for his pay as a custom house officer, and said to bear the signature of J. Bell, Esq., of the custom house, which was not the case.

Prisoner pleaded not guilty.

P. Russell, deposed.—That he is a hotel keeper and knows the prisoner. On the 19th of last month prisoner became a lodger of the prosecutor's. On that day the prisoner borrowed at different times from the prosecutor 115 rupees on some bills, for which he said he had to receive money within 2 days; besides this the prisoner brought some furniture and a buggy into the prosecutor's house, but the 115 rupees were lent on the guarantee of the bills. The prosecutor looks at the bills and identifies them. Prisoner said nothing regarding the signature. At 8 o'clock on the morning of the 23d, prosecutors received a note from the prisoner, stating, that if he did not call on him at 11 o'clock, to go to the custom house and present the bills and that they would be paid. Prosecutor went to the custom house at half past 10 o'clock, but he did not see prisoner. On his return, prosecutor met the prisoner who accompanied the prosecutor to the custom house, and there he desired prosecutor to wait whilst he went and spoke to Mr. Bell. He, after a short conversation with Mr. Bell, came back and said that Mr. Bell had desired him to call at half past 4 o'clock. The prisoner came to the prosecutor's and expressed willingness to accompany him again to the custom house. When they arrived near the Police office, the prisoner proposed to the prosecutor to go to a liquor shop and drink. The prosecutor declined the offer, and the prisoner then desired him to go on a head and he would follow: the prisoner then left the prosecutor and absconded. Prosecutor did not see him again till he saw him in custody at the Police office.

J. Bell deposed.—That he is Superintendent of the preventive service and passes the bills of that department. The bills in question were presented to him for payment by the prosecutor about the hour of 2 or 3 o'clock p. m. on the 22d July; he was accompanied by a black servant. Deponent knows the prisoner; he holds no employ in the custom house. Nothing regarding these bills ever passed between this deponent and the prisoner, who was only employed for one day at the custom house, and had no claims for money on the custom house. The name J. Bell in these bills is not the signature of this deponent, nor is the name W. Counsell the signature of Mr. W. Counsell, of the Custom House. Prisoner was strongly recommended to deponent by the Governor of Serampore. Prisoner is a Danish subject. Deponent believes the endorsements in these bills to be the prisoner's signature, but the body of the writing appears to be that of another person.

Deponent said that he was intoxicated when he committed the act; he had no witnesses.

The Judge briefly charged the jury, stating it was difficult to suppose that a man could be drunk while obtaining money systematically, nor is drunkenness any excuse for crime. He, after this, commented on the indictment, and the evidence given in the case and the bearing of the law on them, and left the case in the hands of the Jury.

The Jury, after a retirement of about one hour, returned a verdict of not guilty, on the ground that though they were satisfied that the money if paid, was paid on a false document; but as they did not think the evidence of the money being actually paid to the prisoner satisfactory, they returned a verdict of not guilty.

The Judge, after remarking to the prisoner that the transaction, putting the best construction he could on it, was one of extreme roguery, told him that he was discharged; but that he had better take care how he appeared before the bench in that box again, for he might not get off another time so easily. The prisoner bowed and left the Court.

Isserchunder Doss and Moodoosoodun Gangoly, were tried for a burglary, in entering the house of Moheschunder Dutt, on the 2nd day of August, 1837, and stealing therefrom several articles of value.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Moheschunder Dutt deposed, that he is a money changer and lives at Hautkhola: on the 20th Shrabun, deponent's house was entered at night and robbed. Deponent on that date retired at midnight to sleep and got up after sunrise and found the cords with which his doors were fastened, cut and the doors removed, and on examining his trunks, he found them broken and empty; a hole had likewise been cut in the floor of his house. Here deponent enumerates the articles stolen. The next day prosecutor got intelligence from Isser that the thieves were apprehended at the thana. Part of his goods was brought to him, to his house, by the naib of Komartolla thana.

Nazeer Mahomed deposed, that he is a peon of Komartolly thana. Deponent knows the prosecutor in this case. Deponent in his rounds near the prosecutor's house, saw 3 men pass by, and one of them had a bundle projecting from under his arms: it was then about $\frac{1}{2}$ past 4 o'clock a. m. Deponent challenged them, but they returned no reply, and began to run. Deponent pursued and they ran into Soobah Bazar lane. Deponent left the rest and pursued the man who had the bundle under his arm, and captured him near Sham Bazar thana, strand. The man struggled, and deponent cried out "thief, thief" and Jomal, peon of Sham Bazar, came to deponent's assistance and took the man into custody, and the prisoner dropped the bundle when he was arrested. Deponent then took the bundle and the prisoner to the thana, from thence they were taken to the Tultola thana, and thence to the Police office. Moodoosoodun Gangoly was the person whom deponent captured with the clothes, and Koomulchowkeedar seized and captured Isserchunder Doss. Shortly after the capture of the 2nd prisoner the prosecutor came to the thana.

Jamal, peon, in his deposition, corroborated the evidence of the last witness. Another witness was examined in corroboration of the evidence.

Nasser Mahomed Loushy Pauree, naib thanadar of Hautkhola thana, deposed, that he took the prisoner and the goods from Komartolly thana and brought them to the prosecutor's house, who claimed the goods and became prosecutor; from thence he took the prisoner and the goods to the thana.

Ameer, peon of Hautkhola thana, corroborated the evidence of the last witness.

Komal, poen, proved that he captured Isserchunder Doss because he ran away when challenged. Deponent had at the time he was challenged, 2 bell metal glasses and a kerchief which he dropped in the chase. Deponent picked them up and immediately continued the pursuit. Deponent never lost sight of him till he captured him and made him over to Nazeer Mahomed, the poen, and delivered the glasses and kerchiefs to the thanadar of Hauthkhol.

Khyroo, naib of Sham Bazar, corroborated the testimony of the last witness, and so did Jeetun, naib of Kmartolee thana.

Kurrembux, thanadar of Hauthkhol, deposed, that he went to the house of the prosecutor and received a bundle of clothes and 2 prisoners there from Loochy Pauree, the naib of his thana, and from Komul poen 2 bell metal glasses and one kerchief. Deponent took them to the Police office, when they were consigned to custody, and they have ever since remained in his possession. Deponent examined the prosecutor's premises, and found a broken box near them, and a hole in the floor of his house, and the ropes of his door cut. Deponent produced the goods stolen, and the prosecutor recognized them to be his property.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner Moodosoodun said, that he knew nothing of this theft. He had come to the Shrad of Roopal Mullick, in the night, he slept at Gangoly's house: deponent early next morning woke Gangoly and said that he was going to Barrackpoor, when he was pointed out by Issur Doss as the person who had stolen some clothes which prisoner then observed lying by him, and the poen took deponent to custody. Issur Doss was a neighbour of his and lived a disorderly life: prisoner had counselled him against it, and had him discarded from the village, therefore Issur swore to be revenged, and has therefore trumped up this charge against him. He called witnesses to prove an alibi.

Issur Doss said, that on the morning in which this theft was stated to be committed, he saw 2 persons carrying bundles under their arms under suspicious circumstances: prisoner remarked this to the poen, who arrested them, and he shortly after came to this prisoner's house and said to him the thanadar wanted him. When prisoner went to the thana, the thanadar taxed him with this robbery, and arrested him. He called witnesses to prove that he was taken from his house and arrested.

Gunga Roy, said, that the 2nd prisoner slept on a Wednesday night at deponent's house, and he was arrested on the Thursday morning; but report stated that he had slept there Thursday night and was arrested on the Friday morning. It was a week since this occurred.

Another Brahmin deposed to the same effect as the last witness; but he was incorrect in this evidence, in stating that Wednesday was the 1st of August. He added that he is a good Brahmin; he has read no books of his religion but a little English and Bengally. It is meritorious by his religion to save a man from harm even at the expence of a false oath; but deponent having read English knows better. Two other witnesses were called. The first prisoner, witness Sreenauth Rar, knew nothing. Kistomony, said that the 1st prisoner past the last Wednesday night at her house and left it early in the morning of last Thursday, when Nazeer Mahomed came and called him away from the road and took him to the thana and arrested him at midday. Fukeerchund, another witness, was called, but could prove nothing. Nazeer Mahomed recalled, said that he never saw Kistomony, we saw her this day in Court: neither Sudder Addee nor Jeybun, the poen, nor the Naib of the Kmartoly division knew her, although she said she resided in the division of that thana.

This closed the case for the defence.

The Judge briefly charged the jury, detailing the evidence in the case and commenting on it, and then left the case to their decision.

The Jury without retiring found the prisoners guilty of burglary.

The prisoners were consequently, sentenced to 7 years' transportation to the S. E. Coast of Martaban.

AUGUST 12, 1837.

Before Sir B. Malkin, Kt.

L. F. Bourkey, brought an action for an assault against J. A. Guest, J. W. Peterson, B. Fure, F. H. Peterson and J. J. Munsaw.

Counsels for the prosecution, Messrs. L. Clarke and J. Cochrane. Counsels for the defence.—Messrs. C. R. Prinsep and J. F. Leith. Defendants pleaded not guilty.

On the names of the Jurymen being called, the Counsel for the defence challenged E. Johnston and J. Monteith. The Counsel for the prosecution objected to these challenges, stating, that the defendants had not the right to challenge without assigning the cause for their challenge, and that the cause must likewise be tried, and proved before the objection can be taken as valid.

The Judge coincided with the Counsel for the prosecution regarding the objection stated by the prosecutor's Counsel to these challenges.

Mr. Prinsep for the defence, said, that John Monteith was a personal friend of the prosecutor, and wished to question him on that point; but the Counsel for the prosecution, said that the method adopted by the defendant's Counsel was irregular, and Mr. Monteith was not bound to answer the questions put to him.

At this stage of the proceedings, the challenges were withdrawn.

Mr. Cochrane.—The prosecutor states, that the defendants on the 19th April, 1837, with whips and sticks, assaulted the deponent.

Mr. Clark, said to the jury, that they have heard the nature of the offence, which they are to try: he then stated the relationship of these defendants and their employment. Guest sent for Bourkey from England, and paid his passage, and on Bourkey's arrival an agreement was entered into, that Bourkey was to be admitted 1/4 share partner in Guest's business on the commencement of 1837: Afterwards a verbal agreement was made, that Bourkey was to be admitted in November 1836; but they quarrelled in October 1836. Bourkey quitted Guest, and set up in business for himself, and Guest subsequently offered for 70,000 or 80,000 rupees, to sell his business to Bourkey; failing in this he quarrelled and swore the peace against him, and then in April 1837 Guest went to Bourkey's house and called on him to fight. Bourkey, thinking the April sun might make Guest warmer than he was, and make him crusty, said coolly, Joe, go home, and Joe was disappointed that Bourkey did not come out, for he intended to give him a warm reception in a warm day. After this Peterson and Furie called on Bourkey, and sent up to him to say that they wanted to see him. When he came down, Peterson demanded satisfaction, and Bourkey, not thinking himself bound to give satisfaction to a person in his own house, refused it to them. Peterson struck him, Furie held him, and all the others, being 7 in the gang, two of whom have not been arrested, rushed in, and commenced a violent assault on Bourkey. Bourkey thinking, that although he was bound not to assault Guest, yet he was not prevented from resisting their assaulting him, and he no sooner did so, than this band of 7 vallicent heroes ran away from one man. In conclusion, Mr. Clarke said, that he could prove that Guest said, that he would not mind paying 2,000 or 3,000 rupees, to be able to give a beating to Bourkey, so as to lay him up for 2 or 3 months, and could prove that whips were purchased purposely for this assault, which was a planned and deliberate one.

D. McFarlan, proved the reconnoissance in which he had bound the prosecutor to keep the peace towards J. A. Guest, for one year, and gave B. Furie and J. Peterson, very good characters, as far as they officially come under his observation.

L. F. Bourkey, the prosecutor, deposed, that he resides in Cossittollah, and carries on the business of a tailor. J. W. Peterson and F. H. Peterson are Guest's brothers-in-law, Mr. Munaw is a writer of Guest's, and B. Furie is a Police assistant. Guest sent for a person from England who refused to come, and then the person who was empowered to send out a person, engaged Bourkey for Guest, provided that Bourkey did not like this country he was at liberty to return to England. On Bourkey's arrival in Calcutta, deponent gave him a written agreement: deponent was by this agreement to go to Meerut and replace Gilbert, the partner at Meerut as a 1/4 share partner. Mr. Bourkey objected. Guest then offered to take him as a partner into the Meerut business, when the business should amount to 4,000 rupees per month. Deponent objected and Bourkey left him. Deponent then proved the agreement he had entered into with Guest on his arrival in Calcutta. After deponent left Guest and set up for himself, Kemp, an attorney of the Supreme Court, wrote some letters enclosing some propositions for Bourkey to purchase Guest's business for 70,000 rupees. Here the letters were put in and proved. Subsequently Bourkey employed Mr. Collier in this business. On the 19th of April, about 1 o'clock, Guest went to Bourkey's shop with a whip in his hands and called out to deponent, "come out you coward and I will thrash you." Deponent said, "go home, Joe, from this hot sun," and Guest went home. After this John Peterson and B. Furie called at the deponent's shop and sent for him, and asked for an explanation. Deponent said, "if you will ask it in a proper manner I will give it." J. Peterson then, with a whip which he held in his hands, struck deponent on the head, and deponent retaliated. B. Furie then seized deponent's hands and then F. Peterson, Munaw and Guest rushed in and Guest said, hold the rascal till I can get at him. They then commenced a general assault on this deponent. Deponent then got free from them and got a stick from his shop and came out to the assailants, and when they saw this stick they ran away, and Guest in his hurry left his hat behind. After this deponent went to the Police, taking Mr. Frederick, who he met in the way, with him. On the road, deponent saw Guest and his gang, and Guest called out to this deponent and threatened him with a whip. When deponent saw this, he showed them the stick which he held in his hand, and Mr. Frederick went and spoke to Guest and his party and they desisted from all hostile demonstrations; and deponent continued his route to the Police Office and lodged his complaint before Mr. McFarlan.

Cross-examined.—Deponent was born in London, but reared in Dublin. If a person born in England is an Irishman, deponent is not otherwise. Deponent was to receive 100 rupees a month from Guest up to a certain period, and his board and lodgings were to be found him. Deponent was always well treated till October 1836 by Guest, and he voluntarily raised deponent's salary to 150 rupees per month. Deponent, when he arrived in the river, had a higher offer from another house. Deponent was voluntarily received as an inmate of Guest's house, and he always behaved well in both his professional and private connection with Guest. Mrs. Guest behaved faithfully and friendly to deponent. Deponent was near a meat safe and Mrs. Guest was near deponent. Guest came in and said that deponent wished to kiss Mrs. Guest, and wanted to stab Mrs. Guest with a knife, and desired deponent to leave his house. Deponent desired Guest not to injure his wife, and said when he was cool he would give him any explanation he required. Deponent never offered to kiss Mrs. Guest, and he never begged Mrs. Guest's pardon, and he had never acknowledged doing this to Mr. Kemp. Guest said, that if deponent would marry Miss Peterson, Guest would forget all and still take him as a partner in his business. Deponent said to Mr. Kemp, that Guest had charged him with attempting to kiss his wife. When Guest made this proposal about Miss Peterson, deponent said, that if Guest would let him have his way he would in 4 or 5 days see Miss Peterson and propose to her; but Guest wished him to see Miss Peterson and propose immediately. If Guest had let matters alone, he might have got married to her by this time; but Guest spoiled it all. Miss Peterson never refused deponent, and he thinks that she would not refuse him now. Deponent had some intention of marrying Miss Peterson, but he was refused by Miss Peterson's family. After the quarrel of 10th October, 1836, Guest provided deponent with other lodgings till this affair was hushed up. If deponent promised now to marry Miss Peterson, Guest would receive him back again. The reason why Guest swore the peace against this deponent is this. After deponent set up for himself he sent for some clothes which belonged to another person who was going to sea. Deponent sent his bearer to Guest for these clothes, and Guest beat his bearer, and deponent went to Guest's shop to ask for these clothes, and also to know why he beat his bearer. Guest abused him and ran with a sword at him. Deponent put aside the sword and went out of the shop and said, "Guest, you are only making a fool of yourself." Guest, thinking Bourkey might swear the peace against him, went out to the police and got the start of him, and swore the peace against deponent. The jury can best say whether they are to believe him or not. Deponent is a man not given to drink; he is as sober a man as any in Court—as sober as Mr. Prinsep. Mr. Prinsep said, that he did not wish for his character from deponent, and deponent replied he did not wish for his either, from Mr. Prinsep. Deponent never went to Guest's shop while drunk, and offer to apologize to Mrs. Guest. Mr. Lawrie wished deponent to apologize to Mrs. Guest, but as he had never offended her he declined to do so. He was once met by Mr. Collier, a little elated; some of his friends had put a trick on him, and had given him in some brandy, gin instead of water. Mrs. Guest, deponent understands, has gone to Germany. Deponent, owing to sickness, was here accommodated with a chair. Deponent did meet Mr. Passas at a party, and he might have mentioned Mrs. Guest's name. Deponent believes it was before Mrs. Guest's departure. Deponent never said anything disrespectful of Mrs. Guest. Deponent never before Mr. Passas boasted of any correspondence with Mrs. Guest. Deponent first said that he had never had any correspondence with Mrs. Guest after his departure from Guest's house; afterwards he said he never had any correspondence with Mrs. Guest after her departure for Europe. Deponent had addressed letters to Miss Peterson, without the knowledge of either Guest or the Petersons; he did not care a fig for their knowledge. So long as Miss Peterson wrote to him he sent her replies. Deponent cannot answer every questions four times. Deponent did not apologize to Peterson, nor would to any person in a threatening attitude. Neither Peterson nor Mr. Prinsep is able, singly, to beat deponent. Furie interfered to prevent deponent from defending himself from Peterson. Furie said before the Chief magistrate, that he went to see Peterson spit in deponent's face and prevent deponent from defending himself. Deponent believed that he would grapple the throat of any person who would assault deponent. Deponent complained against the conduct of seven persons assaulting one person, and so deponent believes Mr. Prinsep would do, if he were assaulted by seven persons.

Mr. Prinsep wished to examine this deponent on his religious belief as to a God and a future state.

Mr. Clark objected to these questions being put to the deponent. He said that if the counsel for the defence believed the prosecutor was an atheist, they ought to have objected to the deponent's evidence before he was sworn; they had no right to examine him on that point now. It was a matter of interest, he might make objection, but not on a matter of belief.

The Judge said, that a counsel may make objections at any period of the proceedings that he thought fit.

Deponent here offered to reply to any questions Mr. Prinsep might think proper to put to him respecting his faith; and a few questions were put and answered.

Guest never offered 10,000 rupees to the deponent if he would go to England; if he had done so, deponent would have very willingly accepted the amount. Guest wished to take this deponent in, by sending him an agreement which Mr. Collier declared not to be worth a cowrie. Deponent here taxed the counsel for the prosecution with endeavouring to exhaust his breath by questioning him so long, as deponent has just recovered from a complaint in his chest. Deponent's counsel scorned the imputation, and after asking him if Furie and he were ever on bad terms before, and getting an acknowledgement that they were not, he said to deponent that as he was sick he may go; adding, that he had exhausted himself by giving long, explanatory answers, where short denials were only required. Deponent said, that he admitted that he was desired by Mr. Kemp, neither to send messages nor to appear personally at Guest's, and he would not have done so, if Guest had given up the clothes of the man going to sea, which were in his house. He believes that Mr. Kemp, who had undertaken to bring about a reconciliation, unnecessarily kept the parties aloof.

J. B. Harman, deposed, that he is a partner in the firm of Watson and Co. and proved that he sent six whips on inspection for sale to Guest.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith.—Deponent has good whips for sale. [Here Mr. Clark remarked to Mr. Leith, "you had better try them." He replied "ye," and that Guest has a horse; the whips were horse-whips.] Deponent has dealt with Guest, but never saw him on horse-back.

Bhoolanath, deposed, that one day J. Peterson and B. Furie went to the shop of Bourkey, his master, and sent word to see him. When Bourkey came down, Peterson and he conversed, and J. Peterson struck Bourkey, and B. Furie held Bourkey's hands, and Guest, F. Peterson and Munsaw, who has but one eye, and two other individuals, rushed into the house and commenced a simultaneous attack on deponent's master. Deponent when he saw this, became alarmed and ran away. Deponent identifies all the defendants but F. Peterson,

Cross-examined by Mr. Prinsep.—Deponent does not carry letters for Bourkey; he has a writer, and three peons are employed to take the letters. Deponent did not see Bourkey strike Peterson. Deponent saw Furie hold Peterson. Deponent only saw the blows his master received and not those which he gave.

Choitun Doss deposed.—Deponent was in April prosecutor's sirdar bearer. Deponent was washing his plates after his meals, and saw Guest, Peterson, Furie, Munsaw, and others enter Bourkey's shop. Four of these persons had whips in their hands, and they began to beat Bourkey with the whips. Deponent then identified Guest, J. Peterson, Furie and Munsaw. After Guest had left the shop, he shook his whip at Bourkey and threatened to beat him again.

J. A. Augier deposed, that his house is opposite Bourkey's shop. On the 19th April, 1837, Guest came to deponent's shop at half past 2 o'clock p. m., and said that he had some thing to say to Bourkey. Shortly after this Munsaw came and spoke to Guest, and Guest rushed into Bourkey's shop. Deponent cannot say whether Munsaw went into the shop or not. Deponent did not spy to see what was going on. When deponent went near Bourkey's shop door, he saw Furie in the shop, and the two Petersons rushed out of Weston's Lane, and into Bourkey's shop. Deponent then heard the noise of whips being exercised, and saw all these defendants come out, and Guest shook his whip at Bourkey and then went away. Here deponent identified the defendants in the Court.

After this the recognizance of the prosecutor to keep the peace for one year towards Guest, the agreement sworn to by Bourkey, and the letter which he had sworn to have received from Mr. Kemp, were put in and read.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Prinsep.—There is no class of crime which varies more in its nature, than that of an assault: it varies from a violent and brutal assault to holding one's fist to a person's face. The present case is, that L. F. Bourkey has had a horse whipping, and it is for you to judge whether he has brought it upon himself, and whether he has or has not deserved it. When he said that Bourkey was an Irishman, a country famed for courage,—and Bourkey of course, he supposed, was not an exception to the general rule, for he, it seems, drove away a whole hut with a tailor's yard; and he must have some very strong grounds for not resorting to the usual mode his countrymen resort to, but another mode which, although it is a perfect, just and legal mode, is not very often resorted to by his countrymen. Defendant's counsel added that Guest brought Bourkey from London to Calcutta, but it was he (the counsel) that took him back to Dublin, and proved his Irish blood and Irish noodle. Here the counsel detailed the evidence of the kind manner in which Bourkey was received by Guest, and the return made by him for such treatment in his conduct to Mrs. Guest. He next wished to shew that Bourkey, when he was brought out from England, was in embarrassed circumstances, and that he never seriously intended to marry Miss Peterson, and remarked, that Bourkey had sworn that Guest had hurried him in the business, and this had prevented and broken off the marriage. Marriages are not so hurried in this country, that Guest would not allow him even 5 days to settle his business. In fact Bourkey's conduct had driven Mrs. Guest from her husband and house to another country. Can the jury believe Bourkey, who has positively sworn that he never corresponded with Mrs. Guest after he left Guest's house, and has again contradicted this statement? Can they believe him that he could be bound over to the peace towards Guest, who himself assaulted him? This is the first time he has ever heard of a person being bound to keep the peace because the person who swears it against him, had nearly run him through with a sword. Here the counsel quoted Romeo and Juliet, the passage where it is said that it is dangerous for persons to walk the streets, for there was then blood spilt. But here, added he, there has been no blood spilt; a good horse whipping given to Bourkey, when he with his fresh and vigorous Irish strength grappled with J. Peterson (who together with Furie are proved by Mr. McFarlan to be the two quietest persons in Calcutta), who went to ask satisfaction for his conduct towards his relatives. He is refused, and Peterson, in the heat of passion, gave him a slight blow on the head; and what did Furie do? he only attempted to keep off a breach of the peace by holding Bourkey who had nearly throttled J. W. Peterson, and then the others came and rescued him. Bourkey is even contradicted by his own bearer, who said that all the four persons were in the shop when Bourkey came down and not that only two of them were there when Bourkey came down and that the others came afterwards, as Bourkey has sworn: he left Bourkey to take his choice between him and his bearer. If Bourkey wished to clear up his misunderstanding with his employer, by whom he was well treated up to that period, he might have said to Guest, "there is some misunderstanding; give me your hand, Guest, and I will within one month give you a proof positive that all is right; for I intend to propose and marry your sister-in-law within one month." But, no; Bourkey's Irish blood thought that he could carry it all in five days. He then said, that Bourkey is a person who he (the Counsel) did not believe to keep the very best company or to be so very sober as he has stated himself to be. He did not visit very respectable places, Vandenburg lane, for instance, and that not in the best company. He had further affronted Mrs. Guest by having falsely boasted of having had correspondence with her after he had left Guest's house; and as to his boast of being accepted by Miss Peterson, how could the jury believe it when it is natural to suppose that his very conduct to Mrs. Guest, the sister of Miss Peterson, would have in itself been enough for any female, and almost certainly relatives, to reject his address at once with indignation. He concluded by remarking, that even if the Jury found the parties guilty of an assault, the ungrateful and prevaricating conduct of the prosecutor, would greatly palliate their offence.

A. D. Kemp, deposed, that he is the attorney of the defendants on this occasion, and he has heard Bourkey's evidence in this case. He had a conversation with Bourkey regarding his quarrel with Guest, and said to him that by his foolishly so doing he had ruined his prospects in life. Bourkey then admitted, that he had kissed Mrs. Guest, and said, he did it as he intended shortly to marry her sister. He regretted and offered to apologize for it; but defendant said it was then too late.

Cross-examined by the Jury.—Query.—Did Guest still wish to employ him? Deponent.—No, he wished in disgust to throw up his business, sell his shop and quit the country; and this is the amicable adjustment he alluded to in his letters to Bourkey.

Cross-examined by Mr. Clark.—Deponent was informed by his client, Guest, to inform Bourkey not to come to his house, nor send messages to him; and Bourkey said, on this deponent speaking to him on the subject, that he had kissed Mrs. Guest, and then deponent did not immediately but shortly after tell Guest of this confession. Defendant was not the first to inform Guest of Bourkey's having kissed Mrs. Guest, this he knew himself. Query by Mr. Clark.—Guest would have amicably settled this dispute about the kiss, if Bourkey would have given 70,000 or 80,000 rupees for the concern, and this would have raised his heart which had been depressed by his kiss? Deponent.—80,000 rupees would raise any man's heart. Deponent advised Bourkey to get another attorney; for by acting for both parties, he had found the dilemma attorneys are brought into by acting for both parties. There were many papers of various kinds drawn up at deponent's office in the day: he drew the articles of agreement for Guest and Bourkey, and some discrepancies might have crept into them. Mr. Clark remarked, that he believed there were; but no body cares if there were.

J. Passos, deposed, that he is a clerk to Guest. He knows Bourkey and he met him in Vandenburg's lane. He has heard Bourkey's evidence in Court this day. He has heard Bourkey's denial of the charge of his correspondence with Mrs. Guest in Court to-day; but the charge is true. On being asked, deponent said, that this acknowledgement by Bourkey of his having corresponded with Mrs. Guest up to that time, was about one month after Bourkey had left Guest's house. Mr. Monteith and others were then in the ball room when Bourkey said this to deponent; afterwards deponent added that Bourkey took deponent aside into a garden, directed all other persons to go away, and then confidently communicated this information to deponent, knowing deponent to be then in Guest's service. Deponent cannot say when Mrs. Guest went to Europe; but this communication was made before she went to Europe. The instance mentioned, was the only time Bourkey ever communicated a secret to this deponent, and he did it voluntarily and unasked for.

This closed the case for the defence.

Mr. Clark addressed the Jury and said, that Mr. Prinsep had asked them whether they believed Bourkey; he asked them now whether they believed this deponent: who, though he cannot say the date on which his Master's wife left this country, can say the particulars of a conversation so far back?—and whether they can believe that Bourkey could come up to a low menial and take him on from a ball room to a garden, and voluntarily make a confession to him. Prosecutor had given his Counsel particular instructions to keep Mrs. Guest's name out of the case; but he it said to Guest's shame, that he was the first person to bring her name forward with a slur on it in this case. Can the jury believe the witness when he speaks thus? and if they cannot, can they suppose that his simplicity could make out this story, or whether it is more probable that his Master has scorned him?—and if they came to the latter conclusion, how can they believe the rest of the defence? A slur had been unwarrantably thrown on the prosecutor's character, with the exception, as he has admitted, that he was once tipsy by having a very common trick played on him, that of mixing gin with the brandy. If Bourkey was a drunken, debauched character, and he had entered Guest's shop drunk, why was not evidence offered on that subject? He then said, what are the jury to say to a person who permits a man to kiss his wife, then offers to give him his sister with 10,000 rupees in marriage, and then offers to put up with every thing, and settle amicably, if Bourkey will give him 80,000 rupees and buy his business, and enable him to retire. And where has the offended dignity of the husband evaporated? Why, instead of seeking an apology he endeavours to soothe Bourkey's irritable feelings and coax him out of 80,000 rupees. If the letters were sent by Bourkey to Mrs. Guest after he left Guest's house, where are these letters? If they are with Guest, why are they not produced in Court? If they are in Mrs. Guest's possession and she has withheld them, then it shows that if she was not guilty in body she was guilty in mind. Again, if it be said, that there is no imputation cast by the husband on the wife; why, there is no evidence to show she ever complained or resented this kiss. Not content with this, the name of another lady is brought forward; and Guest, after having detected Bourkey in the attempt, by his own shewing, to seduce his wife, gives him a better opportunity to effect this, by wishing to hurry on this very seducer to marry the sister of his wife, and offers him 10,000 rupees if he will do it within five days. Here he concluded by saying, that he believed the defence to be a made up story, totally false and infamous; and reflections had been cast by it on the characters of two ladies, by the very persons whose duty it was to protect and defend them from such imputations. With regard to Mr. Prinsep's saying how far Bourkey's conduct provoked the horsewhipping, he remarked that nothing can justify a man taking the law into his own hands. As for Mr. Kemp's deposition, all that he can say about it is, that it is in direct contradiction of his own declaration, let him make the best he can of this declaration. He likewise remarked on the cruelty of endeavouring to blast a man's prospects in life, by endeavouring to injure him by throwing out imputations against him that he is an atheist and a drunkard, and not offering any evidence to support these allegations.

The Judge said, that the case had already occupied a great deal of their time, and the principal point is whether they can see any ground to discredit the account given by Bourkey of this assault. He has candidly admitted that as J. W. Peterson assaulting him he returned the blow in the first instance, till he was held by Furie. There are many imputations thrown out by Mr. Clark against Guest's and Mrs. Guest's character. By the showing of defendants in this case, it is not for me to say, how far Mr. Clarke is correct in so doing; but it does appear that there was some domestic quarrel which caused this breach of the peace. Notwithstanding the impeachment attempted to be thrown on Bourkey's statement, it does appear that there was a letter which provoked this breach of the peace. If the jury did not believe Bourkey, then they must find a verdict of an acquittal for the defendants; but if they believed his evidence, there can be no doubt that they must return a verdict of guilty against J. W. Peterson, who first struck the blow. Then it will be for the Jury to consider whether Furie's and the other defendants' (with the exception of Munsaw's) interference was called for, for there is no direct proof of Munsaw's interference. Nor is there any direct proof of J. W. Peterson being struck by Bourkey; but Guest's rushing into the house, shaking his whip, challenging Bourkey; they cannot, if they return a verdict of guilty, totally exclude him from being an assaulting party. If Bourkey had been the first aggressor, and Guest had gone to rescue his brother-in-law, it might amount to a justification; but in the present evidence they cannot but convict him also. Then they are to consider whether Furie laid hands to assault Bourkey, merely to save Peterson from the retaliation of Bourkey for the assault made on him. The Judge then concluded by observing, that nothing could justify an assault, be the provocation what it might be, as no person had a right to take the law into their hands. After this he left the case with the Jury.

The jury, after a retirement of above a quarter of an hour, returned a verdict of guilty against J. A. Guest, J. W. Peterson, B. Furie F. H. Peterson; but recommended Furie to mercy. T. J. Munsaw was pronounced not guilty. After this verdict was recorded, the prosecutor's counsel said, that the prosecutor had himself said that he did not blame B. Furie, and if he could get him out of the scrape he would.

The Judge said, that although there is no doubt that there was a very great provocation for it, and the assault itself was not of a very violent nature, yet nothing could justify the assault of 7 persons on one individual. Under all the circumstances of the case, he sentenced J. A. Guest and J. W. Peterson as principals, to pay a fine of 200 rupees, each; F. Peterson to pay a fine of 100 rupees; and B. Furie taking the recommendation of the Jury and the declaration of the prosecutor himself in his favor into consideration, to a fine of 50 rupees; and that they be imprisoned till these fines be paid.

MOTIONS IN TRAVERSE CASES.

In the case of a conspiracy against Janooke Doss and others, the defendant Janooke Doss appears to-day in Court to take his trial. On the rehearing of the case, the names of the prosecutors were called, but no body answered, nor did the witnesses appear in Court to give their evidence. The Counsel for the defence then moved the Court, that a verdict of not guilty be recorded and the defendant released from his recognizances. The Judge on this recommended the Jury to pronounce a verdict of acquittal, which they did. The case was then struck off from the traverse board, and the defendant released from his recognizances.

In the case for Perjury against Bykauntoo Doss, the Counsel for the prosecutor stated to the Court, that the prosecutor who was the chief and only witness was in Court, ready to prosecute on his recognizances; but that it legally required more evidence than the single testimony of the prosecutor himself to convict any person of the crime of perjury, therefore the case could not be tried. The Judge coincided in opinion with the Counsel and directed the Jury to return a verdict of not guilty. After this verdict was recorded, this case was likewise struck off from the traverse board and the defendant released from his recognizances.

In the case of a forcible entry and an assault, a motion was made by the prosecutor's Counsel, that the prosecutor, who was the principal evidence, had been attacked by a severe fever the day after the notice of the surrender, and the intention of the defendant's to take their trial during this Session, had been served by the defendant's attorney to the prosecutor's attorney. He offered to put in three affidavits, one of the prosecutor, one of the medical attendant of the prosecutor, and the last of the prosecutor's attorney, that the prosecutor was unable from indisposition to attend the Court, and requested the Judge to let the case stand over for trial during the next term. The Judge replied that provided the defendants would consent, he had no objections otherwise he could not compel them to either go to jail or have their recognizances extended for nearly 3 months more, which they must do if the case was postponed till the next Sessions. The Counsel for the defence replied, that he was willing to let the case stand over till the next Sessions and the recognizances be extended to that period, provided the prosecutor would pay the defendant's costs for the expenses they have incurred in bringing on this suit for trial during this Session, and this they were both legally and conscientiously bound to do. The prosecutor's Counsel consented to the arrangement, and the case was postponed to the next Sessions.

In conclusion the Judge told the Jury that he could not finally discharge them to-day, because there was yet another important case to be tried during this Session; but when the trial would come on, depended on circumstances that he could not foretell; but he advised some of them to be in Court on Monday next when he might be able to speak more deliberately on this subject to them.

The Court was then adjourned till 1 o'clock p. m. on Monday next (to-day).—Hurkaru, August 14.

AUGUST 14, 1837.

One of these proceedings which are of rare occurrence in this country, took place to-day in the Grand Jury room, namely a jury impaneled under a commission of Lunacy. The Commissioners were Mr. Theodore Dickens and Mr. Morris Fitzgerald Saules, and the following jury were sworn.

• GEORGE JOHN SIDDONS, Esq., Foreman.

Charles Dearie, Esq.	W. C. Hurry, Esq.
Baboo Aushootas Day.	Prosonacoomar Tagore.
J. W. Grant, Esq.	J. Fergusson, Esq.
R. Walker, Esq.	A. Gilmore, Esq.
S. R. Crawford, Esq.	W. Storm, Esq.
L. De Souza, Esq.	W. Prinsep, Esq.

Mr. Clark stated the case to the inquest.

This Commission had been sued out by his client, Mr. John Wallis Alexander, as Assignee, of the estate of the Seins, who had been large shroffs in the Burra Bazar. One of the members of the family, had become insane, about three years and a half ago, whose lunacy was brought on, it was supposed, by his losses in trade, and the premature death of his wife and only child. For the first two years the unhappy man had been so violent, that considerable restraint was necessary; but during the last eighteen months he was tranquil, yet he would not reply to any question, nor speak; he was unconscious of cleanliness and merely took his food when given to him. The family having become insolvent, the Assignee experienced difficulties in winding up the affairs, as Ramnarain was incapable of executing the necessary instruments. A Committee must therefore be appointed to do it for him, but this could not be done by the Court, until a jury had pronounced him insane. There were seven points on which the jury ought to return their verdict. Whether Ramnarain was a lunatic, whether he had lucid intervals, whether he was capable of managing his property, for how long he had been a lunatic, how he became insane, what real estate he was entitled to when he became insane, and whether he had alienated any of it since his insanity. Mr. Clarke said, that as the Assignee was satisfied on the question of property it in fact being joint, he should offer no evidence on the last two points.

Nubbokissore Sein, a cousin, Debnarain Sein, a brother, of the lunatic, Muddenmohun Sill a gomastash in the family, and Dr. Egerton were then called and examined.

Mr. Clark was proceeding to call other members of the family, when the Foreman, Mr. Siddons, intimated, that the jury were satisfied and the following verdict was returned. The jury find that Ramnarain Sein is a lunatic, and has no lucid intervals, that he is incapable of managing his affairs, and that he has been a lunatic for three years and a half, having become so through the visitation of God. The finding was then engrossed in duplicate, on parchment and paper, indented, signed and sealed by the two Commissioners, the Foreman and the twelve jurymen. The inquest was then dissolved, the proceeding having occupied about an hour and a half.—Hurkara, August 15,

ADMIRALTY COURT SESSIONS.

Before Sir B. Malkin, Knight.

NAMES OF THE SPECIAL GRAND JURYMEN.

Foreman—G. Vint, Esq.

W. Limond, Esq.,	F. Hampton, Esq.,
A. Wilson, Esq.,	H. M. Low, Esq.,

D. Hare, Esq.,	J. Beecher, Esq.,
P. H. Gardiner, Esq.,	J. Strainsforth, Esq.,
J. C. Erskine, Esq.,	R. Campbell, Esq.,
M. S. Owen Esq.,	W. Bracken Esq.,
D. McDonald, Esq.,	D. B. Syers, Esq.,
R. Piesgrave, Esq.,	Baboo Ram Hurry Dut,
H. T. Palmer, Esq.,	Baboo Doorgachurn Pal,
J. W. H. Campbell, Esq.,	Baboo Ramcomul Sen,

The Judge said to the grand jurymen, that he believed it would hardly be necessary to explain to them, the cause of their being called on a special jury, after the grand jury which had been summoned for this session had been discharged, for he believed it was generally well known to all of them, that the settlements on the Malay Coast did not receive a power to try Admiralty cases till the last Session of Parliament, and that Act had not yet arrived in India. This case could not be postponed, because the principal witnesses in it, who are in H. M. employ, are ordered to Europe by his Majesty; and therefore if, the case was put off till the arrival of the act, the evidence of these witnesses would be lost. If would, had the act reached the Coast settlements, or if the witnesses could have been detained, perhaps have been better to have had the case tried at that settlement, in which the crime was committed; but in this case, if the case was postponed the object of justice would be defeated. In this case his lordship said, he had but few remarks to make, because the depositions taken before the magistrates had in a great measure removed these difficulties. Perhaps the habits of the people who are to be tried, are better known in the Coast settlements, than here, still even his lordship believed, that their habits were perhaps sufficiently known here to some of the jurymen, to enable them to give the due and necessary consideration to the bill which will be brought before them, and to come to a finding of it, either for or against the prisoners. If they required any information from him on any subject, he would be most happy to give it to them as far as it was in his power to do so. The case, his lordship remarked, was not in itself a very intricate one, being one of those piratical cases which are very common, his lordship believed, on the Malay Coast. With these observations his lordship left the case in the hands of the jurymen.

After this the jurymen retired and the Lord Bishop of Cochin was sworn in to act as interpreter to them.

This jury was composed of only 21 jurymen and not 23,—the usual number required to form a grand jury,—in consequence of many of those who were summoned not having answered to their names. The Judge disapproved of the inattention of the jurymen, and said, he was sorry to observe, that if the jurymen did not attend to their summonses he must enforce the fine against them.—Hurkara, August 24.

• SUPREME COURT ADMIRALTY SESSIONS.—AUG. 24, 1837.

Before Sir B. Malkin, Knt.

Gunan, Layhee, Soobhoo, Saloo and Teebee, 5 Malays, the first of whom was of gigantic stature, were tried for having committed piracy on the high seas, within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court of Calcutta, by having, on the 14th of April 1837, off the Island of Tinghee, lying between Singapore and Anam, robbed and plundered a Cochin Chinese bark, the property of a person named Than, and killed 2 of the crew.

The prisoners pleaded not guilty.

J. Pearson, Esq., Advocate General, J. Cochrane, Esq., standing Counsel, and T. B. Swinhoe Esq., Company's Solicitor, conducted the case for the prosecution.

Mr. John Gray was sworn, as interpreter of the Malay language to the Court, and the prisoners in this case, they having declined to have another person sworn specially for them though offered the choice by the Court.

The Bishop of Cochinchina was, after much reluctance, sworn to interpret from that language to the Court. He declined at first on the plea that he had already been sworn as interpreter in this case yesterday, and he did not see the necessity of re-swearing him on the very occasion, to-day.

The Advocate-General, in opening the case for the prosecution, informed the Petit Jurymen, that they had already heard the indictment read to them, so there was no necessity for him to recapitulate the charges on which they are to try the 5 prisoners at the bar. Nor would he detain them long, suffice it to say, that the crime of Piracy with which these prisoners stand charged, is very common on the Malay Coast, from which these prisoners are brought here to be tried. The outlines of the case are simply these. Certain merchants of Cochinchina having a desire to establish a trade with the port of Singapore in the month of March last, loaded a boat belonging to a countryman of theirs with rice, silk, cinnamon and salt, and set sail for the Port of Singapore. On the 19th day after their departure, whilst they were lying becalmed at sea, near the island of Tinghee, near the Malay Coast, 7 piratical praws rushed on their vessel on the morning of the 14th April last. They attacked the trading vessel instantaneously, and killed two and wounded one of the crew. The crew of the trader finding the pirates too powerful for them to resist, surrendered, and whilst the pirates were the next day removing the cargo from their prize to their own prahu, the Diana, steamer hove in sight. Seeing her the pirates left their prize, boats and cargo, and fled into the jungles for seclusion; but their captives being thus unexpectedly relieved from captivity if not death, hoisted a piece of white cloth as a signal of distress to the steamer, and made towards it. By this vessel, the surviving crew were taken to Singapore, from whence one of them named John Nam, afterwards returned on board the Cruiser Wolf to the island of Tinghee, and came upon these freebooters by surprise. 14 of them were captured by the Steamer's crew, and on being brought to Singapore, where the other portion of the crew of the Cochinchinese bark was, they were identified by them, and the Police authorities at Singapore considered it advisable to commit 11 of them to take their trial at the Admiralty Sessions at Calcutta and shipped them on board the Wolf for that purpose. Six of these men have subsequently escaped by jumping into the sea; but the remaining 5 are the prisoners at the bar. The rest of the case, the Advocate said to the Jury, the witnesses would state to them, and though they are not all the witnesses he would have called if he conducted the case at Singapore, yet he hoped that they would suffice to meet the ends of justice.

John Nam deposed, that he is a native of Anam (i. e. Cochinchina) and professed the religion of the God of Nature, (i. e. a Roman Catholic.) Deponent recollects that he on the 20th day of the 2nd moon of the present Cochinchinese year, having, together with eight of his countrymen, hired a vessel from a person named Than, and having loaded it with 300 peculs of rice, 158 rupees' worth of salt, and 100 lbs. of cinnamon, they quitted their country on a trading voyage to Singapore. Nothing remarkable occurred during the first 18 days after they had embarked on this enterprise; but on the morning of the 19th day, whilst their vessel was lying becalmed off the Malay coasts, seven Malay praws, each manned by nine or ten men armed with muskets and spears, came suddenly upon them from the main land and attacked their boats. After they had killed two of their crew and wounded the third, the others finding resistance to be futile, surrendered to these pirates, who immediately seized their vessel and took it to the island from whence they had come. This island is one day's sail from the island near which they were attacked. They there stripped the crew, and began to tranship the cargo from the trader to their own prahus, four of which sailed away with a part of the plunder, and the other three remained to guard their prize, the remaining cargo and prisoners. Whilst the pirates were transferring the cargo of the Cochinchinese boat—which they had lightened, and dragged up on the sands—to their own boats, an English steamer was perceived to be in sight bearing up towards them. When these Malays saw her, they left boats, prisoners, cargo and all, after throwing a portion of the salt and cinnamon into the sea, and fled into the jungles on the island to hide themselves. The Cochinchinese, when they perceived the steamer, hoisted a piece of white cloth as a signal of distress, and manned one of the Malay praws with two men and pulled towards the steamer; which, when it perceived their signal, likewise lowered a boat for them. Deponent cannot say whether the men of the Steamer's boat first went on shore, or whether the crew of the Cochinchinese boat was taken on board of her; but they eventually assisted the Cochinchinese in hauling their boats from the beach into the water, and they sent a party to search for the pirates on the island, but they failed to discover any of them at that time. The Cochinchinese trader was not armed. Afterwards they went with the steamer to Singapore. Deponent subsequently embarked from that port on board the Cruiser Wolf, commanded by Captain Stanley, and went in search of these pirates. They then came to an island the name of which this deponent has since ascertained to be Pooloo Tingee, where two Malay men came down to meet them on their landing, bearing white flags tied to the poles which they held in their hands. None of the prisoners at the bar are either of those men. He then pointed out by signs to the Chief Officer of the Wolf, fourteen Malays whom he recognized to have been amongst the pirates who had attacked and plundered his vessel. The five prisoners at the bar were amongst those fourteen men. They were taken into custody by the chief mate and his party, and brought on board the Cruiser to Singapore, where the remaining five men of the Cochinchinese vessel recognised them. There were only five left out of the nine men which composed the crew of the trading vessel, because the four prahus which carried away a part of their cargo likewise took two of their comrades into captivity. At first all the prisoners were confined at Singapore jail, but subsequently eighteen of them were shipped on board the Cruiser for Calcutta. Of these six men have escaped and five are now at the bar of this Court for trial. Deponent never entertained any doubt of the identity of these men at the Singapore Police Office. Deponent said that eight men had assisted vi et armis in the attack made on the trader, and killed two men and wounded another. Shingee, the man blind of one eye, had a musket in his hand which he fired at the trader's crew, and so did Shuboo. These two were amongst the men who were most active participants in the attack on the deponent's vessel; the other three men were present at the time the vessel was plundered, and assisted in stripping the crew and transhipping the goods into their prahu. Deponent had not a competent interpreter at Singapore, and as he was not so minutely questioned on these points there, he only mentioned the active partakers in the attack on the merchant man. At the Police Office at Calcutta, he mentioned all the prisoners as being present at the seizure of the vessel. The vessel belonged to a Cochinchinese physician named Than, from whom the deponent and his comrades had hired it for the voyage. All the crew were shareholders in the freight, from the value of 200 rs. to 300 rs. each share. The vessel had an upper deck of bamboo, with platforms to lift up or let fall and cover the whole length of the vessel: it was about 90 cubits in length, and the deck was divided below into 3 partitions. The Malay prahus were about 30 feet in length each and were each moved by 9 or 10 men. They had a large wooden barricade about 4 or 5 feet high on the prahus with bamboo facings about 2 inches thick fixed to them. The clothes were (pointing to some produced in the Court) partly deponent's and partly belonging to the 2 men who were killed in the attack. The saw, and other sundry articles, belonged to the ship's stores. They were all found in the possession of these pirates when they were captured by the cruiser's crew. The man who stripped deponent and likewise the man on whose back these clothes were found, have escaped. The Cochin Chinese bark was of the burthen of 20 shares, of 40 peculs each—each pecul contains 133 lbs. The trader carried sails and was rowed likewise. The denomination of these kind of trading vessels in the deponent's country is jeebows. There was no specific name attached to the vessel itself. There was no war, at the time the Malays attacked deponent's vessel, between the Malays and Cochin Chinese. Deponent believed his nation was at peace with all other nations. The attack was completely unprovoked. Deponent did not see any cannon on any of the Malay prahus; they attacked with muskets and spears. The names of the men killed by the Pirates were Tynn and Shaun; the names of those taken into captivity were Hoohsom. Two others, named Sahoun and Heen, have remained at Singapore, and the deponent Gohee and Toonghoo are herein Court as witnesses in this case. Deponent had never been on either of the islands before, viz. the one where the pirates took the vessel or the one where they were captured by the crew of the Wolf. He cannot say whether they are islands or part of the continent, and does not know their names.

Tahoe and Toonghoo, 2 other Cochin-Chinese, who were part of the crew of the seized trader, deposed to the same purport as this witness, with slight discrepancies. Tahoe, said, for example, that 3 of the pirate boats had one mounted cannon each, and that the calibre of each cannon was of the thickness of deponent's thigh; whereas the first witness said there were no cannons, and that these cannon were fired twice; but as to the musketry, he could not say how often that was discharged; and Toonghoo said that he was wounded under the elbow by a ball fired from a musket by Suhjee, and he fell senseless into the boat therefore he could not recognize any of the free booters. He showed the scar of the wound to the jurymen and said it was healed by medical attendance at Singapore, and that the name of the island to which the pirates took them was Mahrtin. Neither of these deponents accompanied the first witness in the search after the pirates nor went on board of the cruiser for that purpose. They said that Subhoo had struck them on the head with a club, after their capture. They said such portion of the goods as the pirates could not take away with them, they threw into the sea. Their distance of one land from another was described by them by saying that they were 12 hours sail from the main land and each other.

As these 2 witnesses were not Christians but idolators, they were examined on their solemn assaviration, by lifting up their hands on their heads and calling God to witness, that they spoke the truth, and to punish them if they would speak falsely. This mode of oath the Cochin Chinese Bishop declared, to be the most binding on their conscience, and this is the oath he originally has administered to them whenever he had occasion to examine them on any very material point.

During the examination of the witness Tahoe, Mr. Seret, the interpreter of the French language to the Supreme Court, interpreted some of the replies so very inaccurately, that Mr. Pearson objected to take them as correct translations of the replies furnished by the witnesses to the Court, and appealed to Mr. T. Dickens, who coincided with Mr. Pearson as to their incorrectness. Mr. Dickens then translated the remaining portion of the replies, as given by the Bishop in French, to the Court into English, and after Tahoe's examination was concluded, he was sworn as to the correctness of his own translations, and also sworn in interpreter in this case in lieu of Mr. Seret.

Mr. John Gray, was likewise more than once reprimanded by the judge for confining all his communications between the Court and the prisoners, to only the prisoner Gunnan; but he replied that all the other prisoners had entrusted their defence to the discretion of that prisoner, and had made him their speaker to the Court at this trial.

Lieut. J. A. McDonald, deposed, that he is the chief officer of His Majesty's Cruiser Wolf, commanded by Capt. Stanley. He on the 14th of April last, accompanied the witness John Nam to the island of Tinghee. It is a barren and jungle island, about 60 miles from Singapore, to the eastward at the mouth of the China seas, and a noted rendezvous for the Malay pirates: there is a high mountain in the midst of it. When he landed there two men came with white flags stuck to the top of their poles, to meet them at their landing in token of peace. None of the prisoners at the bar were either of the 2 men. When he visited the islands there were many Malays on it with their families; they were living in huts covered with mats. John Nam pointed out to deponent 14 men out of 17 suspected persons on that island, and deponent arrested them. Eight of these men were recognised by John Nam directly he saw them, as being amongst the pirates who had plundered his boat, and the 5 prisoners were amongst those 8 men. Deponent arrested the 14 men indicated, and took them into custody. The islanders made no resistance to their capture, because he had 30 armed men in the boat with him, and there were many more in the cruiser ready to lend them any assistance which they might have required. There were plenty coconut and betelnut trees on the island. When they visited the island, the fruits were green on the trees and there was a great deal of jungle on it. Three old men staid on the island and said they would come with their families and reside at Singapore; but they have not done so as yet. After the prisoners had been taken to Singapore and examined, 11 of them were shipped on board the Wolf to be brought to Calcutta to be tried for piracy. They all jumped over board with irons on their feet. Six of them escaped, but five were recaptured and are the prisoners at the bar. The Malay boats, when he visited the island, were drawn up on shore in a dismantled state. None but the piratical boats have the barricades on them. No other portion of the property except that produced in Court was ever found after the plunder of the vessels. The Malay pirates, deponent believes, attack the Chinese and the other coasting vessels; but they do not readily attack European ships because they are generally well armed and prepared to resist them.

J. Hawer, master at arms, on board the Cruiser Wolf, confirmed this deponent's evidence, with this exception, that Laylee, the one eyed prisoner at the bar, was one of the men who came to meet the crew of the Wolf when they landed at the Island of Tinghee, with the white flags stuck to the poles in their hands.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoners, who had minutely cross-examined all the witnesses, said in their defence, that they were fishermen and traders; they had visited the Isle of Tinghee when the Wolf arrived there, with an intention to collect for sale, shells and rattans which grew there. They were not pirates and knew nothing of the crime laid to their charge. They had no witnesses to call.

This closed their defence.

The learned Judge, in summoning up the case, said, that the prisoners are charged with the crime of piracy on the high seas within the jurisdiction of this Court; that the vessel was plundered by pirates and two of her crew murdered, there is not the slightest doubt; the only point for the witnesses, the Jurymen's consideration was, whether this act was committed within the jurisdiction of this Court, and whether, with all the discrepancies on the part of respecting the prisoners having been recognised by the crew of the plundered vessel, the Jurymen are satisfied, that the prisoners were partakers in that cruel attack. If they are doubtful on that point, they will give the prisoners the benefit of that doubt; but if they are satisfied that they were aiders and abettors in this act of piracy, then it would be their duty to find the prisoner guilty of the crime laid to their charge; for although the name of the vessel is not ascertained and described in the indictment, yet the name of her proprietors and the owners of the cargo and its value and nature, has been ascertained and correctly mentioned in it. He then minutely recapitulated the evidence in the case, learnedly commenting on it, and left the case with these brief remarks to the discretion of the Jurymen.

The Jury retired for about one hour and returned a verdict of guilty on the 1st Count against the prisoner's Sudgee and Subhoo and acquitted the other three prisoners.

After this verdict had been recorded, the learned Judge thus addressed the two prisoners Sudgee and Subhoo: that they had, after a minute and careful examination of their case, been found guilty on the clearest evidence of the heinous crime of piracy and murder. With regard to the other three prisoners, although there was no doubt on the Judge's mind as to their having likewise been implicated in piratical practices, yet the evidence against them was not so very clear. He had mentioned the circumstance to the Jury and they had merely given these prisoners the benefit of those doubts; but as for these two, they were actually engaged in this piratical attack: and as this crime is on the increase and getting seriously alarming to the merchants trading in those parts, it is the duty of this Court to protect them from these spoliations and to make severe examples of those convicted of these heinous crimes, in order to warn others who are engaged in like depredations and thus to check the malpractices. The Judge then sentenced these two prisoners to be taken to either Singapore or some part near it, and there to be hanged by the neck till they are dead.

Before Sir B. Malkin, Knt.

The African, Ibrahim, alias Ismail, was found guilty of the murder of an African female, named Nurgiz, and sentenced to be executed on Monday next, the 28th instant. The particulars of the case we will publish in our paper of next Monday.

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY.

Fort William in Bengal.

At the third Sessions of Oyer and Terminer of our Sovereign Lord the King, holden at Calcutta in and for the said city of Calcutta, for the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty seven, before Sir Edward Ryan, Knight, Chief Justice, and his companions Justices of our said Lord the King, assigned to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses and misdemeanors, George Vint, the foreman, and the other jurors of our Lord the King, do on their own view present, that the inhabitants in general of the said city of Calcutta; are much inconvenienced and the poor thereof are greatly aggrieved and distressed from the scarcity and want of an uniform and extensive circulation of copper coinage, and that frequent breaches of the peace have occurred in consequence thereof, and that the old sicca pice or copper coinage ought to be altogether withdrawn from circulation, and that a very large quantity of the new Company's pice or copper coinage, ought to be issued and put in circulation.

The foreman and jurors aforesaid do further present, that the native inhabitants of Calcutta are, during the hot season, much distressed from want of a proper supply of water for domestic purposes, and for the extinction of fires, and that there ought to be at least six new tanks of water dug on the Calcutta side of the Circular road, and the aqueduct from the engine at the Chandpaul Ghaut, ought to be carried to each of the said proposed tanks and also to the several public tanks now being on the line of road from Saumbazar to Park street, in order that the said several tanks may be supplied with water from the river and that the engine during the rains when it is unemployed, ought to be used in filling the said several tanks. In witness whereof the said foreman on behalf of himself and the other jurors aforesaid hath hereunto set and subscribed his hand, this Twenty-fifth day of August in the year of Christ one thousand eight hundred and thirty seven.

THE JUDGE'S REPLY TO THE GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT.

This day, the presiding Judge, Sir Benjamin Malkin, Knt., returned the Court's reply to the gentlemen of the Grand Jury, regarding the presentment they had made to the Judges of the Court, on the subject of the grievances felt by the community of this city, particularly the poorer classes, from the deficiency of the copper currency, and the scarcity of good tanks for the supply of water to the inhabitants of the town. The Judge stated, that these were grievous evils he did not entertain the slightest doubt, and that they called for redress; but, nevertheless, he cannot but be aware, that these were points which this Court was not competent in its judicial authority to interfere in, and had no control in these matters, especially less so in its Admiralty jurisdiction, in which capacity alone this Court had issued the present summonses in their names in this instance. He would, however, after taking the opinion of the other Judges of the Court, submit their presentment to the Supreme Government, which alone was the proper authority empowered to afford redress to these kind of grievances, and he had not the slightest doubt, that if a proper memorial was respectfully submitted to the Supreme Government by the community of this city and its neighbourhood, setting forth the distress they experienced by the deficiency of the necessary requisites they felt and complained off, the Government, he felt fully convinced, would afford them every redress they could require.—Ilurkaru, August 26.

August 25, 1837.

Before Sir B. Malkin, Knt.

Seedee Ibrahim, was tried on the Coroner's indictment, for having, on the 24th of July 1837, at Mulingah, in the town of Calcutta, murdered one Seedee Nobin and Mussamut Nurgiz, by having stabbed them with a knife, from the effects of which wounds they died, the next day, in the Police Hospital.

The prisoner said, that his name was Ismael and not Ibrahim. The Judge then had the name changed in the indictment to Ismael.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Chootoo Khan, deposed, that he is a coachman and resides at Soorty Bagan. A female named Nurgiz rented a house of this deponent facing the street: she has been dead upwards of one month. She had been deponent's tenant for five months. At the period when she hired the house she came unaccompanied by any person. After she had resided there about 2 months, the prisoner came and resided with her. The house consisted of 5 rooms, and Nurgiz and the prisoner lived as man and wife in one of them—the prisoner was her paramour. Deponent was obliged to be often absent from his house to attend to his duties, therefore he cannot say whether they lived on amicable terms or otherwise. The prisoner and the deceased were both Africans. Another African came to their house on a Monday, the 24 July last, at the hour of 3 o'clock p.m. The deponent was then at home, and Nurgiz called this deponent and said to him, in the presence of the prisoner and the other African, that she was going out with them and desired deponent to take charge of her furniture during her absence. Deponent replied very well, lock your doors, and you will not find any thing missing when you return. After this deponent went to his hut to fetch his clothes, and the prisoner and the other African began to quarrel. They spoke in a foreign dialect, and deponent conjectured that they were quarrelling, because they spoke in an irritated manner, and were shoving and struggling with each other. Neither of them had any instruments in their hands at that time. The female was sitting before them and speaking to them in their dialect, but she did not interfere in their quarrel. When deponent returned with his clothes, he observed a knife in the hands of the prisoner, and the other African who is dead, covering his belly with his hands, ran into the streets and fell. The deceased was bleeding profusely from the belly, and the prisoner's hands were likewise smeared with blood. The female at that instant ran out from her room into the deponent's hut for shelter; she was then unhurt, and the prisoner with the knife followed her. When deponent saw this he became alarmed for the consequences; he ran after them, and saw the woman standing behind the door of the room and heard her screaming. The prisoner had hold of her by the throat and was stabbing her with the knife which he held in his hands; she with her hands was endeavouring to ward off the blows. Deponent then called out and alarmed the neighbours, and Ameer, khansama, came to her assistance. They then jointly went to endeavour to wrest the knife from the prisoner and secure him, but when the prisoner saw them approach he lifted up the knife and threatened to stab them. They became alarmed, and whilst Ameer, khansama, remained to watch the prisoner he went and gave intimation to the Police authorities. On his return from the thana, deponent saw the other African lying where he had fallen, the female lying under a platform in his room, and the prisoner lying wounded in the belly on the bed in Nurgiz's hut. Deponent did not see the wound on the prisoner inflicted. The Police authorities removed them all three to the Police Hospital, the woman on a carpet. There was only one knife seen by the prisoner which was subsequently found by Boodoo, naib of the thana, and taken by him to the Police Office. The wounded man died on that very day and the woman the next day. Their corpses were thrown away on Wednesday the 26th July. Deponent saw no weapon in the hands of any of these persons except the prisoner at the bar on that day.

Ameer, khansama, deposed, that he is a near neighbour of the last deponent and is acquainted with him intimately. On Monday, the 24th July, deponent at the hour of 3 o'clock p.m., in consequence of hearing Chootoo Khan cry out that an African was murdering a tenant of his in his house, went there and saw the prisoner stabbing Nurgiz with a knife; the female was sitting down by the door of Chootoo Khan's hut and warding off with her hands the blows which the prisoner, who was stooping over her and had hold of her by the clothes on her neck, was inflicting at random on her body. Deponent wanted Chootoo Khan to attempt to wrench the knife from prisoner and secure him to prevent his doing further mischief, and accordingly went towards him for that purpose; but when the prisoner perceived them approach him he lifted up the knife and threatened to stab them with it if they interfered. They then became alarmed, and after a consultation, Chootoo Khan went to the thana to give the alarm, and deponent went to his hut to get a stick to protect himself; but not finding one he desired his son to search for one and bring it to him at Chootoo Khan's house, and he returned to Chootoo Khan's house. Whilst he was entering Chootoo Khan's hut, he saw the prisoner come out of it: he then became alarmed, and secreted himself, and from his secret place he heard the prisoner mutter some words in a foreign dialect, and then he saw him stab himself with a knife in the belly and then enter Nurgiz's hut and lean in a reclining posture on the bed. Shortly after this the Police authorities came with Chootoo Khan, and took all the wounded persons to the Police Hospital, and the knife to the Police Office.

Boodoo, naib of the Putwuldangah thana, deposed, that on Monday the 24th July, a lad came to the thana and gave him notice that a murder had been committed at the house of Chootoo Khan at Coolootoolah: he then took a peon with him and then he arrived at the door of the Police Hospital and there saw an African lying insensible, wounded in the belly, with his entrails protruding. The Police Hospital is a short distance from Chootoo Khan's house. On further intimation, deponent went to Chootoo Khan's hut and there he saw Nurgiz, an African woman, lying wounded under the platform in the room and her entrails protruding. He questioned her, and she replied that Siddee Ibrahim had wounded her. Deponent then went into Nurgiz's room to seize the prisoner, and saw him reclining wounded on the bed. Deponent asked him how the parties were wounded; and prisoner replied that Siddee Nobin had wounded him and he in retaliation had wounded Siddee Nobin and Nurgiz. He then remained silent and pretended to fall asleep. They were all removed to the Police Hospital, where the medical attendants dressed their wounds. The deponent produces a knife and says that he found it in Nurgiz's hut near the place where the prisoner was lying, and that it was covered with blood. There were two wounds on the prisoner, one in the belly and the other in the left hand.

Ameer, khansama, recalled. The prisoner inflicted two wounds, on himself, the first on the belly: when deponent saw this he became so agitated with fright that he cannot say where the other wound was inflicted. He did not see the prisoner's entrails protrude, nor was there any blood on the prisoner's arm at the time he wounded himself.

Hydar Ally deposed, that on the 24th of July last, he was the thanadar of Coolootoolah division. He on that day, in consequence of an alarm of a murder being brought to the thana, went to Chootoo Khan's house and saw Nurgiz lying, wounded in the belly, in Chootoo Khan's hut, and the prisoner wounded in Nurgiz's room. The prisoner on being questioned said, that he had wounded Nurgiz. Deponent did not then hold out any inducement to him to prevail on him to make this confession. He merely said that she was his mistress and misconducted herself, he therefore had wounded her; as for Siddee Nobin, he had wounded him first, and he merely retaliated on him. The prisoner did not make any further communication to deponent.

Shake Booboo, recollected the wound in the prisoner's arm. It was a long but slight wound apparently recently inflicted and a very superficial one. Deponent, however, did not take very particular notice of it.

R. H. Bain, Police Surgeon, deposed, that he examined the bodies of Siddee Nobin and Mussamut Nurgiz at the Police Hospital. The prisoner was likewise at that Hospital at that time, and had 2 wounds on the abdomen. Deponent attended him and saw no other wounds on his body. When deponent first saw the woman, the wounds she had, had all previously been dressed by Professor Goodeve. There were several wounds on the body; one on the abdomen, measuring $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches, one on the shoulder penetrating to the bone, one on the left hand and one on the little finger of that hand, one on the left side, one on the right thigh, three on the right elbow, one on the right hip and 3 above the hip. She died the next day in consequence of these wounds; but she was sensible up to the period of her demise. On examining the corpse, deponent saw 2 wounds in the smaller intestines and a considerable quantity of coagulated blood in the cavity of the abdomen. They corresponded with the wounds on the abdomen and were the cause of her death. An instrument like the knife produced in this Court to-day might inflict such wounds. Deponent is not aware whether the effects of these wounds were in their nature such as to have made her sensible of her danger previous to her decease. Deponent did not intimate to her that her life was in danger. Deponent had no conversation with the prisoner on this subject.

P. O. Hanlon, Police magistrate, deposed, that he went to the Police Hospital to take the dying depositions of Nurgiz. Deponent does not recollect the date but the 24th of July 1827, the date on the written deposition, corresponds with the day on which they were taken. The prisoner, deponent then understood, was in a dangerous condition and appeared to be insensible; at any rate she appeared not to be aware of deponent having addressed her at the time. Previous to taking the depositions of Nurgiz, deponent, through his interpreter, Mr. Naemy, intimated to her that her life was despaired of, and her dissolution was approaching. The deposition taking (some in hand from the Judge) were the depositions; he wrote them as Mr. Naemy interpreted Nurgiz's words to him, and they are correct and bear Naemy's signature.

J. P. Naemy deposed, that he is interpreter to Mr. O'Hanlon. He interpreted to him the depositions of Nurgiz at the Police Hospital on the 24th July 1827, verbatim as the female gave it to him in reply to the questions put to her by Mr. O'Hanlon through him. Those produced in Court were them. The woman acknowledge that she was aware that her dissolution was approaching, but was sensible and understood the queries put to her.

The deposition of Nurgiz being read, she said that she was the concubine of Ismael; he left her about 3 months ago without any support. She then became Siddee Nobin's mistress. Ismael returned to her house this day and he quarrelled with Siddee Nobin whom he saw there with her, and stabbed Siddee Nobin in the belly. She on seeing this fled to Choetoo Khan's house; he followed her there and stabbed her likewise, and then he stabbed himself.

This closed the prosecution.

The prisoner in his defence said, that he left Calcutta on a voyage to Madras and Bombay, leaving Nurgiz, his mistress, in Calcutta. Siddee Nobin during his absence came to her and said to her that the prisoner was an old, good-for-nothing fellow, and induced her to go and live with him. When the prisoner returned from his voyage and heard this, he went and said to her, "very well, please yourself, there are plenty of women to be had in town". After this Siddee Nobin went and brought some grog and after they had drunk it they went away. Deponent went to his shop, and on his return, prisoner observed that Nurgiz had cooked nothing. He took out some biscuits and began to eat them, and was grumbling, when one of the neighbours came and advised him to go away from that place for the devil was at work there. Shortly after this Nobin came in and began to quarrel with the prisoner and took up a knife which was lying there on the shelf, and had been used to dress vegetables, and struck him with it. The prisoner retailed; and whilst they were struggling on the ground, the prisoner below and Siddee Nobin above and prisoner was using the knife in self-defence, Nurgiz came and interfered, and she must then have received the wounds which caused her death. After this the prisoner became insensible from the effects of his wound, and knows nothing of what transpired till he found himself in the Police Hospital. Prisoner called no witnesses.

The Judge, in addressing the Jury, said, that the prisoner was only tried for the murder of the woman; and if they were to believe the evidence, which he saw no reason to doubt, it is clear that she came by her death from the injury she received from the prisoner's hands. That the crime which caused the death of Siddee Nobin is legally manslaughter is very probable, from this evidence, for it is apparent that there was a quarrel between the prisoner and him before any blows were struck, so there must have been a considerable irritation at the time before any actual personal violence was offered by any person. With regard to the woman, although there was a great irritation and injury to have roused the prisoner's feelings by having deserted him and taken to the other man, although it was very great, yet it was not sufficient by law to reduce the crime of her death from murder to manslaughter: the only circumstance which could reduce the crime of her death to manslaughter, would be if they believed that Siddee Nobin had in the first instance given provocation to the prisoner, and had irritated his feelings, and that she had been a party concerned in having assisted Siddee Nobin in assaulting or irritating the prisoner's feelings: of this there is nothing shown either in the evidence nor in the prisoner's defence and if the jury do not think that the female was actually aiding and assisting Siddee Nobin in provoking the prisoner and assaulting him, then their verdict, he was sorry to say, must be that of guilty of murder against the prisoner, for no provocation given by the deceased Siddee Nobin to the prisoner, could warrant him in causing the death of the female Nurgiz. With these observations he left the case in the hands of the Jury.

After this verdict had been recorded the Judge, in sentencing the prisoner told him, that he had been, on the clearest evidence, found guilty of the crime of murder, under very savage and ferocious circumstances; crimes of this kind cannot be expiated but by the death of the criminal. The Judge then sentenced the prisoner to be hanged on Monday the 28th instant.

After this the Judge, on behalf of the Court, thanked the Petty Jurymen for the very arduous duties they had performed during this Session.—Hurkaru, August 28.

MADRAS SUPREME COURT.

J. P. Cropley vrs. R. W. Urquhart and J. Funderlinden.

Counsel for plaintiff..... Mr. Advocate General.

Attorney..... Mr. Branson.

Counsel for defendants..... Mr. Minchin.

Attorney..... Mr. Wilkins.

The Advocate General opened the case for the prosecution. He said it was an action for libel brought by Mr. Cropley against defendants, and his friend had the merry part of the case. The defendants published a most unprovoked and malicious libel against plaintiff, who instead of seeking redress by other means comes to the court for justice, and the libel consisted in an article put forth by the defendants charging the plaintiff, with an act which might have subjected him to very serious consequences. The act itself was never perpetrated by the plaintiff, and it was for the fabricated statement that the plaintiff has brought the defendants before the court. The learned counsel said that the article appeared in the Madras Circular and General Chronicle, dated 12th June, of which the defendants are the printer and publisher respectively, and as such the parties responsible for the publication. The learned counsel then read the paragraph containing the alleged libel, commenting as he went along, on the particular passages in it. The following is a copy of the libel complained of—

"An accident occurred in town on Friday last, which is likely to become a serious affair, the particulars which have reached us are as follow, and we give them as we have heard.

"Mr. Cropley, for something which was not done quite to his satisfaction, grew vexed at his servant, and in the provocation of the moment, which, perhaps, was excited by the intemperate language of the individual, severely upbraided him and wound up the performance with either kicks, or blows, one of which hit the man at a very unlucky moment, and carried him rolling down the staircase with a velocity which his bodily exertion could not come. The fall we understand, has fractured his skull, and the rolling over the stair-case, which followed immediately after, served in no small degree to increase the injury done to his head. The individual was taken up in a very exhausted state; he was speechless, and his head bled; medical aid was immediately sent for, and the individual was soon after removed to the general hospital, where he continues. Of his recovery very faint hopes are entertained."

The learned counsel stated that it was not pretended that this was a case for heavy damages. The action was not brought for that purpose, but the learned counsel believed that it was a fit case to visit defendants with punishment before an established tribunal. The libel, as their lordships would see, was calculated to do the plaintiff injury, and he did not think there existed any human being that could endure with common patience, to see his character held up in that manner. Common decency and justice required that the party should have ascertained the truth before publication, which he might easily have done. The learned counsel followed this up with a comment on the indifferent manner in which the defendants treated the matter when they were called upon to contradict the statement. He then read Mr. Branson's letter to the defendant Urquhart, which is as follows :—

To Mr. URQUHART, Proprietor of the Circular.

Sir,—I am instructed by J. P. Cropley, Esquire, to apprise you, that he considers the article in your paper of this morning, in which his name is mentioned, a scandalous and infamous libel, and that I have his most positive instructions to commence proceedings against you in the Supreme Court, if you do not forthwith issue an extra, or memorandum, to be circulated to your subscribers this day, stating, as the fact is, that the statements contained in such article are wholly and utterly false, and expressive of your regret that the same should have appeared in your paper.

Yours obediently,

J. W. BRANSON, Attorney at law.

Madras, 12th June, 1837.

Here, said he, the plaintiff requested the defendants to issue an extra, and leaving aside the particular terms used by the attorney in his letter, it was a very reasonable request, but with this request the defendants did not think fit to comply. The defendants ridiculed the idea of issuing a circular, but he believed that the plaintiff had right to call upon the party to make such apology as he pleased. The letter from defendants in reply regarding the circular was then read :—

To. J. W. BRANSON, Esq., Attorney at Law.

Sir,—In reply to your letter just received, I beg to inform you, that I much regret that the misstatement you refer to should have appeared in this day's Circular, as, however, it was not a statement maliciously put forth by the editor, it is believed that sufficient grounds do not exist for commencing proceedings in the Supreme Court, but the editor will correct the mistake in the next Circular, which it is hoped may prove satisfactory to your client.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

(Signed) R. W. URQUHART.

To this letter the plaintiff's attorney replied, repeating that if the circular called for did not issue on that day no subsequent apology would be accepted. The learned counsel said that even to this request the defendants turned a deaf ear, but in their Wednesday's issue they corrected the misstatement. The paragraph which contained the explanation was then read and the observation made in it, that "that the practice of issuing an extra was quite unprecedented," was commented upon by him, remarking that he did not understand whether it was meant to say that the practice of making apology was unprecedented. To him it appeared that every thing that contempt and malice can do was done by the party in publishing the second paper, and he hoped their lordships would consider the circumstances which he had represented in passing judgment upon the case.

Mr. Norton then proceeded to put in evidence, the letters and documents on which he founded his case, and on Mr. Cator commencing to read the two first papers, which were stated to be copies of declarations made by defendants respectively before Mr. Elliott, the magistrate, Mr. Minchin objected that copies could not be read until it was shown that the originals could not be produced. Mr. Norton then read the act of the Supreme Government and contended that copies of these declarations were allowed to be read in evidence as proving the person who was the printer and publisher, as well as the owner of the press.

Mr. Minchin then stated that he objected under this act to the admissibility of either the one copy, or the other; he contended that under the section, the copy of the declaration to be made by the printer and publisher might be read when authenticated in the mode there pointed out. The originals were to be kept one in the office of the magistrate before whom it had been taken, and the other in the Supreme Court or other King's Court, and that the copy to be read in evidence was to be authenticated by the officer with whom the original was deposited and by the seal of the court. Mr. Minchin contended the office of the magistrate was not a court, nor possessed a seal to its court. That this clause in the act could only be complied with by producing a copy under the seal of the Supreme Court, where the original was deposited.

The objection as to the production of the copy of the declaration alleged to have been made by the owner of the press was still stronger. The 8th section did not authorize the making a copy of this declaration to be evidence at all, consequently the rule of law on this point was not allowed by the act, and the original ought to have been produced. The mode in which the act declared the copy of the declaration of the printer and publisher should be receivable in evidence, completely refuted the possibility of making a copy of the declaration as to the ownership of the press admissible.

Mr. Norton urged that the officer in charge of an office of the originals was clearly authorized to authenticate, and that the seal of that officer, was the seal of the court. That there was a court of commissioners, a police court, &c. and seal of the magistrate was the seal of the court and receivable as such. He also contended that the admission of this being a true-copy, under the order made by the judge, prevented the necessity of doing more than reading the admission. Mr. Norton admitted that undoubtedly the act did not determine anything as to the admissibility of the copy of the declaration of the owner of the press, and that unless the copy was admissible under the admissions of the defendants it was not under the Act.

The court then determined without calling on Mr. Minchin, that the copy of the declaration made by the owner of the press was not admissible in evidence, as the Act did not authorize the reception of the copy but left it, as it was, according to the rules of evidence, that a copy was not admissible as secondary evidence till it was shown that the original could not be produced.

With respect to the copy of the declaration of the printer and publisher, they thought it would be better to receive it in the first instance, leaving, however, liberty for the defendants to set aside the evidence and enter a non-suit, should the court be of opinion this instrument was not properly authenticated.

The copy was then read, and Mr. Norton proposed to read the copy of a letter sent by Mr. Branson, the attorney to defendant Urquhart, a copy of which had been admitted under the Judges' order, to be a true copy.

Mr. Minchin then objected, that this copy of a letter stated to be in defendant's possession, could not be read as secondary evidence, until the plaintiff had shewn a notice to produce the original. It was impossible to contend that under the judges' order framed according to the new rules in England, that secondary evidence could in all cases be admissible;—these rules were intended to facilitate the proof of deeds and instruments, and not to alter the law.

Sir Edward Gambier.—Have you not under this Rule admitted that the copy is true copy of the instrument of which it is alleged to be a copy? Is not that sufficient; And is it not also a notice to you that the copy will be read in evidence, if the original is not produced?

Mr. Minchin.—With all deference I would contend, that the court has no power to alter the law of evidence. It is the established law of the land, and cannot be set aside by judges who are only expositors of the law. The law that requires the best evidence to be produced, is one of such vital importance to the administration of justice, that I am satisfied it will never be broken through, or set aside by this court. In the present instance the very wording of the order shows the impossibility that such could be the intention of the judges in England, or of the court here introducing this rule. For there is this rule that these documents are admitted to be correct, saving all just exceptions to their admissibility in evidence. Mr. Minchin then argued that under this clause, he had a right reserved to him of objecting to the admissibility of every thing that was not strictly evidence, and that as no notice to produce the original had been served, nor the production of the original been required, secondary evidence could not be admitted.

Mr. Norton contended, that the admission that this was a true copy, did away altogether with the necessity of any other proof; that in all cases even of reason or felony, and forgery, the admissions of the parties did away the necessity of other proof. How was this admitted to be a true copy, why then was the original to be produced? Of what use would these admissions be, if the parties were to prove every thing as if these admissions had never been made. We might as well give a witness a notice to produce his chin from his neckcloth to enable us to hear him speak.

Sir Robert Mamm, Chief Justice.—This rule was never intended to alter the law of evidence and allow secondary evidence to be produced on all occasions. The clause, saving all just exceptions to the admissibility of the different document, shews that such a construction could never be put on these admissions. They were only intended to facilitate the proof of these instruments, and to save expense to the parties. How then can you give secondary evidence of a letter, without shewing some excuse for not producing the original. Here you have shewn none whatever; you have not given any notice to produce it, nor taken any step to bring it before the court. I am of opinion that secondary evidence as to the letter is not admissible.

Sir Edward Gambier.—I at first thought that these admissions did away with the necessity of producing the instrument itself and made the copy evidence.—I am now satisfied that such cannot be the construction that can be put on these admissions—the clause saving all just exceptions, takes away any such meaning. I agree with the chief justice that a copy of the letter cannot be admitted.

Mr. Norton then put in the letter of Mr. Urquhart to Mr. Branson, dated 12th June 1837, and the Circulator paper of the 12th June against both defendants, and the Circulator paper of the 14th as against the defendant Fanderlinde only, which were read, and the case for the plaintiff was then closed.

We are enabled to give but a very imperfect statement of what fell from Mr. Minchin, who said that he appeared for the defendants Urquhart and Fanderlinde who had pleaded separately, the one being an infant by his guardian, and the other by his attorney, and he proposed, owing to the objections which he had raised in a preceding state, to separate the defence of the two. He submitted with respect to the evidence produced regarding Mr. Urquhart, that there was none on which the court acting as a jury could find a verdict. He contended that the letter produced purporting to be in reply to a reference made by the plaintiff's attorney to Mr. Urquhart was no admission of the fact that he was the proprietor, or publisher of the paper. Here the learned counsel read the letter to the court, and laid great stress upon the words "it is believed that sufficient grounds do not exist for commencing proceedings in the Supreme Court," and "which (referring to the explanation) is hoped may prove satisfactory to your client."—He urged that if Mr. Urquhart had been the proprietor, or editor, he would have said "I believe sufficient grounds do not exist for commencing proceedings in the Supreme Court and I hope the explanation may prove satisfactory to your client,"—as these are not the words used in the letter, it appeared to the learned counsel that Mr. U. was expressing in it the opinion of some other party. He put it to their lordships to say whether it was not possible for the agent, the clerks, friends, or other parties connected with the press to have written the letter which Mr. Urquhart is represented to have addressed to the plaintiff's attorney—and added, suppose the letter which the court had before them, was, as he had a right to consider it to be in the absence of all proof to the contrary, written by the clerk, or agent, or some one connected with the press, at the instance of the editor, expressive of his regret, could the court upon no better evidence than the supposition that the writer of such letter must necessarily be the editor himself punish him, in the room of the real offender. He added further, that on such a letter alone, he felt satisfied that no jury could come to the conclusion that there was evidence on which they could say that the defendant Urquhart was proved to be the owner of the press, and he would put it to the court to say whether when there were so many other media of proof by which the fact could have been established, none of which had been produced on this occasion, they could find that Urquhart was the owner and proprietor of the press from whence the alleged libel issued.

The learned counsel then proceeded to the defence against Fanderlinden. He referred to the Circulator of the 12th June which contained the alleged libel, and proceeded to read the article. He drew the attention of their lordships to the words an accident occurred, and we give the particulars as we have heard, and contended that although upon the slightest grounds, in the case of a publication of a libel the law would infer malice, there was nothing in the intention the defendants had in putting the article forward, which at all participated of malice in the ordinary acceptance of the term. The statement was not submitted as a fact ascertained by the editor, it was merely given as it reached him; but what is Mr. Cropley's conduct? No sooner had he read the paragraph than, he, says he, "I have caught my opponent the editor of the Circulator, the successful rival of my Courier, the man who has interfered with the circulation of my paper. I will punish him. Away he runs to Mr. Branson to take his advice. Mr. Branson no less eager than Mr. Cropley to bring the action, immediately thunders off the letter to Mr. Urquhart the first defendant. The learned counsel then read to the court the letter from Mr. Cropley's attorney. "I am instructed," says he, "by James Pembroke Cropley, Esquire, to acquaint you that he considers the paragraph which appeared in your paper of this morning, in which his name is used, a most scandalous and infamous libel," and "I have," says he, "his most positive instructions to proceed against you in the Supreme Court, if you do not issue a circular or memorandum to your subscribers this day, stating, as the fact is, that the statements contained in such article are wholly and utterly false"—To this letter, which the learned counsel said was received about 12 or 1 o'clock, the defendants replied, promising to correct the mistake in the next issue, viz. Wednesday's paper. This reply was then read by the advocate. There, he observed, is an expression of regret that the mistake should have found its way into the Circulator. There it is promised that the statement will be corrected in the next number. To any gentleman this explanation would have appeared satisfactory, but it did not prove so to James Pembroke Cropley, Esquire. Throughout the proceedings the addition of an Esquire, is assumed by Mr. Cropley, and it would have been as well if, with the title of a gentleman, he had acted up to the character he had assumed, for he would then have accepted the noble, the manly, and ample explanation that was offered? But nothing short of the extra would please James Pembroke Cropley, Esquire. This reminded him, the learned advocate said, of a noble admiral who, when it was observed to him that his name had not been mentioned in the account of a particular action in the manner it deserved, said to his friends, "Never mind, I will have a Gazette to myself," so says James Pembroke Cropley, Esquire. He would have the extra, the whole extra, and nothing but the extra. As the court well know extras are issued when overland despatches arrive from England, or on the receipt of important intelligence in which the public are deeply interested; and in the opinion of Mr. Cropley at least, he thought that an extra respecting himself must prove of equal importance to the subscribers of the Circular. "I will have a separate extra," says he, "containing my name in full and headed the vindication of the character of James Pembroke Cropley, Esquire, from mis-statements contained in the Circulator of the 12th June," and this shall be sent this evening to the subscribers of the Circulator. After some other appropriate observations on the absurdity of the demand, and the consequence assumed by the said James Pembroke Cropley, Esquire, in the present proceeding, which produced no little laughter in all in court, the learned counsel said that the second letter from Mr. Cropley's attorney was received at so very late an hour that it was not possible, even if there had been any disposition on the part of the defendants, to have issued the extra required. This letter stated in positive terms that if the extra did not issue on the same day, his client would accept no subsequent apology. What was the conduct of the defendants on the receipt of this letter, although they were informed that no apology would be received—although threatened with immediate legal proceedings, the editors, as honorable men, published the article contradicting their former statement and expressive of their regret that it should have appeared in the Circulator. Immediately following this article was one to which he would particularly draw their lordships' attention, as shewing clearly the defendants were actuated by a desire to deceive the public by every means in their power, and reprinted from the Courier (Mr. Cropley's paper) the particulars of the accident as they really occurred and as stated by Mr. Cropley himself in his own paper.

Here the learned counsel submitted to the court that as no actual damage had been inflicted, as no allegation even that any actual damage had been sustained was stated in the plaint, the question for the court to say, if they considered they could give any damages at all, would be whether Mr. Cropley had been injured by the refusal to publish this extra, and whether the delay till the next issue of the paper could in any manner have occasioned any injury to Mr. Cropley? He called on the court to consider whether, if every mis-statement made in a newspaper, written as they were currante calamo, was visited by an action and damages were to be given thereon, whether the court would not be deluged with actions for libel. The Conservative against the Spectator, the Spectator versus the Conservative, the Courier versus the Circulator, and the Circulator versus the Courier on alleged libels, the mis-statements of which had been immediately corrected.

Sir Robert Comyn, in giving judgment, said that he considered the paragraph a false, unfounded and malicious libel against the plaintiff. It was a charge that might have subjected him to a charge of manslaughter. It was a grave and scandalous charge without any offer to explain it except by the next paper. It is in India that this ought particularly to have been refuted, as the tappel goes every day; the press should not run so quick. He was very far from being opposed to the press, and very uninclined to place any restraint upon it; but at the same time he considered that private character should be held sacred. He saw nothing in what the defendants did which might be considered in mitigation of the offence; on the contrary it seemed to him that it was not enough to say after the publication of a malicious libel that the defendants had no malicious motives; such a doctrine should not be supported, and he had no hesitation in saying that both the printer and publisher were liable. It must be considered that the letter produced in court fixed Urquhart. That letter shewed he had such an influence upon the Editor as fully established him to have been interested in it. He was, therefore, of opinion that both parties were affected by the publication of the paragraph. Verdict against both defendants—damages 300 rupees, with costs.

CEYLON SUPREME COURT.

The proceedings in the Supreme Court and the District Court of Colombo, No. 1, South, which we publish in another part of our paper, will, we have no doubt, be read with much interest by a large proportion of the public Ceylon, not only as containing the final decision of the Supreme Court upon the long mooted question of the power of that Court to issue Mandates in the nature of Writs of Mandamus, but also as declaring the legality of Instructions issued by the Government to the local Courts of Law for their guidance in the enforcement of the provisions of the small-pox Regulation.

With the view of placing the subject as distinctly as possible before our readers, it will be found that we have prefixed to the Judicial Proceedings copies of the correspondence between the Government and Mr. Blair, and have inserted the notes which we have obtained of the opinions delivered by the learned Judges, immediately before the Order made in Court on each day respectively. The Order made by the District Court on the 14th June is sufficiently explanatory of the manner in which this case was originally brought forward; and the appeal against that Order having been thrown out by the Supreme Court as irregular on the 21st June, the King's Advocate, we understand, on that day applied for a Rule to shew cause why the District Judge should not be compelled by Mandate to receive the Bond, and it was believed that such a Rule was granted. On the meeting of the Court on the 24th, however, it appeared that some mistake had been made in the Registry, and it was not until that day that the Rule was issued, to which a return was made by Mr. Blair on the 26th. On the 26th, the Supreme Court issued a Mandate, calling upon him to shew cause why he should not obey the Instructions of the Governor, and it was in the course of the discussion upon the Return to that Mandate, that the legality of the Instructions was decisively declared on the 28th, the Mandate not having been made peremptory solely on a technical objection taken by the Judges themselves, not raised by Mr. Blair, that the obligation to take the Bond was not sufficiently explicitly laid down.

It is not our intention to offer any remarks on the question respecting the issue of Mandates in the nature of Writs of Mandamus. That has been settled by the highest legal authority in the Colony, and no good can result from prolonging the discussion. We shall therefore address ourselves solely to the second and in our opinion far more important point, as involving the interests of the whole population of the Colony, determined in these proceedings namely, the legality of the Government Instructions.

The objections taken to them by Mr. Blair, as repugnant to the very letter as well as spirit of the Charter, have been conclusively and clearly over-ruled by Mr. Justice Jeremie, and it has been declared that the Government has full power to make such instructions as it may think fit, provided they are within the scope of the Regulation itself, that is to say if the system so introduced be only auxiliary. We trust that the Government will not shrink from the responsibility thus thrown upon it under the existing law, and that that law may not be repealed unless from the most evident necessity. We have long held it to be utterly impracticable to enact any Ordinance applicable to all parts of the Island, which could at the same time be satisfactory to the feelings or prejudices of the public here, and afford due protection from the disease. Both these objects we consider to be attainable under the present law, if the Government proceed on a steady and uniform system, issuing such instructions from time to time as on mature consideration may appear best suited to the existing state of affairs in the Districts to which they may intend their instructions to apply; and if no attempts are made to mislead the public, and prevent them from properly appreciating the motives and acts of the Government.

As a case in point, we can assert without fear of contradiction, that the very Instructions which formed the subject of these proceedings, were looked upon when issued as boon granted by the Government to the people, and we have never understood that any inconvenience has resulted from them in practice; and yet those very Instructions, if made general, would in the present circumstances of the Colony, amount in many places to an entire suspension of the law, and would remove all check to the unlimited spread of the disease; while as applicable to Colombo, they do no more than afford the Public that protection from abuse, which they have a right to look for at the hands of the Government. As the law now stands, every modification which the changes in the state of the Colony admit of, is looked upon as a boon, while the judgment of the Supreme Court, putting out of sight the force of public opinion, affords ample security against the abuse of its present power by the Government, by restricting it to the issue of instructions within the scope of the Regulation itself. While on the other hand, any new and general enactment, admitting of no variation, would always, from the light in which the people of Ceylon have been accustomed to look upon all restrictive regulations for their protection from disease, be considered arbitrary and oppressive, however liberal and lenient it might in reality be. The attention of the Government has, we believe, been for some time given to the state of the Medical Establishment, and it is obvious that any considerable increase in the number of the Officers of that department, would admit of the operation of the Regulation being subjected to restrictions, in many parts of the Island, which are at present in the highest degree inexpedient.

In conclusion, we have only to call attention to the correspondence which has passed between the Government and Mr. Blair, since the final decision of the Supreme Court; and to express our regret at having been unable to obtain notes of the remarks which fell from Mr. Justice Stoddart in the course of the proceedings. It is evident, however, from the Orders made by the Court, that his opinion must have been in the main in accordance with that of Mr. Jeremie—we allude particularly to the Mandamus question—all the Judges having been unanimous on the last day.—Ceylon Chronicle, July 10.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Colombo, 20th May, 1837.

SIR,—I am directed to transmit for your guidance, a copy of the Instructions which have been from time to time transmitted to the District Judge of Colombo, No. 1, North, relative to cases of smallpox.

I have, &c.

P. ANSTRUTHER, Colonial Secretary.
The District Judge of Colombo, No. 1, South.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Colombo, 14th March, 1837.

SIR,—I have laid before the Right Hon'ble the Governor your letter of the 13th Instant, and in conveying to you His Excellency's directions on the same, I am instructed in the first instance to refer you to the enclosed Copy of instructions, which have this day been forwarded to the Superintendent General of Vaccination. You will perceive from the 2d Clause of those instructions that in all cases occurring within the Gravets of Colombo, you will be furnished with the Certificate of the visiting Medical officer, which Certificate will be produced to you by the person present at the examination of the patient, who will thus become a witness to the identity of the party to be removed. And it is the Governor's desire that no Warrant shall in future be issued for the removal of any infected person within the Gravets of Colombo, unless you are duly furnished with a Certificate in the manner above explained.

From facts which have been brought to the Governor's notice, he has formed the opinion that the public is not sufficiently protected by the system of placing infected persons in Quarantine as at present conducted, and while he is anxious to continue this indulgence where circumstances will admit of it, he desires, if possible, to secure a greater degree of protection, and it is with this view that the 4th and 5th Clauses of the Instructions to the Superintendent General of Vaccination and the notice therein referred to have been drawn up. You will perceive that the notice gives full warning of the necessity for an immediate application on the part of the party wishing to avail himself of the indulgence, and I am therefore to state that if no such application be made at the time of the production of the Medical Certificate, the Governor is not prepared to sanction any delay in the issue of a Warrant for removal, which delay may subject the public to the danger of infection, and the consequent spread of the disease,—if however a party should apply at a proper time, but should request to be allowed a moderate time to enable him to make arrangements for giving the Bond, you are at liberty to postpone granting the Warrant for 12 hours; but in all such cases and also when the Bond shall have been finally entered into, you will not fail to give due notice to the Superintendent of Police.

I am also to state that if the Medical Certificate shall in any case declare internal separation to be practicable, although from the position of house the external watching may be impracticable, His Excellency desires that a party may be allowed to enter into the Bond; but in cases where both may be impracticable, Quarantine is necessarily inadmissible on the ground of Police safety.

A form of the Bond to be taken in such cases is annexed for your guidance.

You will continue to act upon these Instructions until further orders.

I have, &c.

P. E. WODEHOUSE, Assistant.

The District Judge of Colombo, No. 1 North.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Colombo, 14th March 1837.

1st. The Superintendent of Police will receive instructions to place at the disposal of the Superintendent General of Vaccination, such a number of trustworthy and intelligent Peons as that officer may require to enable him to comply with the following directions.

2d. The Medical officer appointed to inspect and report upon a reported case of Small-pox occurring within the Gravets of Colombo, will proceed to the spot accompanied by a Peon, and having examined the patient will furnish the Peon with a Medical Certificate of the Form annexed, which Certificate the Peon will produce with as little delay as possible to the public officer to whom he may be directed to apply for a Warrant in order that the Patient may be removed to the Hospital or placed in effectual Quarantine with the least possible delay.

3d. Such Medical officer will without loss of time inform the Superintendent of Police of the cases in which such Certificates have been so furnished by him, stating if Quarantine be or be not impracticable.

4th. Parties applying for patients to be placed in Quarantine, will be required to give Bond to the amount of £15 for due observance of the same according to the form prescribed.

5th. In order to enable parties to avail themselves of this privilege, the visiting Medical officer, if he should consider effectual Quarantine to be practicable, with reference to the situation and construction of the premises, will in the presence of the Peon, furnish the householders or principal person resident in the house with a notice in the form B annexed.

By His Excellency's Command,
P. E. WODEHOUSE Assistant.

I do hereby certify, that I have just examined residing at and find that he, (or she) is affected with Small-pox, and I hereby further certify that in my opinion internal separation (or is not) practicable in the house of the said and that external watching of the house of this said is (or is not) practicable.

You are hereby informed that notice will be given to the that residing in the house is infected with Small-pox and the said will be removed to the hospital unless application be made to the said that he (or she) may remain in Quarantine, Bond being given for the due observance thereof.

BOND.

Know all men by these presents, that I of am held firmly bound to our Sovereign Lord the King, his heirs and successors, in the penal sum of £15 to be made and levied of my goods and chattels to the use of our said Lord the King, if, I the said shall fail in performing the Conditions hereunder written.

Whereas is seized with Small-pox in the house situated at and has been allowed to remain in Quarantine in the said house, upon agreement that a Board giving notice thereof shall be fixed in front of the said premises, the above Bond being given for the due observance and performance of the said Quarantine as stated in the Condition undermentioned.

Now the Condition of the above obligation is such that if the said Quarantine shall be duly and faithfully observed and performed, that is to say, if the said patient nor any other person or persons excepting Medical Attendants upon the Patient, shall quit or pass from the said house and premises, and if also no furniture, clothes or other articles be removed from the said house, unless by and under the express authority of the Superintendent of Police, Constable or Police Vidahn during such time as the Superintendent of Vaccination shall require the said Quarantine to be performed.—Then the above written obligation shall be void and of none effect or else shall remain in full force and virtue.

No. 230.

SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, received yesterday, in which you state that you have been "directed to transmit for any guidance a Copy of the instructions which have from time to time been transmitted to the District Judge of Colombo, No. 1, North, relative to cases of Small-pox."

I should consider myself wanting in the respect which I owe to Government, were I to conceal from it the expression of my opinion, that I would compromise the Right and Power of the District Court were I as the Judge of it, to recognize the legality of these instructions.

Should a case occur in which this Court is called upon to administer the Law under instructions from Government, I shall record the grounds of my opinion, and the sense of the Supreme Court may be taken upon the matter should the Government think fit so to do by Appeal.

I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obedt servt.

D. A. BLAIR, D. J.

To the Hon'ble the Colonial Secretary.

District Court of Colombo No. 1, South,

Wednesday, 14th June 1837.

Present—D. A. Blair, Esq., Judge; Don Jons F. Dias Modlar, Permanent Assessor; Mr. Jan Lourensz, and Mr. F. T. De Silva sworn Assessors.

On the Application of Don Vicentie under Government Instructions of 14th March 1837, Don Vicentie, father of Don Nicolas, of No. 8, Silver-smith Street, now affected with Small-pox, appears in Court and moves that he may be allowed to enter into Bond for the due observance of Quarantine of his son conformably to the Instructions of the Right Hon'ble the Governor, of date 14th March 1837, the visiting Medical officer having reported that internal separation, and external watching are both practicable with reference to the house in which the said Patient his son is resident, as appears by the Certificate of the said Medical Officer, which he produces in Court together with notice prescribed by the Instructions aforesaid.

In disposing of this Application the Court has the satisfaction of knowing that a reference to the District Court to be allowed to enter into Bond is wholly unnecessary, and therefore that no real or irremediable injury can be done by the Court's refusal to act upon the Government Instructions. No previous Application has been made in this case by the Superintendent of Police or any one else, for a Warrant to remove the son of the Applicant, nor does there appear any intention to do so, under the circumstances of the case, viz. that the house of the Patient admits of being placed under Quarantine and that the Applicant is ready to give Bond that the Quarantine shall be duly and faithfully observed. These are the conditions upon which the Government, acting as the guardian of the public safety, says that it will waive its right of enforcing a removal to the Hospital. The Applicant being willing and ready to comply with these conditions the authority of this Court is in no way requisite to the act being perfected. The placing of the house under Quarantine, is entirely within the power of Government having the consent of the party concerned. The Bond may be executed any where, and surely with as much propriety at the office of the Superintendent of Police as in a crowded Court of Justice. Nor can this Court conceive a single reason why it should be called upon to become a party to such extra-judicial Bonds. On the contrary, where the validity of a Bond may admit of question if put in suit, it appears peculiarly desirable that the Court, before which the question may be tried, should have nothing whatever to do with the execution of it.—That the validity of these Quarantine Bonds may well be doubted must be admitted from the notoriety of the fact that the party who is taken bound to see the Quarantine faithfully observed is not left to the choice of the employment of his own means, in as much as the Government, in whose favor the Bond is conceived, takes upon itself the fulfilment of the obligation by intrusting the Quarantine to its own officers.

Had an Application been previously made in this case for the removal of the Patient and that Application been granted, it may be said that another and a milder course might be construed into acting in opposition to the Court's Decision and into a contempt of its Process. But the remedy in such case is obvious. A motion to have the Warrant recalled, proceeding from the party at whose instance it was issued, would be the regular and competent mode of procedure and would be granted as a matter of course.

It appears, therefore, that the Application to the District Court is altogether unnecessary in as much as the Court's intervention is in no way requisite for effecting the proposed object as between the Government and the Applicant.

But the question remains, is this Court bound to entertain this Application under the Instructions of Government? If these Instructions are Law to this Court they are, it is to be presumed, Law to the Supreme Court in reviewing any Decision of this Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction, for both Courts are bound to administer the same Law—the Law of the Colony. Now the Supreme Court is to recognize Instructions of which it has no Judicial knowledge is more than this Court can say. But it is enough and indeed only proper for this Court to pronounce upon the Law in so far as regards its own Jurisdiction.

This Court does not hesitate to say that it would be compromising its right and its authority were it to recognize as Law Instructions issuing from the Executive Government. That the Regulation No. 2 of 1820 did empower the Government to issue Instructions, to the then existing local Judicature touching its provisions true. But that was an enactment of the then Governor in Council applicable to times which are gone by. One great object of the Charter of 1833 was to put an end to the control which the Executive Government under the habit of exercising over the local Judicature. We find this very clearly set forth in the learned Law Commissioners Report which forms the basis of the Charter. It is there stated that "The Relation thus subsisting between the local Judges and the Executive Government is incompatible with a proper degree of Judicial independence," and the Commissioner proceeds to observe, that in the plan which he had the honor to recommend ALL interference with or control over the local Judges in the exercise of their Judicial functions is transferred to the Supreme Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction. Whatever therefore may have been the state of the Law under the old system of Judicature, it is conceived to be clear beyond doubt, that all right of control on the part of the Executive Government over Courts of Justice is at an end. The Instructions alluded to are consequently in the opinion of this Court inconsistent with the Charter, and so much of the Regulation No. 2 of 1820 as reserves to the Executive Government the power to issue such Instructions, must be held to be rescinded and annulled by the 5th Clause of the Charter, which revolves all Laws and Customs repugnant to it. If the Small Pox Regulation of 1820 is to be taken coupled with such Instructions as Government may think fit to issue,—if these Instructions are to form part and parcel of the Law itself, then this Court can come to no other conclusion than that the entire Regulation is extinct and gone.

This Court is free to confess that the Instructions hitherto issued to it for its guidance are conveyed if not in a very respectful at least in a perfectly inoffensive tone. But this Court cannot shut its eyes to the Instructions of a very different description issued to the District Judge of the adjoining Court, under date 8th April 1837, Instructions which it is painful and fearful to read—and with such a warning before it, it well behoves this Court to take care not voluntarily and by its own act to surrender its Powers and its independence into the hands of the Executive Government.

The opinion which this Court has now expressed, has not been rashly or inconsiderately formed. If erroneous it will be corrected by higher Judicial Authority than its own.

The Judgment of the Court is that the Application be refused first as unnecessary, and secondly as grounded upon Instructions which this Court does not recognize as existing Law.

The Applicant intimates his desire to Appeal against the Decision of the Court.

It is ordered that the case be forwarded in Appeal to the Hon'ble the Supreme Court.

D. A. BLAIR, D. J.

Supreme Court, Saturday, 24th of June, 1837.

In the matter of the application of Don Vincentie under the Government Small Pox instructions of the 14th March 1837.

The application of Don Vincentie for leave to enter Bond for the due observance of Quarantine of his son Don Nicholas, conformably to the Instructions of the Right Hon'ble the Governor, of date 14th March 1837.

On motion of the King's Advocate for a mandate in the nature of a Mandamus to D. A. Blair, Esquire, the District Judge, requiring him to allow the said deponent to enter into a Bond as prayed for, the said motion being grounded on an affidavit from the said Don Vincentie setting forth the refusal of the said District Judge to issue such warrant in terms as follows:—

"Don Vincentie, residing at No. 8, Silversmith Street, maketh oath and saith, that on the 12th instant the Medical Sub-Assistant, Mr. John Loftus, came to his house to examine a son of the Deponent named Don Nicholas who was there sick. That Mr. Loftus certified that the said Don Nicholas was affected with Small Pox and then gave to the Deponent the annexed notice marked A.

"That on the 14th instant he, the deponent, did accordingly apply to David Anderson Blair, Esq., the District Judge of the District Court No. 1, South, to allow this Deponent to enter into the Bond described in the said notice conformably to the Right Hon'ble the Governor's instructions of the 14th March 1837, and that the said District Judge refused such application as appears in the Proceedings hereunto annexed marked B."

Sworn before me the 21st day of June 1837, at chambers.

(Signed) W. Rouon, Chief Justice.

Signed in Singalese Characters, Explained by me.

(Signed) D. A. De Alwis, Int. Sup. Court.

A Rule has been granted requiring said D. A. Blair, Esq., District Judge, as aforesaid, to shew cause why such Mandate should not issue, and the said Rule is rendered returnable on Monday next.

In the District Court of Colombo N. 1, South, 26th June 1837.

In the matter of application of Don Vincentie under the Government Small-Pox Instructions of the 14th March 1837.

Appellant.

In making a return to the Rule issued on the motion of the King's Advocate, for a Mandate in the nature of a Mandamus, the District Judge respectfully submits to the consideration of the Supreme Court as follows.

That by the Law of England a writ of Mandamus has for its object to supply the defect of a legal remedy and therefore is only issued out of the Court of King's Bench in the absence or want of a specific legal remedy. That the like holds by the Law of Holland which considers a Mandate Penal as "odious and hateful and contrary to the Disposition of the written Law," and therefore an extraordinary remedy of Justice, which does not take place where there is an ordinary remedy by Law open.

That waiving all discussion as to the extent of the power of the Supreme Court to issue Mandates in the nature of Writs of Mandamus, it is submitted that such Writ ought not to be granted in the present Case, in as much as the applicant has a specific legal remedy by Appeal.

That the alleged right claimed by the applicant arises out of the Regulation No. 2 of 1820. That the determination of all questions arising out of the said Regulation, and the exercise of all the Powers committed by it, belong to the Jurisdiction of the District Courts constituted by the Charter of 18th February 1833, and to no other authority whatsoever. That further the Ordinance No. 6 of 1833 expressly declares that all powers and authorities by Law conferred on the several Courts then about to be abolished or on the Judges thereof, "shall and may be exercised by the District Courts about to be established." That in point of Law, therefore, the Matter of right claimed by the Applicant is cognizable by the District Court. That in point of fact the application was made purposely and expressly to the District Court as appears from the Proceedings annexed to the affidavit on which the Rule is grounded marked B, as well as from the Affidavit of the District Judge hereunto annexed. That the alleged right so claimed being therefore a matter of which the District Court may take Cognizance by way of Original Jurisdiction, and the District Court having in fact taken cognizance thereof and pronounced its decision there in Appeal is the specific legal remedy against any wrong done by the District Court.

That it is the clear and manifest intention of the Charter that the legal remedy by Appeal should be of the most comprehensive kind, so as to include every alleged denial of a legal right by any District Court, and to exclude none. That this object is effectually attained by the provisions of the 31st clause which extends the remedy of Appeal to every matter or thing of which a District Court may take cognizance. That the said Clause has hitherto been interpreted by the Supreme Court in a large and comprehensive sense without distinction as to whether there may have been one or more parties before the District Court, and acted upon accordingly. That in particular the Judgments of the Supreme Court on the 7th September 1836, in the matter of the application of V. W. Vanderstraeten, and on the 20th February last, in the case of Wakwellegammegey Nona Baba, afford precedents of the competency as well as efficacy of Appeal against the decision of a District Court on the application of a single individual claiming a supposed right, and alleging a denial of Justice.

It is therefore submitted, that in as much as there is a specific legal remedy by Appeal in the present case, there is no defect of Justice, and that on this ground a Mandate in the nature of a Writ of Mandamus ought not to issue.

The District Judge has confined the matter of this return to the single point whether a Mandate in the nature of a Writ of Mandamus is the proper course of proceeding, there being nothing, it is conceived, in this Rule requiring him to shew cause why he should not, as District Judge, comply with the application as set forth in the Affidavit on which the Rule is grounded.

D. A. BLAIR, District Judge.

David Anderson Blair, District Judge of the District Court of Colombo No. 1, South, maketh Affidavit and saith that on the 14th instant Thomas Oswin, Esquire, Superintendent of Police, appeared as such before the District Court of Colombo No. 1, South, and applied to the said Court on behalf of Don Vincentie, that the said Don Vincentie should be allowed to grant Bond for the quarantine of his son in terms of the Government Instructions at the 14th March 1837; that the said Superintendent of Police upon being asked whether he made this Application to the District Judge personally or to the District Court, distinctly and unequivocally stated that he made his application to the Court,—and that should the Court, as it had done in two former instances, refuse to comply with his application it was his intention to Appeal. That it appearing doubtful whether the said Superintendent of Police could under the said Government Instructions properly make the application in his own name, he the said Superintendent of Police, asked the Court to entertain the application in the name of the said Don Vincentie who was then in attendance. That the said Don Vincentie thereupon made his application to the District Court to be allowed to enter into Bond, which application was entertained and decided by the said Court in the manner set forth in the Proceedings marked B, annexed to the Affidavit of the said Don Vincentie.

Sworn to before me, the 26th day of June, 1837

At Chambers.

WILLIAM ROUGH, Chief Justice.

JUNE 26, 1837.

THE HON'BLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE.

I had indulged a strong hope, that in respect of acts required to be performed by District Judges under Regulation. No. 2 of 1820, all discussion had ceased, and that Government and District Judges alike, under the pressure of severe circumstances from without, had met each other cordially, the former, waiving the exercise of any alleged harsh prerogative it might stand on through its possession of ruling authority—the latter not too deeply giving way to conscientious scruples.

This, however, has not been the case, and although in the present instance no immediate injury can arise from delay in pronouncing on opinion upon the subject-matter, yet as a difference of judgment in respect of what may be termed strict right prevails, the Supreme Court is called on to interpret and decide the question.

It is an honour due to the Supreme Court, but it is at the same time one which, as Chief Justice of the Court, I would gladly have had disposed of in another way, as to the particular instance before us. The known disinclination avowed by me in any manner to trench upon the independency, as imagined, of our District Courts established under the Charter, I could not hide if I would, nor have I any desire so to do. It is with extreme unwillingness therefore that I address myself to the determination which has now become unavoidable.

Placed though we are in a Colony, and consequently a territory dependent on, and subordinate to a distant Mother-country, yet the maxim applied by a great deceased Statesman and philosopher politician to Governments of an higher and wider order than our own in Ceylon, is not untrue, neither is it wanting in due proportion of its weight here—"Whatever is Supreme in a state ought to have as much as possible," says this sagacious writer, "its judicial authority so constituted as not only not to depend upon it, but in some sort to balance it. It ought to give a security to its justice against its power, and ought to make its Judicature, as it were, some-thing insic to the State."

Had an arrangement, according to the mediocrity of the authority for the remedy, has been designed, and in a great measure, it is, by the plan of the Charter under which we might be considered administration of Justice and the Law Decision and the Supreme Court and the District Courts remedy in su-of the Island, the Supreme Court exercising an Appellate Jurisdiction over all District Courts. But there has prevailed an opinion, embraced by very many of our best-instructed District Judges (and far more uniformly than is generally conceived) that the Supreme Court reaches District Courts only by means of Appeal, and that further, it reaches not the persons of District Judges, as individual heads of their Courts. Holding this opinion of their own inviolability in reference to the Supreme Court, it cannot much be wondered at that they deem themselves completely free from the interposition of the Executive, save in the two great points of as Judges, their creation and their suspension and removal.

That they should pride themselves as British subjects in being British Judges, is to their praise and credit; and undoubtedly it is our duty as British Judges to cherish in them that same spirit of independency and manly uprightness which we feel ourselves. It may not then be inexpedient in elucidation of this matter, to consider how this declared opinion of theirs may have had birth.

The late Supreme Court was doubtless, according to the notion and feeling, prevailing at the time of its formation, amongst English statesmen and Lawyers, intended as a sort of balance to the Executive. Far, however, in point of fact, from its being so thought, it soon by the Executive here itself was holden to be an excrescence and an encumbrance. Trial by Jury itself extended among the natives, was reputed to be an idle speculation—a fantastic innovation. I have had occasion before to observe that this adverse jealousy of the Supreme Court, cherished by and indulged in, on the part of the former Government, produced necessarily its effect upon the Courts and Magistracy of the Island. They too from time arrayed themselves in opposition to the powers of the Supreme Court—and any act of jurisdiction exercised by it under the 83d Clause of its Charter, and as far at least as sentiment went, condemned. The Regulations of Government (the Executive and the enacting Legislator being one and the same) mainly indeed were addressed to Provincial Judges, Government Agents, Sitting Magistrates, and Justices of the Peace. They scarcely were designed to operate upon the Supreme Court, nor did it often happen that they met the ear of the Supreme Court. All idea, therefore, of the Supreme Court being Supreme, in anything but name, was not only not encouraged, but it became in the eyes of Government a sort of Lese-Majeste against itself, to consider it as Supreme.

But with regard to the High Court of Appeal. It was a Court distinct from the Supreme Court having its own officer, its own Seal, its own Appellate Authority—but in no manner framed in support of the dignity of the Supreme Court, except that the Judges (then two) of the Supreme Court, had seats on its Bench.

This then produced no effect on the minds of the Provincial and other Magisterial Courts of Island favourable to the authority of the Supreme Court, but rather the contrary. The limitation of the Right of Appeal from the Provincial Courts in regard to the sum, the value of the litigated matter together with the institution of Minor Courts of Appeal in respect of yet smaller subjects of Appeal from the Sitting Magistrates' Court—these suits in Appeal all verging towards, and all being connected with the Government,—there arose a disposition almost implacable towards the Supreme Court. The popular practice and usage became a narrowing and shutting-out, as far as it could be accomplished, of the action of the Supreme Court.

Upon the establishment of the new Charter of 1833, most of the Judicial Magistracies of the Island sincerely, I believe, rejoiced in their emancipation from the control, judicially, of the Executive; the burthen of which they had, I imagine, felt to be frequently inconvenient and severe. But converted into District Courts, with the sole exclusive original jurisdiction, it has not been unnatural for them to suppose that they owed only a restricted obedience to the Supreme Court; since to a Supreme Court before they had been encouraged in refusing all obedience whatsoever, which possibly they could withhold.

From their vicinity to the Court-house in which we sit, it has so happened that the District Judges of Colombo have at various times and at intervals, been called upon personally to answer enquiries, rather, as I am inclined to believe, put to them accidentally, and as questions arising in the course of a matter in Appeal,—than as intended to exercise over them an austere and precise jurisdiction. Some reluctance has occasionally been exhibited in opposition to this practice of supervision exercised by the Supreme Court. It certainly, however, always appeared to me, and I have so expressed myself, that such a supervision so exercised was designed and intended by the Charter.

But at length the crisis arrived which we have now reached, and which may be considered as being the cause of our present discussion. A severe malady broke out, to prevent the spread of which Government found itself compelled to resort to a Regulation (somewhat irregularly passed) No 2 of 1820 I say, somewhat irregularly passed, because the necessity of so strong an enactment might better have been shewn by an Act of State—a proclamation, forcible but limited in duration. I have no reason to believe that the present Government has not acted upon this Regulation with perfect good faith—and with a desire to render its operation as little oppressive as possible. On the other hand, I cannot but equally declare my conviction that the District Judges, in reference to this Regulation, have endeavoured to do their duty with scrupulous conscientiousness. More especially should it be recollected, that the gentleman, whose conduct is now the subject-matter of our present Rule, to shew cause, threw himself, for the sake of a just determination of what he was to do, into contact with contagion, to which he became personally a victim.

It has been my own opinion that the Act required to be performed by the District Judge, namely, that of granting a Warrant authorizing a removal, was a magisterial act, partaking of a judicial nature. That, as a District Judge, therefore, he was justified in making such order as he was called upon to do, in conjunction with his Court—he deeming the subject-matter to be of importance sufficient to make it advisable that he should so act with his Court. He had a choice—and this is the difference now agitated (if it may be called) before us in the Supreme Court.

It did appear to me, that the order of the District Court, instead of being withdrawn or dismissed, might have been decided upon in Appeal: nor can I entertain a doubt but that such decision would have been instantly attended with submission. Under the exciting circumstances, however, of which he could not but be cognizant, the learned Judge, before whom the point was brought, convinced that the Supreme Court, as must be admitted, had the power of issuing a Mandamus to District Courts, at once resorted to the exercise of that part of our original jurisdiction.

The rest is known—This Court has since decided that an Order of the District Court cannot be heard against on Appeal. Such decision having been given, the present Rule for a Mandamus must be made absolute; for, if there is no remedy to be had in Appeal, Mandamus is that which alone remains.—It must issue.

The Senior Puisne Justice, Mr. Jeremie.—The simple question before this Court, is whether the remedy shall be by Appeal or by Mandate?

And this brings on another; would the remedy by Appeal answer the purpose designed?

I hold that it would not.—The grounds of this opinion are so fully on record, that it is needless to repeat them, I shall only add, that the question, in other words, may be stated thus: is a Magistrate when called upon personally to perform a public duty, which he has declined to fulfil, to be previously heard or to be condemned unheard?

Take the present case, on an Appeal, the Judge is not before the Court, the complainant may enter in the fullest manner upon every topic connected with the point at issue—the Judge cannot reply to him, yet should he be adjudged contrary to his opinion to take this bond, take it he must, under the same penalty of an attachment.

But by means of a rule to shew cause and then by the alternative Mandate, he has a double opportunity of defending the course he has pursued; he may also argue a the bar, personally or by counsel, question the authority of the Court or the Government, or the existence of any law entailing this duty upon him.

This is the only difference between the two remedies. The one is complete, consonant to every rule of law, reason and practice. The other is incomplete, and involves in my view a glaring injustice.

But it is grating to the feelings to receive an order, and the Chief Justice has entered on a very interesting statement of the causes, whence this soreness originates. In so doing, he has rendered these gentlemen and the Court itself an important service,—he has explained what had hitherto appeared inexplicable.

It was in the highest degree singular, that a proceeding adopted towards the most eminent English authorities, the Judge of Arches, the Court of Admiralty, Bishops, Visitors of the Universities, Justices of the Peace salaried and unsalaried throughout England, should prove so repugnant to the local Magistracy of Colombo.

But it seems, they were formerly under the sole control of Government, the late Supreme Court was deemed an excrescence, and they heartily "rejoiced" at being relieved from executive superintendence. But assuredly the District Judges who felt so happy at being relieved from Government control, must have seen that being neither at the head of Judicial Hierarchy nor of the Government, they must continue responsible somewhere; it was too much to expect that in their official proceedings, they were to be at once rendered independent of all local authorities.

When directly and exclusive responsible to the executive, a mere letter could fetter their discretion, they are now ruled by law not by expediency—a vital change—a change at which a "British Judge" might properly "rejoice," but yet a change which has its limits, and within these limits, it is the duty of the principal local expounders of the law to restrict them. For their duty, as required by law, they still must perform as well as any other public functionary.

As to Mr. Blair's personal willingness or reluctance to be guided by the opinion of this Court, if expressed in a shape more consistent with his views of regularity, it might perhaps be very plausibly maintained on the face of these proceedings, that in this instance, at least, though I doubt not a perfectly conscientious officers, he was not included to prove so very submissive, as is supposed. But this is foreign to me. The Court was not,

I conceive, constituted for the purpose of tendering advice, or committing irregularity to suit the inclinations or preconceived notions of any living being. Where two remedies equally regular and applicably concur, I shall be at all times happy to select the milder. But where, as in this case, there is but one, that one I have already felt bound to adopt, and that, on the fullest deliberation, I am of opinion to adopt again.

Monday, the 26th day of June, 1837.

On the application of Don Vicentie under the Government Small-pox instructions of the 14th March 1837.

Vrs.

David Anderson Blair, Esquire, District Judge of Colombo No. 1 South.

The return made by the District Judge of Colombo, No. 1 South, to the Rule issued on the 21st instant, is read and the same having been considered,

On the motion of the King's Advocate, It is ordered that the said Rule be made absolute, and that a Mandate in the nature of a Writ of Mandamus do issue to the said David Anderson Blair, District Judge, as aforesaid, commanding him, as required by the instructions of the Right Hon'ble the Governor of the 14th March last, to take the Bond of the said Don Vicentie in conformity with the application made to him on the 14th instant, or that he do shew cause to the contrary by Wednesday next.

And it is further ordered, that this Mandate be served by the Fiscal of Colombo.

In the Supreme Court of the Island of Ceylon.

William the Fourth, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith,

On the application of Don Vicentie under the Government Small-pox instructions of the 14th March 1837.— Vs. David Anderson Blair, Esq., District Judge of Colombo, No. 1, South.

To the said David Anderson Blair, Esq., District Judge of Colombo, No. 1, South.

We command you that you do as required by the instructions of the Right Hon'ble the Governor, bearing date the fourteenth March last, forthwith accept the bond of Don Vicentie, whose son, Don Nicholas, is affected with Small-pox, in conformity with the application made to you on the fourteenth instant, by the said Don Vicentie, or that you show sufficient cause to the contrary by Wednesday next.

This Mandate is to be served by the Fiscal of Colombo.

Witness the Hon'ble William Roush, Serjeant at law, Chief Justice at Colombo, the twenty-sixth day of June, in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven and of our reign the seventh.

V. W. VANDERSTRAATEN, Registrar.

I do here by Certify, that a Copy of this Mandate has been duly served on the withinnamed David Anderson Blair, Esq., District Judge of Colombo, No. 1.

E. S. WARING, Fiscal.

In the District Court of Colombo No. 1, South, - 28th June 1837.

The Supreme Court having on the 26th Instant, issued a Mandate addressed to the District Judge of Colombo, No. 1 South, Commanding him that he do as required by the instructions of the Right Hon'ble the Governor, bearing date the 14th March last, forthwith accept the Bond of Don Vicentie, whose son, Don Nicholas is affected with Small-pox, in conformity with the application made to him on the 14th instant by the said Don Vicentie, or that he do show sufficient cause to the contrary, the said District Judge respectfully submits for the consideration of the Supreme Court as follows.

That in showing cause against complying with the said Instructions of the Right Honorable the Governor, the District Judge, with due deference to the Supreme Court, presumes that the matter is still an open question. That the District Judge is led to this conclusion by the letters of the Registrar of the Supreme Court, under date the 18th and 19th April last, addressed to the District Judge of the District Court of Colombo, No. 1, North, in reply to a reference made by him upon this point to the Honorable the Judges of the Supreme Court. That the Instructions of the Right Honorable the Governor were issued to the District Judge of the District Court of Colombo, No. 1, South, on the 20th May following. That conformably to the directions contained in the letters abovementioned the District Judge did then consider himself at liberty to exercise his own discretion on the subject. That the District Judge conscientiously believing that he could not as District Judge recognize the authority of instructions from the Executive Government touching any act of the District Court, unless so directed by a decision of the Supreme Court, did convey his opinion to that effect to Government, as will more fully appear from a letter addressed to the Colonial Secretary under date 23rd May last, copy* of which is hereunto annexed.

That holding the question still to be open, the District Judge respectfully suggests, that supposing without admitting, the Regulation No 2 of 1820 as being contrary to the common Law of England as well as of Holland, to have received His Majesty's confirmation as a permanent enactment, so much of the said Regulation as reserves to the Executive Government the power to issue Instructions to the Courts of Justice, or to the Judges thereof, is rescinded and annulled by His Majesty's Charter of the 18th February 1833, which vests in the Supreme Court the sole control over the proceedings of such courts or of a Judge thereof, and revokes all laws and customs repugnant thereto.

That supposing the power to issue such instructions still to exist in the Executive Government, such instructions relate solely to causing the removal by Warrant or not of any person affected with Small Pox, but said Regulation does not empower the executive Government to substitute or impose as an Act of Court and course of procedure, other than the warrant directed by the said regulation,

The District Judge suggests the above as sufficient cause against an alternative Mandate being made peremptory, and prays that the reasons set forth in the decision of the District Court, made in the matter on the 14th instant being, the proceedings marked B. annexed to the Affidavit of the applicant Don Vicentie, may be taken into consideration by the Supreme Court in deciding upon the sufficiency of his return.

D. A. BLAIR, D. J.

Supreme Court, Wednesday, the 28th day of June 1837.
The Senior Puisne Justice—MR. JEREMIE.

The question of an appeal having been disposed of at the last sitting, three new points have been suggested to-day.

Is the Small-pox Ordinance to be considered as law?
Has the Governor a right to issue any instruction under it, to District Judges?

Are the present instructions legal, under that Regulation?

1.—The sole local Legislature in 1829 was the Governor in Council. Now what could be a more fitting matter for the consideration of any Legislature than the measures to be taken to ward off a public calamity. What was a Legislature principally constituted for but to watch over the public safety, or what could be of more paramount importance to that safety than to protect the state from the consequences of any scourge—inundations—contagiations, disease or crime?

But these measures are contrary to the common law, so is every statute, it must be a modification of some pre-existing law, and if there is no pre-existing regulation on the subject, of the common law, this Ordinance therefore was not more contrary to that law than any other enactment framed to meet an emergency, to obviate an impending evil. It was no doubt formerly understood, that the Governor should out of his sole authority inactivate extensively on the laws of the colony he administered; but this involved him in a responsibility towards the Government at home which would judge of the particular act by its necessity, his right as towards the colony was never disputed, and his instructions must have been restricted indeed, if they prevented his taking all necessary measures, however stringent, to stay a public pestilence whether plague or Small-pox. As to the severity, therefore, of this regulation if it be really severe, it is enough that the proper authority deemed it necessary, and to that authority, the Legislature alone, should application be made, by those who conceive it might be beneficially modified. And, as to any peculiarity in the laws of Holland in this respect, these laws were only remarkable for the republican sternness with which they enforced the rule, that all private interests must succumb to the public good. It was may rely on Professor Christain, the very killing of a stork was a capital offence from these animals being useful in destroying certain noxious insects, that undermined their dams.

2.—On the second point—the duties of a magistrate were defined by law—and the orders or instructions of an executive Government were certainly not law. This general principle could not be questioned; but in the present case it did not apply, for when a power such as this has been expressly delegated by the Legislature to any public authority, then whilst the public authority empowered keeps within the scope of its directions all acts, instructions or regulations proceeding from it are the acts of the Legislature as completely as if they were embodied in the original law. In England this occurs repeatedly; at every Session of Parliament regulations of detail in matters of trade and finance, are referred to a Privy Council or to the Treasury or Board of Customs, the Cholera Act has been properly quoted by the King's Advocate. There is another very familiar instance. The Articles of War, are law throughout the King's dominions, yet they are framed and promulgated by the Crown alone, and still are they law; but not by virtue of the King's authority—They are law, under the 4th Section of the Mutiny Act, which prescribes that judicial cognizance shall be taken of the Articles of war, "in all Courts whatever." Again with regard to prisons, certain Justices of the Peace are authorised by the Legislature to frame regulations for their management—I trust, ere long, to see something of the kind here, and could it then be doubted that this Court as well as the Court of King's Bench, now would be bound to take judicial cognizance of such regulations?—Certainly not, yet, country Magistrates cannot assuredly bind the Superior Courts of law. But the legislature can and has done so, in delegating this authority to them.—As to the Charter, it is a law of procedure though a highly important one, and has no reference to the subject.—The local legislature may tomorrow delegate its authority in the manner above mentioned, notwithstanding the Charter, and so it could yesterday.

3.—The third question is, whether the specific instructions now before the Court are within the scope of the powers, confided to the Executive Government by the Regulation.

The Regulation commands the issue of a warrant of removal in every case of Small-pox—"subject to instructions" from the Government—the obvious purpose of this Reservation is therefore to mitigate the severity of the law, and any instructions having that direct and immediate tendency are evidently within its province.

These prescribe the milder measure of a quarantine in the sick person's domicile, when practicable,—most clearly a mitigation; and as to the duties of detail assigned the Magistrate, are they inconsistent with the ordinary duties of Magistrates? I conceive they are not—he was bound to issue a warrant, he now takes a recognizance—he was bound to commit, he holds to bail—I therefore consider these Instructions as completely law, as if they were embodied in the Small-pox Regulation itself.

But on looking them over carefully, it does not appear to the Court that the duty of taking these recognizances, is assigned with sufficient distinctness to the Magistrate; it is indeed said that the applicant shall enter into a "bond," but that he may do before two witnesses. There are no words of command requiring the Magistrate to take this bond; none, it is judicial cognizance, and where the penalties of a refusal are so severe, for the punishment is by fine and imprisonment, the directions to the Magistrate should not be open to a second construction. A peremptory mandate cannot, therefore, issue, until the instructions are amended; but this may be done tomorrow, and in the meantime, the concurrent opinion of the Court, will probably supersede the necessity of a farther application to it.—Should it happen otherwise, its course will be clear; and I doubt not it will act with equal unanimity, vigor and promptitude.

The Mandamus was now to be deemed inoperative upon purely technical grounds; but he was not sorry, that it could be so got rid of. He had thought, that this question might be disposed of in Appeal: the prevailing opinion during three years of the existence of the Charter had been to that effect,—that all mistakes of District Judges were removable by appeal. When it was expressed, that the Regulation of No. 2, 1820, was passed against the Common Law both of England and Holland, the meaning of the observation was this, that the maxim Cuique, suum. Domus, est, per-fugium, was alike established in the system of the Laws of both countries. He had enquired into the history of this Regulation and he found that it created amongst the Burgher inhabitants great alarm. It must be admitted that to Legislate generally for indifferent cases is a matter of extreme complexity; this Regulation seems to have been announced rather in terror than otherwise; for the exercise of it lay dormant for two years or more, after its enactment. Mr. Barnett, a Magistrate, is said first to have had recourse to it: neither has it been much stood upon since.—But the local Government, in its ordinary course of business, seems to have promulgated this as a mere every-day measure.—He, the Chief Justice, has had much experience in Dutch Administration of Law elsewhere, and he cannot but think that the instrumentality of an higher rule should have been exercised in this matter. It is an error to suppose that the Government of the States-General was not a Government of Law—it was a Government of severe, but strictly followed, Law. Now on an emergency of this kind, the Dutch Government would have had recourse to an act of State, an Order Politique (Proclamation) stating the necessity of what else would be a violation of fundamental Law—and the effect of this proclamation would probably have been limited in duration, but renewable; for such proclamation the Governor would have been responsible to the Sovereignty. A learned Burgher might therefore, as a District Judge, knowing in what manner this regulation had passed, and believing it to come before him for consideration, easily have been led to declare it, in the particular instance, extinct and of none effect under clause 56 of the Charter of 1833, but he would also have known that, a proclamation might legally be resorted to immediately, ordering what this regulation enacts, and vindicating its act by the necessity of the case.

Leges quascunque, non sola voluntate sua fecisse Cynites, said solus jussisse.

Politicarum causarum et decretorum politicorum a causis forensibus judiciumque decretis, distinctio—the former, Courts of justice could not meddle with.

Pestle de Republika Batava; Commentaru—

The Supreme Court, however, has decided that this matter must be disposed of by Mandamus and cannot be by appeal.—The Regulation is an existing un repealed Regulation, and the Mandamus falls to the ground simply on a technical ground, as stated.

SIR—I have honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th instant, conveying to me the Right Honorable the Governor's command on the subject of the Instructions issued to me as District Judge and transmitted with your letter of the 20th ultimo.

In reply I have only to assure His Excellency, that the same rigid sense of duty which compelled me in the first instance to refuse recognizing the authority of these instructions, firmly believing them to be contrary to Law and incompatible with my Independence as a District Judge, will, now that they have been pronounced by a decision of the Supreme Court to be Law, equally influence me in giving them their full effect; and I beg to add, that in so far as I am personally concerned such would have been the result even had the last imperative communication been omitted.

INSOLVENT COURT.

August 19, 1837.

In the matter W. F. Clarke and others.

Mr. Justice Nalkin.—The general questions of law involved in the decision of this case have been recently so fully considered in the similar application made with respect to the estate of Messrs. Cullen and Brown, that I need not again discuss them; indeed they were hardly made a matter of controversy at the bar in this case, and I do not feel under any necessity of at all adding to or qualifying the opinion I then expressed. The principles however now have to be applied to a case arising under rather different circumstances, and involving, as it appears to me, questions of more difficulty than most of those which existed in the former case. The result, however, will in my judgment be the same, that the claims made ought to be admitted; and in explaining my reasons for coming to that conclusion, it will be most convenient that I should shortly state the facts as I understand them out of which the claims arise.

At the end of April, in the year 1837, Mr. David Clarke, then the senior member of the long established house of Fergusson and Co., retired from the partnership; he was himself in England at the time, and the different arrangements proposed appear in the first instance to have emanated from the partners here and to have been assented to by him, with some modifications to which I shall presently advert, when he received intimation of them. At that time there were standing in the books of the house sums to the credit of the different partners to the amount of 12,85,103 rupees of which the large portion of 8,31,636, was to the credit of Mr. David Clarke, the retiring partner. A valuation was afterwards made of the accounts of the house, by which it appeared that in the opinion of the continuing partners, there was a deficiency at the time of rupees 6,63,512,—that that was the excess of the whole claim upon the firm over the estimated value of the whole accounts. I shall presently show that they probably estimated the real deficiency a larger amount; an amount not precisely defined or probably even in their own minds completely ascertained, but considerably exceeding this numerical statement of deficiency. This could not make the house in the estimation of the partners an insolvent house; for the sums to the credit of the individual partners amounted to very nearly 13 lakhs, and all these claims were subordinate to the creditors of the house. There was enough in opinion of the partners, to pay all the creditors and leave something for the partners of the house who had any claims against it; but certainly not enough to allow Mr. David Clarke to retire with eight lakhs and upwards, if the sum which he was to claim from the house was to depend on a real account of the value of his interest in

If this were the premises on which the present claim were to be determined, the utmost that his assignees could obtain by the present motion would be a reference to see to what extent, if at all, his claims could be supported. And on such a reference it would be necessary to enquire, what were the opinions of the partners as to the condition of the firm, and how far fairly or fraudulently entertained, and what was at the time, on an estimate really correct, the balance between its liabilities and resources.

But this is not the real question in the case, for there was a regular deed of dissolution, and certain contracts and engagements entered into between Mr. David Clarke and the continuing partners. The whole question therefore turns on the provisions of that deed and those engagements; what these amounted to; how far they can be upheld in law; and as it does so, it is rather singular that the provisions of the deed itself have not been at all adverted to, in the argument on either side. They consist, however, of a complete dissolution of partnership, a complete transfer of Mr. David Clarke's interest in the partnership effects to the continuing partners, a complete release by them to David Clarke for all partnership responsibilities, and a complete acknowledgment, agreement, and covenant that the balance due to David Clarke was a just claim against the house and should be paid as such by the continuing partners. On the face of the deed, therefore, the transaction was buying out of the retiring partner by the continuing partners, the price paid being the taking upon themselves the whole liability for the sum standing to the credit of David Clarke in the books of the firm, a sum, as I have already observed, larger than any thing which would be due to him, even in their own estimation as his mere proportion of actual partnership property. It is, however, questionable whether this was exactly the real state of the transaction. A valuation was made, not of all the debts due to the house, nor even of all those considered as in some degree doubtful, but of all those on which any claim to have actual allowance made was considered to exist. But this apparently was not for the purpose of ascertaining the real and exact value of David Clarke's interest, to see what property he might take out of the firm, but rather to see what was the state of the firm, and how much therefore the continuing partners could afford to allow him to remove from its funds. As between himself and the firm he had a right to the whole balance standing to his credit; but he could not be allowed to remove it, or to hold that claim and to be relieved from the liabilities of a partner if the risk or responsibility of the others thereby became excessive. They do not appear to have felt it conclusively so, for they executed the deed of dissolution in which they treated him as entitled to the whole amount, but they seem to have felt it unreasonable that he should receive the whole for a sum of two lakhs was deducted in account. This was done with David Clarke's concurrence and with an expression of his opinion that a larger deduction might reasonably have been made; but it appears to have been done on the proposition of the continuing partners, though that proposition is not in evidence, except in as much as David Clarke's letter of 3rd Oct. 1828, refers to it and adopts it. There might perhaps under these circumstances be some doubt, notwithstanding the stipulations of the deed, whether the 2,31,636 was at any time to be considered as David Clarke's property, and the subsequent remission of two lakhs as his gratuitous act; or whether the 2,31,636 was to be treated as all he was ever really entitled by their bargain to receive. But that he was at all events entitled to this extent, and that upon the deduction of the 2 lakhs from his account, the remaining balance became the debt due to him, by the contract, an agreement of all the parties, there can be no doubt. It is on the footing of that balance that the present claim is made; and it must therefore be supported on the principle formerly discussed, unless there be something to impeach the good faith of that transaction.

That it was a transaction purporting of good faith as between the partners themselves, it seems impossible to doubt. Mr. David Clarke's chief anxiety seems to have been that he should not be allowed to receive more than he fairly ought. The valuations which are of less importance in the case than if made for the purpose of really assessing Mr. David Clarke's interest, but still very material evidence are made entirely by the continuing partners. Their inclinations might make their valuations sanguine, but their interest was to estimate the allowances as high as possible, for on them rested their claim to make any deduction from the sum due by the firm to David Clarke. This evidence of good faith does not follow necessarily in all cases when the valuation is made by continuing partners, for instance in 1832 the continuing partners thought it necessary to allow a certain sum to be paid to Mr. Smith's estate, not because they thought he had any real claim in the partnership property, but partly out of consideration for his long services and principally because the firm could not afford to let it be known that their senior partner had died worth nothing. But generally speaking, the allowances claimed by the remaining partners against an outgoing partner will be claimed to their full extent, and I see nothing in the circumstances of the case to make one doubt that they did actually claim against Mr. Clarke all that they felt themselves entitled to demand. They seem, indeed, to have been aware that the condition of the firm was still in some respects estimated too favorably, but this, which would be of great importance if the object had been to ascertain the exact value of David Clarke's interest, is of little or none where the question was, what they would afford to let him take out? It would form one of the elements of their calculation that there was an undefined risk of this kind cast upon them, but it furnished no reason for supposing that they did not think it fairly worth their while to purchase David Clarke's interest at the price they gave for it. This risk being included, the question being merely as to the good faith of the transaction, it is unnecessary in this as in the former cases to enquire into the reasonableness, if we are satisfied of the honesty of those valuations and estimates.

But, however fair these arrangements might be when considered merely as between the parties to part them, the most material and the most difficult question remains how far they were, even in the opinion of the parties, fair towards the creditors,—how far Mr. David Clarke or the remaining partners of the house could have felt that he was entitled as against the creditors, to withdraw or establish a separate and individual claim for so large a sum as that allowed to him, even if the amount of allowances made on the valuation of 1827 was considered to be the true estimate? According to the best opinion they could form, there was then a deficiency of 6,63,612; the sums to the credit of the different parties were only 13,85,103, and the real assets of the house, therefore, was, after satisfying all creditors, not partners only, the difference between these sums or 6,31,491. Mr. David Clarke took out 6,31,636, after the deduction of the two lakhs was made, and left the house therefore even on this shewing not absolutely able to meet its engagements. I have already said, however, that the real deficiency was probably estimated at a larger amount. Mr. Fergusson's evidence is that the statement of 1827, does not pretend to be a complete estimation of what would be the probable loss on each account, but only of the proper allowances: "It was not a statement of our creditors but merely an adjustment between ourselves; the allowances could not in any case be more but would in many cases be less than the estimated amount of loss. In most houses the incoming partners gave a bonus, in ours we did not, but this difference stood in lieu of it." In other words, the continuing partners in consideration of the retirement of an outgoing partner and their own increased interest in the business, took upon themselves a certain portion of risk and probable loss, besides those ascertained risks or losses which were made the subjects of estimate and allowances. In estimating, therefore, the actual or ever supposed solvency of the house in 1827, some conditions must be made to the deficiency above the numerical amount of the allowances in the figured statement. A similar conclusion may be deducted in a different manner. The year ending in April 1828, was, or was at least considered to be, a year of prosperity to the house. At the close of it a valuation was made, not for any purpose of assessment between outgoing and incoming partners, but merely to determine the best mode of conducting the business of the house and the amount of dividend that might properly be made among the partners. These dividends were not removed from the liabilities of the house, and there was therefore no reason, except the natural inclination to look at the favorable side of all matters of interest, to declare a dividend unreasonably large; nor was there any adverse or conflicting interests nor any distinction between retiring and continuing partners, to make it proper or reasonable to omit any risks. In their estimation every allowance that ought to be made was made to the benefit or disadvantage of all the partners; and as they were interested to know the truth, it would be their object to make all reasonable deductions and accordingly we have the opinion, of one of the partners, that the estimate then made, though perhaps still somewhat too favorable and sanguine, was more rigidly and correctly made than any of the proceeding. According to that estimate the deficiency was reduced to 401 rupees, 6,63,211 less than in the estimation of the former year, while the sums standing to the credit of the several partners amounted to 1,130,380 being therefore a sum of 11,299,79 fairly belonging to the partners after satisfying all the creditors 5,08,488 more than in the preceding year. In the same document 7,45,389 is said to have been the balance of profit over loss in the preceding year, a sum exceeding either the diminution of the total deficiency or the increase of the available assets of the partners. The difference may be attributed in part perhaps to the acknowledged inclination on the former valuation not at once to bring every thing down to its real value, and partly to the cause stated by Mr. Ferguson that the bonus to the retiring partners was given in the manner of making them allowances. But the real amount of deficiency would at all events have to be corrected and the correction would be by increasing it. It would seem, therefore, to follow conclusively, that the house was not solvent in the opinion of the partners while Mr. Clarke remained in it, and taking with him the large amount he became entitled to, even after the deduction of the 2 lacs. That there would be a deficiency would also I think necessarily be within Mr. D. Clarke's knowledge, nor would he, as it seems from his letter of 6th November 1828, have been unwilling to make some further contribution to meet it. To this extent, therefore, I must treat him as cognizant of the insolvency of the firm, and as coming within the scope of the observations I made in the case of claims on the estate of Messrs. Cullen and Brown, to which I refer rather than to any higher authority, because, as there may be some apparent inconsistency between these observations and the view I entertain of the present case, it is to them that I must advert in explaining it. I then stated that it appeared from the case "Ex parte Peake," that the mere fact of the insolvency of copartnership at the time of the deficiency of copartnership at the time of the dissolution, does not invalidate the claims of the retiring partners arising out of that dissolution, if it were made fairly between the partners themselves: and that cases may exist, for the dissolution between Peake and ——— was treated as such a case, where the knowledge of the partners that the firm was insolvent would not prevent the dissolution from being a bona fide transaction. It follows that the whole question turns on the existence or non-existence of actual fraud: that there can be no fraud in law, arising out of the situation of the parties of which they were or ought to have been cognizant, but that there must have been fraud in fact. It is perfectly consistent with these views to say, as I should undoubtedly be disposed to say myself, as I understand other Judges to have said here on similar occasions, that in the conduct of a business of the extent and nature of that under question, it would be hardly possible to conceive a case in which a partner entering with the knowledge or rather in the belief that his firm was insolvent, and drawing out a considerable sum of money from, or establishing a personal claim against such insolvent firm, ought not to be considered as attempting fraudulently to withdraw himself from his responsibilities, and to obtain a payment or credit to which he is not entitled. But the decision of Ex parte Peake established this, that is only as evidence of actual fraud, that even knowledge of the insolvency is material, and that the mere fact of insolvency itself is of no importance whatever except as evidence from which that knowledge may be inferred, for the purpose of using it as evidence and as evidence only of the fraudulent design. In other words, however foolish or sanguine the views of the partners may have been, if they were sincere, the arrangements founded on them will be binding.

I proceed to state my reason for thinking this. There is no reason to suspect Mr. David Clarke's retirement to have been a hurried retirement for the sake of getting out of a business which he knew to have become unprofitable or hazardous. On the contrary, he retired after 22 years' partnership, when he was himself in London, and ignorant of the exact state of the firm; and he seems to have been rather surprised that the accounts proved no better than they did. He does not seem to have entertained any notion, that the creditors of the partnership would be finally endangered: his only apprehension appears to have been that if the remaining partners desired to withdraw too much, they would hardly be able to get away from the concern, "because they would not leave the young ones easy," and he expressly states, even while expressing his general dissatisfaction, that "with caution and a moderate way of going on there ought to be a sufficient compensation also, but when that time will come it is difficult to say." I quote these expressions from the letter of 3d October 1828. Its general scope appears to be that the continuing partners would have long to labour for large acquisition, but that with prudence might be attained; an expectation inconsistent with any notion of the permanent insolvency of the house, for if this continued, the remaining partners could have nothing. I see no reason for distrusting the sincerity of those expectations, either on his part or on that of the remaining partners. The transactions of the very next year, on a valuation considered to be more strictly made, and likely to be so as it was made for a different purpose, left the house, in the estimation of the partners, with a large surplus over the debt due, with the exception of the private accounts of the partners themselves, and with only the deficiency of 401 rupees, when those accounts were included. The whole deficiency of the year 1827, on the estimate as I have estimated it, was small in proportion to the extent of the concern: the mere profits of commission on which there was no risk, would, I believe, have extinguished it in a year. Looking to these circumstances, and in some degree also to the opinion expressed by witnesses connected with the firm, but principally to the circumstances themselves, I cannot say that this was such a business as sanguine and speculative men, with the views they then entertained of its condition, might not fairly be willing to continue on the terms they gave for it: nor such a business as Mr. D. Clark, with the same knowledge, might not retire from on those terms, without feeling that he was escaping liabilities by which he was bound to abide. I need hardly say that the mere fact of a party retiring after a long service from business, and contemplating retirement at no very remote period, as the great object of desire for the remaining partners as well as himself, is in India no evidence of distrust of the concern. No Englishman considers himself, or his countrymen, as more than temporary sojourners here, and no man wishes to leave his property involved in all the risk and liabilities of a business, when he has himself permanently quitted the same. On the whole view of these matters, after the result it is difficult to suppose the arrangements in question soundly or wisely made; but I feel it impossible to believe them made otherwise than fairly, and the adjudication is that the claim arising out of them must be allowed.—Englishman, August 21.

ALLIPORE COURT.

ALLIPORE, WEDNESDAY, 26TH JULY, 1837.

Before R. H. Snell, Esq., Joint Magistrate.

ALLEGED FALSE IMPRISONMENT AND EXTORTION OF MONEY.

This case had been pending for some time and came on this day, and was finally disposed of. Rajnarian Doss, of Mullingha, Calcutta, charged Mr. George David Brown, of North Entally, with having falsely imprisoned him on the night of 7th July, instant, and with having tried to extort a sum of money from him under the following circumstances.

That Mr. James Broders on an occasion called on the plaintiff, and informed him that he, Broders, had some years ago deposited a gold watch and a chain with the plaintiff's father Chundernarian Doss, deceased, for a balance of account amounting to rupees 31, 14 annas, and that he, Broders, was then prepared to release it. The plaintiff denied all knowledge of the watch and appendages. That on the 7th instant, Broders again called on the plaintiff and said to him that as he knew nothing of the watch, he, the plaintiff, should accompany Broders to the house of the defendant, and there inform the defendant of his, the plaintiff's, ignorance of the transaction. That on the evening of the 7th instant, the plaintiff accompanied Broders to the defendant's house, and when there the defendant asked "where is my father's watch?" The plaintiff, as before, denied all knowledge of it. The defendant then said that he was determined to have the watch, or that the defendant would imprison the plaintiff until he would pay a thousand rupees. Another gentleman then present at the defendant's house said, "no, give 600 rupees for the watch." The plaintiff made no reply, and having discovered the defendant's motive, wrote a letter to one Joyanarian Doss, an uncle of the plaintiff, informing him of the plaintiff's situation. That Joyanarian came after an hour or so. The defendant on seeing Joyanarian threatened to beat him, but ultimately put him out of the house, and kept the plaintiff prisoner for the whole of that night in a palkee. On the following morning the defendant extorted a letter from plaintiff to Mr. Broders. About 7 that morning Joyanarian, accompanied by a burkundauz of the name of Ulfoo, came to the defendant's house, and from outside of the gate demanded admission, which was denied by the defendant. The burkundauz then sent notice to the thana and Baneemadub jemadar, came and on demanding plaintiff's release, defendant said, that he was about to send the plaintiff to Allipore. The jemadar replied, that if the defendant would deliver the plaintiff to him, the jemadar would forward the plaintiff to Allipore. Defendant refused to comply unless the jemadar granted a receipt for the plaintiff, which the jemadar readily did, and released the plaintiff, between 10 and 11 of the 8th inst. Plaintiff had no witnesses to prove the imprisonment in the palkee, but had three cartmen present to prove the imprisonment at the house of the defendant. That plaintiff is by profession a pedlar to Mr. Henry Martindell.

Mr. Dias, on behalf of the defendant, objected to Joyanarian's deposition being read, as he had purposely absented himself from the trial. Mr. Brown then made the following defence. That one James Broders was nominated guardian by Mr. Brown's father, who entrusted him with a large sum of money and other movable property for the use of Brown and his sister, both then infants. That Broders had made away with all money belonging to the infants, leaving them destitute. That after Brown arrived at full age, one day, in conversation with Broders, he was informed of the gold watch, chain and appendages as being in mortgage with the plaintiff's father for a sum of thirty-one rupees fourteen annas. That Brown agreed to pay the amount of the mortgage and demanded the release of the watch by Broders. That on another occasion Broders informed Brown that Chundernarian Doss, the mortgagee, had died, but that his son Rajnarian stated that the watch was either lost or mislaid, but that Rajnarian was willing to make Brown a fair consideration for a watch, and if Brown had no objection he, Broders, would bring Rajnarian to Brown's house to effect the above arrangement. Brown agreed, and on the evening of the 7th instant, both Broders and Rajnarian called at Brown's house. On Brown's asking Rajnarian what arrangement he proposed making, Rajnarian said he was poor and could not give more than two hundred rupees for the watch, &c. Broders had previously informed Brown that the watch was well worth from six to eight hundred rupees. Brown therefore declined Rajnarian's offer and after a great deal of conversation Rajnarian agreed to give six hundred rupees for the watch, &c., and was so pleased at having closed the bargain at that price, that he immediately asked for paper, saying that he, Rajnarian, would send to his uncle Joyanarian to bring the money and to witness the above final arrangement. That Rajnarian accordingly wrote the letter and delivered it to Broders, who accompanied by Mr. Marley took it to Joyanarian, who after receiving it desired the gentlemen to wait a few minutes and that he would procure the cash and accompany them to Brown's house, which he did. On meeting Rajnarain, Joynarain asked if he, Rajnarain, was in earnest about the six hundred rupees. Rajnarain replied in the affirmative, and Joynarain then said he would return home and bring the money in half an hour and desired Rajnarain not to quit the house till he returned with the money. Joynarain did not make his appearance all that night and not until 10 A. M., of the following morning, when Brown was surprised at seeing him accompanied by the Jemadar demanding to release of Joynarain. This request surprised Brown, and on discovering the deceit attempted by Rajnarain, he refused to deliver Joynarain up unless the jemadar would receive him in custody. On the jemadar's consenting to this arrangement Rajnarain was delivered over. Brown denied the false imprisonment and extortion in toto and urged that Rajnarain had come to his house of his own accord and had continued there of his own free will and pleasure expecting his uncle's return, and that there was nothing to prevent his leaving if he chose to do so.

The following witnesses were then called by Rajnarain.

Sookoor, garewan, deposed.—That about twelve days ago, as he was passing North Entally in his cart, Baneemadub, jemadar, stopped him and did the same to Koochil and Deenoo garwans and told them to witness his, the jemadar's, proceedings at the defendant's gate. The jemadar called out "Rajnarain Doss are you here?" and a voice from within replied "yes". That Joynarain then said, Rajnarain "come away" and Rajnarain replied I cannot, "they will not let me out." Saw Rajnarain in the verandah of the defendant's house. Saw Rajnarain brought out by the jemadar from the defendant's house. The jemadar informed witness that he had given a receipt for Rajnarain's release. Rajnarain was not tied, nor did he complain of bad treatment. Rajnarain was standing in the verandah of defendant's house. The outer gate of defendant's house was shut, Rajnarain said nothing to witness.

Cross examined by Mr. Dias.

Witness was only standing outside of the gate, and observed the gate was shut, but did not try if the gate was shut or open. The gate was about four or five cubits in height.

Koochil, garewan, deposed, to all that Sookoor had said, but that he saw the plaintiff in the hall of the defendant's house and on being cross examined by Mr. Dias he acknowledged that he did not try if the gate was shut or open and that its height was from three to four cubits. Deenoo, garewan, did the same. Mr. Dias then called the following witnesses.

John Marley deposed.—That on Friday, the 7th day of July, one James Broders, accompanied by one Rajnarain Doss, came to the house of the defendant between 6 and 7 P. M. of that day. Rajnarain, the defendant and Broders, had some conversation regarding a gold watch and appendages, and deponent heard Rajnarain offer the defendant the sum of 200 rupees as a consideration for the watch, but which the defendant refused to accept. The parties above named then had a conversation for some time, after which deponent heard Rajnarain say to the defendant that he would give the defendant the sum of 600 rupees for the watch immediately, on the defendant's agreeing to the terms, deponent was desired by Rajnarain to take charge of a letter which Rajnarain of his own free will and accord wrote in the presence of deponent, desiring deponent to take it to Rajnarain's uncle's house where deponent receive the sum above mentioned. Deponent not being the house of Rajnarain, took Broders to have his house pointed out to him, the deponent, and on arriving at the house Broders called a servant, and on the inmates of the house being duly informed that the deponent was waiting, one Joynarain Doss, representing himself as the uncle of Rajnarain, came out of the house to the deponent and took the letter, who on reading it desired deponent to wait, and that he would procure the money and accompany deponent and Broders to the defendant's house. After a few minutes Joynarain, accompanied the deponent and Broders to the defendant's house, on arriving where, Joynarain asked Rajnarain "if he really wanted the money," and on Rajnarain replying in the affirmative, Joynarain desired Rajnarain to wait at defendant's house until he returned with the money. Joynarain never came back, and Rajnarain remained at Brown's house of his own free will and consent expecting his uncle, and was not a prisoner, nor was he subjected to either abuse, maltreatment, or any description of violence.

The paper produced is not the one written by Rajnarain to his uncle: that was old, dirty China paper, and the ink was of a darker colour. The gate of Brown's house is about seven feet high, and the road is lower by 14 inches than the compound of Brown's premises.

James Broders deposed.—That he was appointed. Guardian by the father of Mr. George David Brown, defendant in this case. Deponent being after some years in great distress was obliged to mortgage a watch, chain and key, all respectively constructed of gold, belonging to the defendant's father, to one Chundernarain Doss, deceased, and that on the defendant calling on the deponent for the watch and appendages deponent called upon Rajnarain Doss, the son and heir of the deceased Chundernarain Doss, and was by Rajnarain informed that the watch and appendages were mislaid and that Rajnarain was willing to make good the value of the watch, &c. if the defendant would agree to moderate terms and requested deponent to take him Rajnarain to the defendant's house. Deponent communicated this to be defendant, and on Friday the 7th instant, Rajnarain of his own free will and accord accompanied deponent to the defendant's house where, after much conversation, Rajnarain ultimately agreed to allow the defendant the sum of six hundred rupees for the watch, &c., the defendant making good the value of the original mortgage.

The witness then fully corroborated the defence and the examination of the preceding witness, and on cross examination by Mr. Dias, also denied the letter produced to be the one originally written by Rajnarain, and stated that the gate was of too great a height to admit of persons from the road seeing into Mr. Brown's house.

Mr. Dias closed the defence and submitted that Rajnarain had not a case until Joynarain had agreed with Baneemadub, jemadar, between whom three common garewans were procured to substantiate a serious charge against his client. That the fact as proved in evidence was sufficient to convince the magistrate of the character of the charge; besides which the garewans all deposed to having seen Rajnarain, one in the verandah, and the other in the hall, which was impossible after what fortunately came out on their cross-examination as to the height of the gate, and as to neither of the garewans having tried to open the gate, which made it a question whether the gate was shut at all. Both Messrs. Marley and Broders had fully substantiated the defence and Mr. Dias did not see how such a charge could be entertained.

The magistrate, after summing up the whole of the evidence, dismissed the case.

SUDDER DEWANNY ADAWLUT.

JULY 1, 1837.

Before D. C. Smith, Esq., Judge.

BHOOWAN SING, APPELLANT.

In this case the petitioner petitioned that his being dissatisfied with the order passed in his case by the Judge of Zilla Behar of the 3rd October 1836, did on the 23rd day of December appear before the additional Principal Sudder Aumeen of the Zilla, and sign a Mooktarnama in his presence in the Court, and attached the official copy of the Zilla Judge's order of the 3rd of October 1836, and despatched them both by dawk on that very day to a mooktar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in whose name the mooktarnama was signed by him, with a letter of instructions how to act for him in this case, and produced the dawk receipt, dated the 23rd December 1836, in corroboration of his statement. And Moonshy Mohomed Ullee, a vakel of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in confirmation of this petitioner's statement, deposed this day in the Sudder Court, that Baingah Sing, on receipt of the mooktarnama and the other papers despatched by this petitioner by dawk to his address, negotiated with this deponent with an intention to engage his services as the vakel of Bhogwan Sing in this case; but before this negotiation could be completed, Baingah Sing was sentenced to be confined in the Zilla jail of Alipoor by R. H. Rattray, Esq., one of the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, for a contempt of Court. Baingah Sing, after his release from the jail, wished to renew the negotiation with this deponent; but as he contemplated preferring a complaint to the Governor-General in Council against Mr. Rattray, for false imprisonment, this deponent declined transacting any business with him, and this is the reason why this matter was delayed.

The presiding Judge remarked, that reckoning the period allowed to appellants to file their appeal from the decision of the Minor Courts, viz. 3 months, from the 12th day September 1836, the date of the 1st order of the Zilla Judge on this petitioner's cases to the 23rd December 1836, it would appear that this petitioner had exceeded the period by 12 days; but the Court felt disposed to calculate this period from the 3rd day of October 1836, the date of the final order of the Zilla Court, and by that reckoning the petitioner's appeal on the 23rd of December would be 10 days within the prescribed time and admissible by the Court, and it was admitted.

In this petition of appeal, this petitioner stated, that a person named Furhad Ally complained against another person named Bubur or Bubur Allee for 1506 rupees; and having obtained his decree seized Bubur Allee's share, viz. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the village of Daudpour in the pergunnah of Ghoo-Zilla Behar, in conformity to this decree, and had a precept dispatched from the Judges Court to the Zilla Collectorate to sell the seized lands in satisfaction of this decree. In obedience to the order, the land was put up for sale, and this petitioner purchased it for 575 rupees, and paid the purchase money in to the Collector's office. Subsequently Furhad Ullee petitioned the Zillah Judge, stating, that those lands had been sold for much less than their value, and prayed the Court to order the Collector to cancel the sale, and resell them for not less than 1,500 rupees, the amount of his decree; and offered to purchase them himself for that sum, in satisfaction of his decree if no person bid higher for them. The Zilla Judge on this petition issued a precept to the Collector on the 12th September 1837, to resell the lands but not to dispose of them under 1,500 rupees. Against this order this petitioner filed a petition at the Zilla Judge's Court, praying that as he had bona fide purchased these lands and paid their purchase money into the Collectorate, that this order of the 12th Sept. 1836 be recalled, and the sale be confirmed. This petition was rejected by the Zillah Judge on the 3d October 1836, who confirmed his order of the 12th September 1836, and the lands were subsequently put up for sale and brought in by Furhad Allee for 1,500 rupees in satisfaction of his decree. Dissatisfied with this proceeding of the Zilla Judge, this petitioner filed the present appeal.

This day this petition was heard before Mr. D. C. Smith, one of the Judges of the Sudder, who opined that the order of the Judge was inconsistent and could not be maintained, because the lands had been sold by an order from the principal Sudder Aumeen's Court and not the Judge's Court; and if they were sold for under value, Furhad Allee ought to have petitioned that functionary and not the Zilla Judge to cancel the sale and have the property put up again for sale. Beside this, the Sudder Judge remarked, that, many petitions for a resale had been complied with by the Zilla Judge, and the resale on those petitions had been on an appeal to the Sudder Court cancelled, and the former sale confirmed. For if this Court were to sanction the resale of landed property on every plea of its having been sold for a sum considerably below its value, there would be no end to these resales. If Furhad Ullee could purchase the land for the full amount of his decree on the 2nd sale of it, what was there to prevent his so doing when the land was put up for sale in the first instance.

The Judge, under all the circumstances of this case, issued an order that the 2nd sale of these lands, in conformity to the order of the Judge of Zilla Behar of the 12th Sept. 1836, being uncalled for in the opinion of this court, it cannot be maintained, and therefore it ordered it to be cancelled, and the primary sale of those lands in which this petitioner was the purchaser be confirmed; and this petitioner be put in possession of those lands and the 575 rs. the purchase money, be made over by the collector to the principal Sudder, in part payment of the decree of Furhad Allee against Bubur Allee, and Furhad Allee refund all the rents he may have received for these lands on this second sale to this petitioner. It was then ordered that a precept with a copy of this order be dispatched with all convenient haste to the Judge of Zilla Behar, to put this order into execution.

In the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, a petition was filed by a person named Bykunth Nath. The petition stated, that he had a case in the Moonshiff's Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, for the possession of some lands assessed at about 200 rupees the annual jumma. This case was decided against him by the Moonshiff, whilst he was sick, and the time allowed him by the Government regulations to file a petition of appeal from this decision had expired before he had recovered from his indisposition. After his recovery, he filed his petition of appeal in the Judge's Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, and stated in it the cause of the delay which had prevented his filing this petition of appeal earlier. The Zillah Judge, before whom this petition was heard, overruled the petitioner's plea of indisposition, abided by the Government regulations, and rejected the petition of appeal. This had necessitated the petitioner, although it was provided by the regulations, that all appeals from the Moonshiff's Court were to be finally decided by the Zillah Judge, to appeal under special circumstances to the award of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut against this order of the Zillah Judge. The Sudder Court took up this petition on the 1st of July 1837, and decided, that although the Government regulations had provided, that all appeal from the decision of an inferior Court must be filed in the superior Court within a limited period, yet it did not bar any special grounds, which might explain any unavoidable circumstances that had occurred, and has caused the delay in the presentation of the petition from being hard and investigated. In the present case, the petitioner had shown sufficient reasons for the delay that had unavoidably occurred in his case, and therefore, there were sufficient grounds for the admission of his appeal. The Sudder Court therefore directed, that this petitioner's appeal be admitted by the Zillah Court, and his case investigated by it.—Hurk. Aug. 16.

BADSHAHEE TENURES.

RULE 1.—When a Badshahee tenure shall be declared liable to assessment, if the original grantee and his successors or representative shall have continued in the uninterrupted possession and management of tenure for a period of sixty years, or if they shall have continued for a period of sixty years, in the uninterrupted receipt of a specific portion of the produce of the lands included in the tenure, under the denomination of rent paid to them by a party occupying, and managing the tenure as their agent or farmer, and not having a proprietary right in the lands, it shall be incumbent on the officer empowered to investigate the lakhiraj title in such tenures to report the circumstances of the case as required by section V. regulation XIII. of 1825, in order that the settlement of the tenure may be authorized to be made with the lakhirajdar, at a jumma assessed on the actual rent produced of the lands, under the general rules contained in regulation VIII. of 1793, VII. of 1822, IX. of 1833, and of 1825, and IX. the tenure when so settled shall be held to be hereditary and transferable, and the party claiming the proprietary right or milkenet in the lands, shall not disturb the possession of the lakhirajdar or his heirs, or representatives, and any suit preferred by such party in a court of judicature shall, as provided for by section II. of the aforesaid regulation, be dismissed with costs.

RULE 2.—If the proprietor or malik of the lands included in a resumed tenure, shall have continued in the possession and management of the lands, after the creation of the tenure, paying the government share of their produce to lakhirajdar, the settlement shall be made with such a proprietor or malik* under the general rules contained in the regulations above mentioned, and it shall be lawful for the Governor of the presidency to grant the lakhirajdar, if in destitute circumstances, such pension for life as may be deemed proper.

RULE 3, CLAUSE 1.—When the settlement of a resumed tenure shall be made with the lakhirajdar under rules, if the proprietor or malik* of the lands included in the tenure, shall have received malikannah in money, kind, or land during the existence of the lakhiraj tenure, he shall continue to receive the same or an equivalent.

CLAUSE 2d.—If the party claiming the proprietary right or milkenet in the lands of the resumed tenure, shall not be in the receipt of malikannah at the time of the resumption of the tenure, he shall, nevertheless, be considered entitled to malikannah, provided he shall prove to the satisfaction of the revenue authorities that he has been in the receipt of it within the twelve years* antecedent to the resumption, or that he has within that period, preferred a claim to it before a competent tribunal, and that such claim is well founded.

RULE 4.—The nature and amount of the malikannah* allowed under the preceding rule shall be recorded in the settlement proceedings, and if the malikanah be enjoyed in the shape of a specific portion of land, the limits of such portion shall be defined with proper marks, and described in the map accompanying the proceedings of settlement.

RULE 5.—Malikanah allowed under rule 3, if receivable in money, shall be added to the jumma payable to government by the lakhirajdar, when the settlement of the lands on which it is chargeable may be concluded, (due allowance having been made for the same in the terms of settlement with that party,) and shall be paid to the malik entitled to it by the collector.

RULE 6.—If the party claiming the proprietary right shall be allowed malikanah under rule 3, he shall be entitled to a money compensation for loss of settlement, in addition to the annual malikanah allowance awarded to him, which compensation shall be calculated at ten years' purchase on the difference between his malikanah allowance, and the zemindaree profits (malikanah inclusive,) which he would have received annually, had the settlement been made with him, the said zemindaree profits being assumed at 20 per cent. on the gross jumma-bundee or rental of the lands.*

RULE 7.—No claim to malikanah or to compensation for loss of settlement, shall be entertained, which shall not be preferred to the revenue authorities previous to the sanction by government of settlement with the lakhirajdar, nor shall any claim not so preferred in the first instance be cognizable in the course of justices.

RULE 8.—If a lakhirajdar entitled to settlement under rule 1, refuse to engage on terms approved by the Sudhler Board of Revenue, the settlement for his tenure shall be made with the proprietor or malik of the lands included in the tenure, if there be one, under the general regulations, and the recusant lakhirajdar shall not be entitled to any allowance of malikanah.

RULE 9.—If the title deeds on which a lakhirajdar claims to hold his lands free of assessment, shall have been declared by a final judgment of a competent court to have been forged or fraudulently altered, no length of possession either in the occupant or his ancestors shall be held by the revenue authorities to entitle him to a settlement for the lands; but the settlement shall be made with the proprietor or malik of the lands if there be one under the regulations. But this rule shall not preclude the government in its executive capacity, from admitting the disinterested lakhirajdar to settlement, if with reference to length of possession or other circumstances, it should be deemed right so to admit him. Nor shall it endamage the claim of any party who may hold a tenure by right of purchase, and who shall prove to the satisfaction of the revenue authorities that the purchase was made by him in good faith, and in the belief that the title deeds previously forged or fraudulently altered, were good and valid documents.

i. e. tenures under grants and other hadshukhs.

RULE 1.—Clause 1st. When a hookamee tenure shall be declared liable to assessment, if the original grantee, and his successors, or representatives, shall have continued in the uninterrupted possession and management of the tenure for a period of sixty years, or if they shall have continued for that period in the uninterrupted receipt of a portion of the produce of the lands included in the tenure under the denomination of rent paid to them by a party occupying and managing the tenure as their agent or farmer, and not having a proprietary right in the lands, it shall be incumbent on the officer empowered to investigate the lakhiraj title in such tenures, to report the circumstances of the case as required by section V. regulation XIII. 1825, in order that the settlement may be authorized to be made with the lakhirajdar, and the tenure when so settled shall be held to be hereditary and transferable, and the party claiming the proprietary right or milkenet in the lands shall not disturb possession of the lakhirajdar, or his heirs, or representatives and any suit preferred by such party in a court of justice shall, as provided for by section II. of the aforesaid regulation, be dismissed with costs.

Clause 2d. If the original grantee, and his successors or representatives shall not have been in the possession and management of the tenure under the resumed grant for so long a period as sixty years, but shall have obtained possession of it previous to the 1st of December 1790, the settlement shall be made with the lakhirajdar in the manner provided for in the foregoing clause, but any dispute regarding the proprietary right or milkenet in the lands between the grantee and grantor, or other party or their respective heirs, or successors, is to be considered as a matter of a private nature to be determined by the civil courts, and the lakhirajdar shall continue in possession until deposed by a decree of a competent court of justice.

RULE 2.—The jumma or revenue to be paid by a lakhirajdar admitted to settlement for his resumed tenure is to be adjusted according to the following rules.

If the grant of the tenure shall have been made previous to the Bengal year 1178, or the Fussily or Willaity year 1179, according as the tenure may be situated in Bengal, Behar or Orissa (excepting Cuttack and its dependencies) the revenue or jumma to be paid by the lakhirajdar to the government shall be equal to one-half of the rent produced of the tenure. If any part of the tenure shall be uncultivated, the lakhirajdar is to be required to bring that part into cultivation, and to pay such progressive increase to be regulated with a reference to the reduced rate of the assessment on the cultivated part, as the Sudhler Board of Revenue with the sanction of the government may deem reasonable.

If the grant of the tenure shall have been subsequent to the Bengal year 1178 or the Fussily or Willaity year 1179, according as the tenure may be situated in Bengal, Behar, or Orissa (excepting Cuttack and its dependencies) the revenue or jumma to be paid by the lakhirajdar to the government shall be assessed under the general regulation on the whole of the actual rent produce of the tenure.

RULE 3.—If the proprietor or malik of the lands included in a resumed tenure shall have continued in the possession and management of the lands* after the creation of the tenure, paying the government share of their produce to the lakhirajdar, the settlement shall be made with such proprietor under the general regulation, and it shall be lawful for the governor of the presidency to grant to the lakhirajdar, if in destitute circumstances, such provision for life as may be deemed proper.

RULE 4.—Clause 1st.—When the settlement of lands included in a resumed grant shall be made with the lakhirajdar, if the proprietor or malik of the lands shall have received malikanah in money, kind or land, during the existence of the lakhiraj tenure, he shall continue to receive the same or an equivalent.

Clause 2d.—If the party claiming the proprietary right or milkenet on the lands of the resumed tenure shall not be in the receipt of malikanah at the time of the resumption, he shall nevertheless be considered entitled to malikanah, provided that he shall prove to the satisfaction of the revenue authorities that he has been in the receipt of such an allowance within the twelve years antecedent to the resumption of the tenure, or that he has within that period preferred a claim thereto before a competent tribunal, and that such claim is well founded.

* See note at the end of the rules.

RULE 6.—The nature and amount of malikanah allowed under the preceding rule, shall be recorded in the settlement proceedings, and if the malikanah is enjoyed in the shape of a specific portion of land, the limits of such portion shall be defined with proper land marks and described in the map accompanying the proceedings of settlement.

RULE 6.—The malikanah allowed under rule 4, if receivable in money, shall be added to the jumma payable to government by the lakhirajdar with whom the settlement of the lands, on which it is chargeable, may be made (due allowance having been made for the same in the terms of settlement in all cases where the assessment has been fixed upon the whole rent produce,) and shall be paid to the party entitled to it by the collector.

RULE 7.—If the party claiming the proprietary right in the lands shall be allowed malikanah under rule 4, he shall be entitled in all cases where the settlement has been made with the lakhirajdar under clause I, rule I, to a money compensation for loss of settlement in addition to the annual malikanah allowance awarded to him, which compensation shall be calculated at ten years' purchase on the difference between his malikanah allowance and the zamindaree profits (malikanah inclusive) which he would have received annually, had the settlement been made with him, the said zamindaree profits being assumed at 20 per cent, on the gross jumma bundle.

RULE 8.—No claim to malikanah or to compensation for loss of settlement shall be entertained which shall not be preferred in the first instance to the revenue authorities previous to the sanction by government of settlement with the lakhirajdar, nor shall any claim not so preferred be cognizable in the courts of justice.

RULE 9.—If a lakhirajdar entitled to settlement under rules not being malik of the lands included in his tenure, refuse to engage on terms approved by the Sudder Board of Revenue, the settlement shall be made with a proprietor or malik, if there be one, and the recuuant lakhirajdar shall not be entitled to any allowance of malikanah.

RULE 10.—If the title deeds on which a lakhirajdar claims to hold his lands free of assessment, shall have been declared by a final judgment of a competent court to have been forged or fraudulently altered, no length of possession, either in the occupant or his ancestors shall be held by the revenue authorities to entitle him to a settlement for the lands, but the settlement shall be made with the proprietor or malik of the lands under the general regulation.—But this rule shall not preclude the government in its executive capacity from admitting the dispossessed lakhirajdar to settlement if with reference to length of possession, or other circumstances, it should be deemed right to admit him. Nor shall it endamage the claim of any party who may hold a tenure by right of purchase, and who shall prove to the satisfaction of revenue authorities, that the purchase was made by him in good faith, and in the belief that the title deeds previously forged or fraudulently altered were good and valid documents.

The revenue officers employed to give effect to the foregoing rules should be informed that the management of a rent free tenures by the mocuddum or head ryot of the villages in which the tenure is situated, and the receipt from the lakhirajdar by such mocuddum of an allowance in land money or kind for his services, are not evidence of his (the mocuddum's) proprietary right in the lands, and that a claim for malikanah and compensation for loss of settlement of a resumed tenure of which the lakhirajdar and his ancestors have had possession or have enjoyed the rents for a period of sixty years, cannot be considered an admissible claim, unless it be proved by satisfactory evidence that the party advancing such claim has actually received from the lakhirajdar an allowance in acknowledgement of his proprietary right up to the date of resumption, or that it comes within the scope of clause 2d of rule 3 relating to badshahee, or of clause 2d of rule 4 relating to booka-mee tenures.

CIRCULARS.

No. 60. References having been made to the Board regarding the proper interpretation of the marginal note of circular No. 36, published in the Huckaru in May last, the Board have explained to the Revenue Commissioners that the advertisements required by Section V, Regulation VII. of 1830, to be published at the Cutcherries of the Judge and Collector of the District, must be so published 30 full days prior to the sale taking place, exclusive of the day of receipt and the day of sale; but that if the notice (or advertisement, which will be a copy of the advertisements) prescribed by Clause II. Section VII. Regulation XI. of 1822, be promulgated in the Mofussil 20 days prior to the sale, the sale as far as the advertisements are concerned, will be legal.

No. 61. As the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal has called the attention of the Board to the needlessly harassing calls occasionally made by Collectors for Treasure escorts, especially at inclement seasons of the year, the Board have requested the Revenue Commissioners strongly to impress on the officers subordinate to them who are in charge of treasuries, the necessity of considerateness and caution in making requisitions for treasure escorts, and of refraining altogether, if possible, from such requisitions during the inclement season of the year.

BADSHAHEE TENURES.

No. 61. The Revenue Commissioners have been furnished with copies of rules approved by both the Supreme Government and the Government of Bengal, for the settlement of resumed rent free tenures. The Board state, that, it is intended, these rules shall be embodied in a law now under preparation; but, meanwhile, the proceedings of the officers conducting or revising the settlements of resumed Lakhiraj lands, must be regulated by their tenor, although, till the rules have become law, a brief report of the circumstances of such case, shewing that it comes within the scope of the indulgent intentions of Government towards dispossessed Lakhirajdars of old tenure, must be submitted with the settlement papers for confirmation, in compliance with the requirement of Section V. Regulation XIII of 1825. The Commissioners have also been directed to issue the necessary instructions to their subordinates.

By Rule I. When a Badshahee Tenure shall be declared liable to assessment, if the original grantee and his successor or representatives shall have continued in the uninterrupted possession and management of the tenure for a period of sixty years, if they shall have continued for a period of sixty years, in the uninterrupted receipt a specific portion of the produce of the lands included in the tenure, under the denomination of rent paid to them by a party occupying and managing the Tenure as their agent or farmer and not having a proprietary right in the lands, it shall be incumbent on the officer empowered to investigate the Lakhiraj title in such tenure to report the circumstances of the case as required by Section V. Regulation XIII 1825, in order that the settlement of the Tenure may be authorized to be made with the Lakhirajdar, at a jumma assessed on the actual rent produced by the lands, under the general rules contained in Regulation VIII of 1793, VII of 1822, IX of 1825, and IX of 1833; and the Tenure when so settled shall be held to be hereditary and transferable, and the party claiming the proprietary right or milknet in the lands, shall not disturb the possession of the Lakhirajdar or his He is or representatives, and any suit preferred by such party in a Court of Judicature shall, as provided for by section II of the aforesaid Regulation, be dismissed with costs.

Rule II. states, that if the Proprietor or Malik of the lands included in a resumed tenure, shall have continued in the possession and management of the lands, after the creation of tenure, paying the government share of the produce to the Lakhirajdar, the settlement shall be made with such proprietor or malik * under the general rules contained in the Regulations abovementioned, and it shall be lawful for the governor of the presidency to grant to the Lakhirajdar, if in destitute circumstances, such pension for life as may be deemed proper.

By Clause I, Rule III., when the settlement of a resumed tenure shall be made with the Lakhirajdar under Rule I, if the proprietor or malik * of the lands included in the tenure, shall have received malikanah in money, kind, or land, during the existence of the Lakhiraj tenure, he shall continue to receive the same or equivalent * and by Clause II. of the same rule; if the party claiming the proprietary right or milknet in the lands of the resumed tenure shall not be in the receipt of malikanah at the time of the resumption of the tenure, he shall nevertheless be entitled to malikanah provided he shall prove to the satisfaction of the revenue authorities, that he has been in the receipt of it within twelve years antecedent to the resumption, or that he has within that period, preferred a claim to it before a competent tribunal, and that such claim is well founded.

* The Revenue officers employed to give effect to the foregoing rules, should be informed that the management of a rent for tenure by the Mocuddum or head Ryah of the village in which the tenure is situated, and the receipt from the Lakhirajdar by such Mocuddum of an allowance in land, money or kind for his services are not evidence of his (the Mocuddum's) proprietary right in the lands, and that a claim for malikanah and compensation for loss of settlement of a resumed tenure of which the Lakhirajdar and his ancestors have had possession, or have enjoyed the rents for a period of sixty years, cannot be considered an admissible claim unless it be proved by satisfactory evidence, that the party advancing such claim has actually received from the Lakhirajdar an allowance in acknowledgment of his proprietary right up to the date of resumption, or that he comes within the scope of clause II of Rule VI. relating to Hookmee tenures.

Rule IV. states, that the nature and amount of the malikanah allowed under the preceding rule, shall be recorded in the settlement proceedings and if the malikanah he enjoyed in the shape of a specific portion of the land, the limits of such portion shall be defined with proper land marks, and described in the map accompanying the proceedings of settlement.

By Rule V. the malikanah allowed under Rule III, if receivable in money, shall be added to the jumma payable to Government by the Lakhirajdar with whom the settlement of the lands on which it is chargeable may be concluded, (due allowance having been made for the same in the terms of settlement with that party) and shall be paid to the malik entitled to it by the collector.

Rule VI. states, that if the party claiming the proprietary right shall be allowed malikanah under Rule III, he shall be entitled to a money compensation for loss of settlement, in addition to the annual Malikanah allowance awarded to him, which compensation shall be calculated at ten years purchase on the difference between this Malikanah allowance, and the Zemindaree profits (Malikanah inclusive) which he would have received annually, had the settlements been made with him, the said Zemindaree profits being assumed at 20 per cent. on the gross jumma bundee or rental of the lands*.

By Rule VII. no claim to Malkianah or to compensation for loss of settlement, shall be entertained, which shall not be preferred to the Revenue Authorities previous to the sanction by Government of settlements with the Lakhirajdar, nor shall any claim not so preferred in the first instance be cognizable in the Courts of Justice.

Rule VIII. states, that if a Lakhirajdar entitled to settlement under Rule I. refuse to engage on terms approved by the Sudder Board of revenue, the settlement for his tenure shall be made with the proprietor or Malik of the lands included in the tenure if there be one, under the general Regulations, and the recusant Lakhirajdar shall not be entitled to any allowance of Malikanah.

By Rule IX. if the title deeds on which a Lakhirajdar claims to hold his lands free of assessment shall have been declared by a final judgment of a competent Court to have been forged or fraudulently altered, no length of possession either in the occupant or his ancestors shall be held by the Revenue Authorities to entitle him to a settlement for the lands; but the settlement shall be made with the proprietor or Malik of the lands if there be one, under the general Regulations. But this rule shall not preclude the Government in its executive capacity, from admitting the diseized Lakhirajdar to settlement, if with reference to length of possession or other circumstances it should be deemed right so to admit him. Nor shall it endamage the claim of any party who may hold a tenure by right of purchase, and who shall prove to the satisfaction of the Revenue Authorities that the purchase was made by him in good faith, had in the belief that the title deeds previously forged and fraudulently uttered, were good and valid documents.

By Rule II. The jumma or revenue to be paid by a Lakhirajdar admitted to settlement for his resumed tenure is to be adjusted according to the following rules. That if the part of the tenure shall have been made previous to the Bengal year 1178, or the Fussily or Willaity year, 1179, according as the tenure may be situated in Bengal, Behar, or Orissa, (excepting Cuttack and its dependencies) the Revenue Jumma to be paid by the Lakhirajdar to the Government shall be equal to one half of the rent produce of the tenure. If any part of the tenure shall be uncultivated, the Lakhirajdar is to be required to bring that part into cultivation, and to pay such progressive increase to be regulated with a reference to the reduced rate of the assessment on the cultivated part as the Sudder Board of Revenue, with the sanction of the Government, may deem reasonable.

Rule III. states, that if the proprietor or malik of the lands included in a resumed tenure, shall have continued in the possession or management of the lands* after the creation of the tenure paying the Government share of their produce to the Lakhirajdar, the settlement shall be made with such proprietor under the General Regulations, and it shall be lawful for the Governor of the Presidency to grant to the Lakhirajdar, if in destitute circumstances, such provision for life as may be deemed proper.

Rule IV. clause I. states, that when the settlement of lands included in a resumed grant shall be made with the Lakhirajdar, if the proprietor or malik of the lands shall have received malikanah in money, kind, or land, during the existence of the Lakhiraj tenure, he shall continue to receive the same or an equivalent. And clause II. states, that if the party claiming the proprietary right, or miliknet in the lands of the resumed tenure, shall not be in the receipt of malikanah at the time of the Resumption, he shall nevertheless be considered entitled to malikanah, provided that he shall prove to the satisfaction of the Revenue authorities that he has been in the receipt of such an allowance within the twelve years antecedent to the resumption of the tenure, or that he has within that period preferred a claim thereto before a competent tribunal and that such claim is well founded.

Rule V. states, that the nature and amount of malikanah allowed under the preceding rule shall be recorded in the settlement proceedings, and if the malikanah is engaged in the shape of a specific portion of the land, the limits of such portion shall be defined with proper land marks and described in the map accompanying the proceedings of settlement.

Rule VI. states, that the malikanah allowed under Rule IV., if receivable in money, shall be added to the Jumma payable to Government by the Lakhirajdar with whom the settlement of the lands, on which it is chargeable, may be made (due allowance having been made for the same in the terms of settlement in all cases where the assessment has been fixed upon the whole rent produce (and shall be paid to the party entitled to it by the collector.

By Rule VIII., no claim to malikanah or to compensation for loss if settlement shall be entertained which shall not be preferred in the first instance to the Revenue Authorities previous to the sanction by Government of settlement with the Lakhirajdar, nor shall any claim not so preferred be cognizable in the Court of Justice.†

Rule IX states, that if a Lakhirajdar entitled to settlement under Rule I not being malik of the lands included in his tenure, refuse to engage terms approved by the Sudder Board of Revenue, the settlement shall be made with the proprietor or malik, if there be one, and the recusant Lakhirajdar shall not be entitled to any allowance of malikana.

Rule X. states, that if the title deeds on which Lakhirajdar claims to hold his lands free of assessment, shall have been declared by a final judgement of a competent Court to have been forged or fraudulently altered, no length of possession either on the occupant or his ancestors shall be held by the Revenue Authorities to entitle him to a settlement for the lands, but the settlement shall be made with the proprietor or malik of the lands under the general regulations. But this rule shall not preclude the Government in its executive capacity from admitting the disinterested Lakhirajdar to settlement, if with reference to length of possession, or other circumstances, it should be deemed right to admit him: nor shall it endanger the claim of any party who may hold a tenure by right of purchase, and who shall prove to the satisfaction of the Revenue Authorities, that the purchase was made by him in good faith, and in the belief that the title deeds previously forged or fraudulently altered, were good and valid documents.

No. 63.—Doubts having been entertained by the Board whether, since promulgation of Regulation VIII. 1831, suits of the description of those provided for in Section XX Regulation VII. of 1799 should be heard by the Collector or Judge; they submitted the subject for the opinion of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut on the subject, and the reply of the Sudder, concurring in the construction put upon Regulation VIII. of 1834. —*Hurk. CONSULTATION, TUESDAY, 1st AUGUST, 1837.

EDUCATION OF PUBLIC WARDS.

No. 65. The Board on the 27th of June last, solicited the attention of the Right Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal to certain correspondence, that transpired in the years 1830 and 1831 on the education of the Wards of Government. The following is a summary of what passed on the occasion referred to.

On the 12th of August 1830, the Board was asked by Government its opinion on the practicability of having all the male wards educated at Calcutta. The Hindoos, it was stated, might be instructed at the Hindoo College, in the neighbourhood of which a boarding house might be established for them, and that the Mahomedans might be brought up at the Mahomedan College. "It may be admitted (it was observed) "that the necessity of imparting education to the children of the landholders is more urgent than that of communicating tuition to any other class. The zemindars residing in the interior are remarkable for their general want of instruction, for their ignorance, their prejudices and their resistance to to every thing like improvement; an education in Calcutta would, it is to be hoped, not only be the means of supplying them with useful knowledge, but would liberalize their feelings, enlarge their minds, and qualify them to become the instruments of much agricultural and social improvement."

A circular letter was accordingly addressed to the Commissioners, from whose answers it appeared, that public feeling was much too strongly opposed to the plan to admit of its being adopted. The reasons usually urged by the relatives of the wards against sending them to Calcutta were, the separation from their mothers, the distance and unhealthiness of Calcutta, the association with youths of low caste, and the infidel principles imbibed at the Hindoo College. Two of the Commissioners (Messrs. W. Money and Stockwell) also observed, that a Calcutta education would indispose the young landholders to a country life and increase the evil of absenteeism.

Upon this, the Board proposed, that means should be adopted to give proper education to the male wards without requiring them to be sent to Calcutta, either by the appointment of qualified private tutors, or by the establishment of seminaries at the head station of each district.

This course of proceeding met with the "entire approbation" of the Governor-General, who recommended to the Vice President in Council, that the Committee of Public Instruction should be consulted as to the best means of carrying it into effect, "should the funds (it was added) already at the disposal of Government be inefficient for the purpose. His Lordship begs to suggest, that the magnitude of the advantages which may be anticipated from the proposed scheme, for extending education, be set forth in a letter to the Honorable Court, and that they be solicited to afford it such further pecuniary encouragement as may be calculated to ensure its success." The Board was informed by the Secretary to the Vice President in Council, that the subject would be taken into further consideration in the General Department, but they have received no further communication regarding it.

The Board now desired Mr. Secretary Trevelyan to express their undiminished sense of the important benefits to be expected from the adoption of the above measures. The wards of Government, (says Mr. Trevelyan) are always numerous: they include in the course of a short series of years the representatives of a large proportion of the most wealthy and influential families possessed of landed property in the presidency, and if a good education could be secured to them, their superiority to their fellows must in time become apparent, and the standard of mental cultivation be raised throughout this important class of the community. Judging also from the result of the same experiment in other countries, it is not too much to hope that the mental improvement thus extended, would lead in time to this powerful and opulent class actively assisting in the promotion of education among the rest of their countrymen. The present period appears to be particularly favorable for carrying the plan into execution. The Education Committee has actually established seminaries at most of the great towns in Bengal and Behar, at which the wards might be entered as pupils, and whenever this cannot be unobjectionably effected, their guardians might be requested to apply to be furnished from these seminaries with qualified tutors on moderate salaries.

The Board, therefore, propose, that the following rules be circulated for the guidance of the Commissioners and Collectors in the performance of this important part of their duties.

1st. That unless some sufficient reason be alleged against it, every ward must be sent to receive his education at some government seminary. He must reside under the care of his nearest relations, or of some other persons duly appointed, within a sufficient distance of the seminary to allow of his daily attendance, and it will be the duty of the principal or head master to send a half yearly report of his progress to the Collector.

2d. If any valid reason be offered against any wards attending a Government seminary, a qualified tutor must then be appointed, who will be nominated by the nearest relatives, and approved by the Collector, and any difference of opinion regarding the appointment of a tutor must be referred for the decision of the Commissioner and ultimately, if necessary, of the Sudder Board. The tutor must make half yearly reports of the progress of his pupil to the Collector, and at the close of each year the ward must be examined by the Collector.

3d. Every Collector will make a report at the close of each year to the Commissioner, for transmission to the Sudder Board, of the progress of the wards in his district in their studies.

4th. When the Commissioner, in the course of his annual circuit, arrives at the head station of a district, he shall cause all the wards in the district to be assembled at the station. He shall then enquire into their conduct, and examine them in their studies; and shall confer honorary rewards, consisting of Books and scientific instruments, on those who are distinguished for good moral conduct and proficiency in learning.

Mr. Trevelyan went on to say that the plan of educating the wards at the Government Seminaries, is for obvious reasons entitled to the preference, and as a continual intercourse is kept up between the zemindaries and the Provincial Capital, and the principal families have confidential agents always residing at the latter, it is hoped that no serious objections will be offered to the course proposed.* It has already in one instance been successfully carried into effect, as will be seen from the following extract from the reply of Mr. Stockwell, who was then Commissioner of Cuttack.

"There are two of the wards, (says Mr. Stockwell) of this Court at Midnapore, and two at Balasore, on a system resembling that proposed, although at a very long interval, circumstances connected with their families making a residence at their own mofussil homes improper, inasmuch as security of person as well as attention to education were not available. Mr. Stockwell sanctioned arrangements which brought them to a Sudder station, under the immediate observation of the Collector and within reach of the best provincial instructors. Objections were started in three of the instances, the fourth being voluntary, but they were overcome; and on his last circuit, Mr. Stockwell had the happiness of seeing these boys well in health, proud to shew their progress in study, and contented with their situations. Mr. Stockwell had the still greater satisfaction of knowing, that they were much and kindly noticed by the Collectors, to whom they paid frequent visits, and from whom all their little wishes and requests received every attention.

With regard to the kind of education to be given, Mr. Trevelyan observed, that the first object is to teach the wards those branches of knowledge, which will instruct them in the independent management of their estates when they come to age. A familiar acquaintance with arithmetic, and a power of reading and writing the vernacular languages with facility are necessary for this purpose, and to this may be added, as far as opportunity offers, history, geography, and the elements of science, particularly of those parts of science which have a reference to agricultural improvement. The wishes of the nearest relations ought, of course, to be consulted in determining the kind of education to be given to each ward, and, except in those points which are absolutely necessary to qualify a zemindar to manage his estate properly, their views of what ought to be taught, should be allowed to prevail.

Mr. Trevelyan, in concluding, by desire of the Board, repeated their conviction, that it is not less a duty to cultivate the minds of the wards, and to imbue them with correct moral feelings than to take care of their estate. The former obligation is fully admitted in the Regulations,* but no plan has as yet been prescribed for its fulfilment, and the public wards have grown up as ignorant, and deprived as any other persons of the class to which they belong.

Mr. Secretary Mangles, on the 6th of July, under the direction of the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal, informed the Board, that His Lordship approves and sanctions generally the plan proposed by the Board to ensure the better education of wards of Court.

Every endeavour (says Mr. Mangles), must be made to secure, if possible in each case, the willing acquiescence of the mother, or nearest relatives of the minor: and influence, not compulsion, should be the means used in all instances to induce such parties to allow the ward to enter as a pupil in the Government seminary. There are now, His Lordship believes, public seminaries at the several stations, Patna, Bhagulpoore, Moorshedabad, Bauleah, Dacca, Chittagong, Midnapore and Gowahatty, these with the addition of that of the Presidency, provide for all the Commissionerships, except Arracan, and Jurisdiction of the Governor General's Agents on the South West Frontier. But, (observed Mr. Mangles) it might be a hardship to require natives of Cuttack to come up to Midnapore, and the Committee of Public instruction may, perhaps, think it desirable, if the Board see cause to recommend it, to establish a school in the former Province.

Mr. Mangles concluded by stating, that the Governor will only add that a free option ought to be allowed or the relatives or guardians of, wards to send them to any public seminary as well as to the Presidency* and point out that the 4th rule laid down by the Board should be more distinctly limited to cases in which permission has been given to the wards being educated at home. It was not of course, the Board's intention, that a boy should be summoned from the Provincial Capital to meet the Commissioner on his circuit.

* Section XXVII, regulation X of 1793, states that in cases of minority when the minor may be a male, the superintendence of his female relation is not to be allowed after the expiration of the 5th year, and on his attaining the age of tuition it must be the first case of the guardians to procure proper teachers to give him an education suitable to his situation in life.

The Board have accordingly, by their circular No. 65 furnished the Revenue Commissioners with a copy of the above correspondence, explaining as clearly as possible the intention and extent of the rules above given, with every regard to the limitations made by his lordship, and to the wishes of the nearest relatives of the minors, and the Commissioners have been desired to furnish reports after consultation with the officers subordinate with them, at what places they would recommend the immediate establishment of schools, and to what extent assistance may be expected from voluntary contributions or other local resources. And that no opportunity should be lost of explaining to the native gentry the highly useful views which dictate the orders now communicated, and that the Commissioners should report to the Board every instance of public spirited beneficence on their part in order that it may be reported to Government, or such other notice taken of it as the occasion may seem to require. The attention of the Commissioners has also been requested in connection with this subject to the Board's circular order dated 16th June, 1829, communicating the resolution of Government dated 30th May, 1829, in which rules are laid down for the grant of titles, or other honorary rewards to persons who so distinguished themselves.

Circular No. 64, informs the Revenue Commissioners that the Right Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal has been pleased to direct that the 58th rule of practice, empowering Local Commissioners to authorize disbursements ordered by a regular decree of a Court of Justice be extended to disbursements directed by decrees of the special Commissioners appointed under Regulation III. of 1828.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA.

THE PICE.—No change has occurred in the pice market during the month; the pice is still sold at fifty nine for the rupee, and the old copper at sixty-four. When are we to have this state of affairs ameliorated? The Government, apparently, are determined not to pay the least attention to the complaints of the poor. Those who are in authority do not feel the loss of five pice in each rupee and therefore cannot afford to sympathize with the poor. Fifty lakhs of new pice have been coined, and a prementment has been made by the grand jury to the Judges of the Supreme Court, representing the grievance the poor are subjected to in consequence of the scarcity of copper coin, and soliciting the Court's interference to ameliorate the state of affairs. What has become of the fifty lakhs of pice we do not know—certainly the lieges have not benefited by it, being sent into the market; and the presentment to the Court has not met with the success desiderated, being returned as informal. The natives have got up a song on the subject, which is extremely popular among them. The words of it we forget, but the chorus is,

Hi! Hi! Compānee bhaādūor, blīe,
Ungāze ka tunanān hoormut oorawē.
Duh! Duh! kēah aūfuth awē,
Punch pisā buttā rupyā kū tohyē.

Since the above was written, a notification has appeared in the Exchange Gazette, stating that the Government has established change shops where good pice are to be had. The public will be disappointed, however, if they resort to these shops for change, as they will only get eight annas of good pice and eight annas old copper.

SICKNESS IN ARRACAN.—Sad reports have been brought up by the Pilot dispatch vessel, from Arracan, respecting sickness and mortality prevailing there. The size of the little vessel prevented several sick officers from coming away; but three embarked, Major Grant, Major Dickenson and Assistant Surgeon Tweddell—the first continues in a most dangerous state of fever.

SHARKS.—Those individuals who have cause to go on the river or bathe in it, are hereby warned, that its waters are infested by numerous sharks. Four of these voracious animals, measuring upwards of five and a half feet in length have within the last month been captured in the channel between the Sumatra sand and the Seepore bank, and in the maw of one a human arm was found. The sable-fish fishers say, that there are more sharks in the river this season, than they ever remember to have seen in it, and that scarcely a day passes without their nets being rent by these ravenous monsters.

THE SURROUTTEE BRIDGE.—The bridge which was some years ago built over the river Surrouttee, in the Hooghly Zillah, at the expense of Baboo Prawnkissen Holdar, of Chinsurah, is in a ruinous state, being cracked in several places; so that it is not considered safe for boats to pass under it. It is therefore advisable, either to break it up, or repair it in an efficient manner, or in all likelihood it will give way before the end of the rains.

DR. O'SHAUGHNESSY.—Dr O'Shaughnessy has been appointed Officiating Secretary to the Medical Retiring Fund in the room of Dr. Pearson, who has resigned.

COMPANY'S APOTHECARY.—Dr. A. R. Jackson is appointed to officiate as Apothecary to the East India Company at Calcutta during the absence of Surgeon John Grant, now at the Cape, but who was provisionally named as the late Surgeon Muston's successor, when the latter officer superseded Dr. Grant.

MR. WILBERFORCE BIRD.—Mr. Wilberforce Bird, Provisional Member of the Supreme Council in India, has arrived at Madras on the Hindustan on his way to Calcutta.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE STRAND.—The chief magistrate and superintendent of police, it appears, have submitted to Government a scheme for extending that part of the Strand Road which is situated to the northward of the Custom house, by embanking the space between the western margin of the present road and low water mark, which presents the usual features observable in all tide rivers, of a large expanse of shore composed of alluvial soil.

MEETING OF THE MILITARY ORPHAN MANAGEMENT.—The Military Orphan Management had a Special Meeting to-day at the Town Hall to consider the Madlock Rules, and the result was a Resolution to recommend a modification of them to the following extent:

Rule 1st. The Annual Meeting of Subscribers to take place on the last Wednesday in January.

Rule 3d. The Deputation Governor to be elected annually, as in the Madlock Rules, but the same individual to be capable of immediate re-election, except that no person is to fill that office for more than three years in succession.

Rule 4th. To be modified so as to remove the disqualification for immediate re-election of Managers going out by rotation.

Rule 6th. In case of a vacancy during the year, a Manager to be elected at a special meeting of Subscribers, (the Management not voting) to act until the Division which appointed the late Manager, shall have elected another.

SUICIDES.—A native Christian and a Hindu lad, have committed suicide during the month: the former in consequence of a quarrel with a female relation; and the latter for not having a dinner to his liking provided for him.

SHIPWRECKS.—The Bark Andromeda, which sailed from this port about fifteen days since for Mauritius, was totally lost on the 23d ultimo, upon the coast of Cuttack, and the Captain and three of the crew were drowned.

A large timber-laden ship, has been wrecked on Mascul Island. She was found by the authorities there, deserted and partly plundered by the natives. It is supposed that the crew and officers have been drowned in endeavouring to escape in the boats, as there is a high surf round the Island in bad weather. Hopes were entertained of getting the vessel off, as she was only very slightly injured, and most of the plundered cargo has been recovered.

BABOO NEILMONY HOLDAR.—Bahoo Neilmony Holdar, of Chinsurah, died at Raja Gopee Mohun Bhahadoor's ghaut at Comartuolee, on Monday afternoon last, at the age of about seventy. He was once one of the wealthiest natives at Chinsurah, but had been reduced in his circumstances for several years previous to his death.

THE RE-UNION.—The Re-union, on the evening of the 7th instant, was very ill attended, in consequence, it is supposed, of the state of the weather.

EXECUTION OF PEERBUX.—Peerbux alias Culloo, was executed on the morning of the 7th instant, at a quarter before six. The culprit was tried for the murder of Ojaghur, a Sheikh residing in Machooa Bazar.

MURDEROUS OUTRAGE.—Another fatal result, arising from toddy shop squabbling, took place at Mooushee Bazar in the 24-Pergunnahs, on Monday last. Some angry words having arisen between two Mussulmans in their cups, blows followed, and one of them was severely wounded with a knife. The sufferer was taken to the Chadney Hospital in a dangerous state, and in consequence the Chief Magistrate attended and took his deposition. The offender is in custody.

RIVER PIRATES.—A gang of about thirty river pirates, has been captured during the week and is now in custody.

J. A. BROOKES.—J. S. Brookes, who was wounded with a knife by Eliza Howe, on the night of the 26th ultimo, appeared before the Magistrate on the 14th instant, and stated that he did not wish to prosecute Mrs. Howe. He begged that she might be discharged. The Magistrate accordingly promised to release her on her own recognizance, as she could not give any security. Brookes appeared to be suffering much from the effects of the wound which he apprehended would for life afflict him; he was, however, very anxious, all the time that Mrs. Howe was in custody, for her liberation, and said he had entirely forgiven her.

THE AUSTRALIAN COMPANY.—The Australian Company have announced that a ship will be despatched to that colony in January next, and that several cabins are already engaged. A fund, it appears, has also been established, for defraying the passage of invalids and other deserving individuals, who are themselves unable to pay for it. Contributions are invited to this fund, which we hope will become sufficient for the benevolent purpose of its establishment.

MARRIAGES EXTRAORDINARY.—On the 11th inst., the Deputy Superintendent of police, assumed clerical functions, and married three girls who were redeemed from slavery, to as many lovelorn swains.

THE SHOE QUESTION.—The shoe wearing objection, with respect to natives, says Scott's Compendium, has again been revived. Some magnet gave directions to the door keeper at the Town Hall, on the 10th instant, not to admit any native who wore shoes. When will these invidious distinctions cease, and our qui hi bahauds learn to concede to the natives their rights?

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S TOUR.—It is said, that the Governor-General, accompanied by a portion of the Secretariat, will proceed on the tour of the upper provinces at the commencement of the ensuing cold season.

SHIP LAUNCH.—A large ship, of 760 tons, built by Mr. Ambrose for Messrs. D'Souza and Co. and named the Donna Pascoa, was launched on the 17th instant; but she stuck in the mud and on the ends of the ways, until Friday afternoon, when, with the assistance of Steam and a spring tide, she was floated off and now rides in safety.

THOMAS SWARIS.—This person, during the month, made a daring attack on an East India lady, robbed her of a gold chain, and, when brought to the police for his crime, endeavoured to ruin the reputation of the robbed, by stating, that he had had a criminal intercourse with her. The fellow has been let off by the magistrate, on paying only a fine of fifty rupees!

CHILDREN ATTACKED BY JACKALS.—During the month, two children have been attacked by jackalls in the suburbs of Calcutta; one of the unfortunate creatures was killed by these brutes, and the other narrowly escaped, having been snatched away from their jaws.

INDIGO PROSPECTS.—Very discouraging reports have been received during the month from the factories in Tirhoot and its neighbourhood. Not more than 14,000 maunds is expected to be the outturn of the season.

Very unfavourable reports have also come in from the factories in Jessore and the neighbouring indigo districts, complaining much of incessant rain and of a very poor produce from the plant. Similar accounts have been received from Tirhoot.

THE CROPS.—Favourable accounts have been received of the crops; but it is still expected that the outturn of the season, will be less than an average crop. Cuttack and Backergunge have been relieved in a great measure by the rains, and the crops in these places are getting on well.

CONTRAHAND OPIUM.—On the 16th instant, about fourteen maunds of opium were found in the house of a native of the upper provinces, named Probhoo Sing. It is stated that the drug was landed only the night before, from a boat just come down the river, and information of it was given to the police by one Seback, who observed it in transitu from the boat.

MR. MARTIN.—In consequence of certain reports which came to the knowledge of the Governor of Bengal, Mr J. R. Hutchinson, one of the Judges of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, proceeded to Hooghly some short time since for the purpose of enquiring into the conduct of the Judge of that Zillah. The report of Mr. Hutchinson has led to certain charges against the Zillah Judge being drawn up by the Sudder Dewanny, and the Government has appointed Mr. W. W. Bird to act as Special Commissioner under Regulation 17 of 1813 for the trial of the same. The Government is the prosecutor, and Mr. Bignell is to conduct the case on its behalf.

POLICE COMMISSION.—A Commission has been or shortly will be appointed for the purpose of reporting upon the present state of the Police in the lower provinces and of suggesting such improvements in the system as may seem expedient.

SIR CHARLES METCALFE.—It is said that Sir Charles Metcalfe will positively go home in January next.

A LEOPARD.—It appears that the animal which has been carrying off children in Shampookoor, is a leopard and not a jackall, as was reported and that the brute escaped from some showmen a short time since. It attacked a woman, during the week, and bit off her hand.

BONUS TO THE OPIUM SHIPPERS.—The question of the ten lakhs bonus to the opium shippers was settled in Council on the 23d instant, by adopting the plan proposed by the trade at the meeting of the 17th instant, without any modification, as it appeared to be approved by a great majority of the parties concerned. Shippers of opium to the Straits prior to the 1st of May, are, therefore, excluded, while all other shippers, whether to the Straits or to China, share equally.

THE BHOOTAN MISSION.—The last Gazette announces the appointment of Captain Pemberton to proceed on a Mission to Bootan and eventually to Thibet, and of Dr. Griffith to proceed in Medical charge of the Mission. This embassy will be one of much literary and scientific as well as political interest. Bhootan is almost a terra incognita: it has not been visited by a British functionary since the Mission of Mr. Turner, of the Bengal Civil Service, who was sent to the Deb and Dhurma Rajas by Warren Hastings. From the enterprising character of the two gentlemen employed, much may be expected. Both have acquired a reputation in Assam; Dr. Griffith very recently, by his journey from Assam to Ava, during the late disturbances in Ava.

THE CENTRAL HOSPITAL.—A deputation, consisting of the Archdeacon, Dr. Corby, M. M. Manuke, Esq., and J. W. Alexander, Esq., waited on Lord Auckland, by appointment, on the 24th instant, for the purpose of presenting a memorial to him, craving some support from Government on behalf of the Central Hospital, which has since its formation afforded an asylum to numerous sick persons, six thousand of whom have been cured, by Dr. Brett, in the space of six months. Lord Auckland informed the deputation, that he could not determine upon what degree of assistance, if any, it might be expedient to recommend the Government to afford, until he received the report of the Municipal Committee.

DOBBAH SUGAR.—Some statements published last month respecting the Dobah Sugar Works, upon the authority of a letter from Mr. Blake and other well accredited information, have attracted the attention of the gentleman in charge of the works, who had also received letters from England of late date upon the subject of the transfer of the property. From their explanation it appears, that the £120,000 subscribed by the new Company, is for the working as well as for the purchase of the concern,—that the portion of this sum given for the concern alone is £48,000, the purchase being made by twelve proprietors, in shares as already described. It also turns out that, instead of the startling quantity of 8,000 tons of sugar, the works have only sent down as many hundreds, or rather about 900 tons this year, though capable of yielding much more if well supported.

THE LATE ROBBERIES IN GARDEN REACH.—Within the last month, more than one respectable house, at Garden Reach, has been entered and robbed during the night; and a Masulman Faquir absconded from his position,—near two small dilapidated mosques, situated on the opposite side of the road almost facing Sir Edward Ryan's gate,—on the forenoon of the Monday, subsequent to an extensive robbery in that neighbourhood, between the night of Saturday and the morning of the Sunday previous. On this occasion, a plate chest was removed from the house of Mr. Bell to the bank of the river adjoining, quietly unlocked, rifled, and left on the bank. An almirah, also, was carried away with its contents, said to be of considerable value.

MOFUSSIL.

AGRA.—By order of the Lieut.-Governor the Quarantine system lately established, has been broken up, as plague has been pronounced to have disappeared. The preventive police employed on the different cordons, will be discharged immediately. 1,100 pilgrims from Kuttuck to Muttra, are now detained at Futtehpoor, who will however be speedily released.

A dense flight of locusts passed over this station on the 23d instant without doing any injury. Their direction was westerly.

The Agra Ukhbar of the 9th instant, is the first semi-weekly paper that has issued from the Mofussil Press. The weather has been unusually dry, and it was expected that the want of rain would be of serious detriment to the kurreet crop.

Seven natives were killed on the 7th instant, by the falling in of a grain pit in which they were working.

BURDWAN.—Three women have been murdered in Burdwan; but the assassins remain undetected.

SINGBHOOM.—Letters from Hazareebaugh mention, that famine and sickness are committing great havoc in the province of Singbhoom. There is a permanent cantonment at Chyebara. Into this cantonment numbers of Coles in the last stage of starvation daily proceed, but many others die from want, and sheer inability to reach the spot.

MYNPOORIE.—A melancholy affair occurred at Mynpoorie on the 28th of July. A young man of the name of William Thomas, belonging to the Dak Office, committed suicide by shooting himself. The young man had recently built a bungalow and had involved himself in debt, which preyed upon his mind so much that he was ill for some days, and did not on that account attend his office as usual. Another man was employed during the time; and he supposing from this that he was turned out of his situation, after writing many letters regarding himself and the cause of his death, deliberately set fire to his bungalow and shot himself. He was found amidst the flames with half his face blown off, and his brains lying more than a yard from him nearly burnt to a cinder.

NEEMUCH.—In consequence of little or no rain having fallen during June and the greater part of July, the grain merchants began to enhance the price of every description of grain; it was generally apprehended that a draught would happen; under the idea the principal grain dealers of the Sudder Bazar hoarded up an immense quantity of grain, and attempted to impose on the Commissariat Officer to reduce the nerrick; but unsuccessfully. When there was little hope of rain, a heavy shower commenced on the 30th July; it stopped for a few minutes, but about midnight it began to pour in torrents, and the stream which surrounds the Cantonments of Neemuch, was greatly swollen. A considerable number of huts constructed on the banks of the stream, and chiefly occupied by dhrs, khureeks, and butchers, were swept away, and the number of people who were carried off by the current of the stream, is estimated at twenty-two, and of cattle 700 sheep and a number of cows, buffaloes and bullocks, are said to have perished. The gunj, which was some years ago established during the time Sir David Ochterlony was Resident, and known by the name of General Gunj, was completely inundated—the greater part of the inhabitants, about 2 o'clock in the morning, with difficulty escaped a watery grave, and some of them were obliged to climb up a large burtut tree, which stands on the road to the town of Neemuch.

AJMER.—No rain had fallen up to the date of the last intelligence, and the barometer still stood high. Grain has in consequence again risen in price. The plague broke out after the rains at Gungapore in Meywar, but soon subsided; at present Nath-devarah and Rupun are nearly free.

ZILLAH BEHAR.—A letter, under date the 9th of August, states, that a great number of deaths are taking place amongst the jail prisoners every day, as also among the inhabitants of Zillah Behar, by the plague, which is attributed to the absence of the rains, not a drop having fallen up to the present day. The medical attendant of the jail has expressed his opinion that unless the prisoners were removed elsewhere, it is not unlikely that they would all die.

MOORSHEDABAD.—On the 21st of August the Nuwab of Moorsheadabad, was invested by the Honorable Mr. Melville, with the Guelpic order, conferred on him by the King of England. The ceremony was very grandly conducted, and the Nuwab distributed rich presents on the occasion.

CUTTACK.—A letter from Cuttack, of the 20th of August, says that the state of affairs there is any thing but satisfactory, and rice is becoming dearer every day. The mortality from starvation and cholera since the month of May last has been dreadful throughout the district. Wretched mothers bring their children and sell or give them away to any one who will give them something to eat. Crowds of men, women, and children, the picture of disease and misery, are seen crawling about the town and cantonments, begging for a handful of rice, and frequently lie down and die at our gates. A subscription has been raised by the collector, and our worthy commandant feeds some hundreds of them out of his own pocket. But this, though liberal in the extreme, is a mere drop in the ocean where thousands are dying of absolute starvation.

MYDAPORE.—Several murders have recently been perpetrated in Midnapore, and the assassins have been captured.

TAJARAH.—Intelligence has been received that a destructive fire had happened at Tajarah lately, which caused the deaths of about two hundred and fifty persons, and property to the amount of several lacks of rupees, was reduced to ashes by the accident.

NATIVE STATES.

TAHORE.—A Moosulman, who had been sent to ascertain the state of affairs at Cabool, mentioned, that the sons of Dost Mahommed were at Phroo, situated two coss on the further side of Dhuke, and that a small part of the army with two guns were at Ulee Musjid.

The Maharajah sent Kwaja Mahommed Khan, the son of Sultan Mahommed Khan, with Umeer Buksh, a Darogah, to Ruhim Dil Khan, and Muhr Dil Khan, Chiefs of Candahar, in order to strengthen the friendship of the two powers, at which the ruler of Cabool was vexed, lest the two powers should unite and deprive him of his territories.

An urzee was received from Meer Alum Khan, Bijoor Walla, mentioning, that, according to instructions from Dost Mahommed, he had gone to his sons; that the Chief of Cabool was anxious to get possession of his Jagheer; but that if the Maharajah would bestow favor on him, he would come to his court. An answer was sent, directing him to join Rajah Dyan Sing, and that every favour should be bestowed on him.

An urzee was received from Rajah Golaub Sing, stating, that he, accompanied by General Ventura, had marched from the banks of the Seind and fixed his camp at Bhsoor in the country of the Yusoofoo-Zaseans; many of the Zemeendars had come over to him, and that he would receive presents from them in the name of the Maharaj and commence active operations against Pyindub Khan Durbund Walla, and Futeh Khan Punjar Walla: an answer was sent directing him to seize the two leaders and to confine them.

An order was sent to Mahommed Ukburool Dowlet, and Mahommed Cassim, the sons of Abbas, directing them to send a vakeel to Shah Kamran of Herat to request, that two thousand small guns should be got ready. The chiefs consented.

A Purwannah was sent to Juwahir Sing directing him to proceed to Nursinghur and to fight against Payindah Khan.

Juwahir Sing wrote a letter to the Maharajah, stating that Payindah Khan, on hearing of the smallness of his forces had crossed the Sind and had raised a disturbance in the zillah of Huzaroh; but that he would turn him out of that, if a large army was placed at his disposal. An answer was given, that strong reinforcements should be immediately sent, in the mean time the gallant Juwahir Sing was to make the best of the matter and to show fight.

The Maharajah sent a message to Daya Ram Sing, urging him to do his utmost to persuade the sons of Sultan Mahomed Khan to remove from the banks of the Chjuab, and to fix their residence at Wuzerabad.

Sirdar Dost Mahomed Khan was at Cabool and Mahomed Ukburool Khan, his son, was, in consequence of the rainy season, desirous of joining his father.

A letter, received from Generals Allard and Ventura, mentioned, that having collected their forces agreeably to orders on the banks of the river, they were waiting for further instruction. An answer was sent, directing them to come by easy stages to Lahore.

A letter from Muha Sing, the son of Hurroo Sing, mentioned that Payindah Khan had gone to his fortress of Barn in the hills, that he had surrounded the fort with the troops under the command of Juwahir Sing Bisturee, and that he would not inflict whatever punishment the Maharaj desired.

PESHAWUR.—The Moosulman spies reported to Koonwur Now Nehal Sing, that the army of the Cabool Chief was collecting at the village of Ysawal, with the hope of meeting the forces of Lahore at the time when the waters of the Attock should have risen. The Koonwur selected his most chosen troops and sent the rest back to Lahore.

Rajah Goolaub Sing, and Oontald Saheb, with a large army, crossed the Sind, for the purpose of arranging the revenue and receiving presents, and entered the country of the Usoozaens. Futeh Khan, Punjar Walla, who was always an enemy of the Maharaj, came down from the hills and attacked them. His small force was defeated and compelled to seek safety in flight. Ten days afterwards Payindah Khan, Dhurband Walla, with numerous followers, fought with Goolaub Sing's force from sunrise to sunset, numbers were killed on either side, and Goolaub Sing finding the country a little too hot for him, retired to his former station in Peshawur.

COUDR.—The King elect is adopting sound and good measures; he has guaranteed all arrears of pay, civil and military; he has avoided the fault of making any abrupt changes; the ministers of the late King are still retained; but the feelings and policy of the present man are sufficiently well understood to make it almost certain that they will be dismissed so soon as the establishments are paid, and affairs become more settled. A sum of money exceeding fifty lakhs has been found concealed in the Palace; and revenue is being collected with less difficulty than was anticipated. The King, who was formerly minister, is perfectly acquainted with the routine of business, and examines into every thing. An immense reduction has been made in the household expenditure: much of which reform is no doubt attributable to the simple habits and advanced age of the new King; but there are not wanting persons who insinuate, that he does not yet feel himself so firmly fixed upon the throne, as to admit him of his indulging in the full pomp of sovereignty.

NEPAUL.—Letters to the 27th July state, that Cutmandoo was recently very nearly being the scene of a civil war, or something verging on it, and that the cause of this was partly owing to change of Ministry, and partly attributable to the sudden demise of the King's youngest son, who, some say, was poisoned at the instigation of the ex-minister and his party, for the purpose of revenging themselves on the King for their disgrace. Be this as it may, however, the promote and energetic measures taken by his Majesty and the new Minister, have completely defeated all the machinations of Bhem Sien Thappa and his powerful adherents, a great many of whom, with himself, are now in chains, and strongly guarded, waiting their trial, and decapitation, it is expected, will be the fate of all who have taken part with him. It is supposed the ex-minister and his party are possessed of considerable sums of money, and until it be squeezed out of them they will be allowed to repent of their sins. The King has now his palace guarded by three thousand of his chosen soldiery with loaded muskets, and it is further stated that the King is so much afraid of being poisoned, that he will neither allow egress nor ingress to the palace, nor will he eat anything that has not been cooked and brought to him by the hands of his Rancee, who had a very narrow escape, as the poison which was administered to the unfortunate Prince was intended for herself, as she has been a thorn in the side of Bhem Sien Thappa, for very many years past. The physicians also of Nepaul are very likely to pay dear for the Prince's death, as reports state, four or five are now in confinement and more under suspicion of having been abettors, will not remain long out ofurance. The royal Physician has been turned out of office, and it is said the Maharaj is now in quest of the sons of his grandfather's physician, thinking there is more dependence to be placed on the former friends of the state, than on the upstart Thapas, and their fry, as they are now designated.

ULWAR.—The following is an extract from a letter dated Ulwar 14th July 1857. The weather here is very warm, and we have had scarcely any rain. The fever is raging most furiously and making great ravages among all classes of people, and numbers are carried to their last homes daily. About six days ago one of the Ranees was delivered of a boy—the day was celebrated with great rejoicings, and nuzzurs were presented to the Raja by all; but unhappily the child died the 4th day after its birth. Three other Ranees are on the eve of being confined, and then more nuzzurs will be exacted!

UMMOOJAN and Isfundyar Beg are not in such repute as they were on their first arrival here; in fact they appear to be much disappointed and very low in spirits in these days. The treasury is very low and there are no signs of the establishments being paid.

HUSHTNUGR.—It is well known that Mahomed Khan being afraid of all the zumeendars going over to Dost Mahomed, has written to Raja Dhyau Sing, mentioning that several of them had secretly joined the son of Dost Mahomed, but that if the assistance of a small force and a few guns was afforded to him, he would punish them. A force was immediately sent. Four hundred thieves attempted to rob the Suwars, and managed to enter their tents; luckily the suwars on ascertaining the nature of the attack and character of the assailants, displayed eminent judgment and valor, and succeeded in capturing two hundred of the depredators, in addition to the numerous dead. The prisoners were sent towards Peshawur on the following morning. On their arriving at Jumrood, Rajah Dhyau Sing amused himself by tying several of them in different attitudes to trees, all the rest were hanged at Jumrood, except the few who were known to possess wealth, they were reserved to be ransomed! It is said, that these severe measures towards the thieves have put the zumeendars in a state of funk, and, consequently, they have abandoned their intention of joining Dost Mahomed, and have taken to paying the revenue.

BHOPAL.—The Nuwab of Bhopaul has been besieged for a few months past in the fort of Ashta by the forces of his wife and mother-in-law. The country is in a most disorganized state, overrun by hordes of banditti, our subjects are plundered by both of the contending parties, and travellers robbed and murdered.

ATLEE MUSJID.—Travellers says that many of the Pathans at Khybur had lately told the sons of Dost Mahomed, that Misree Khan was corrupting some of his friends, and had declared that he wished to see the Sikh army, after taking Ullee Mu-jid, attack Jellalabad. On hearing this the son of Dost Mahomed was angry and sent some of his own servants to seize the offender. Misree Khan having ascertained the state of feeling towards him, and having obtained intelligence of the nature of the measures to be adopted against him, fled. Some of his friends were seized by the Dooranees and taken to Dost Mahomed's son: they were killed by having their bellies ripped open by the common executioner, and their bodies were tied on camels and paraded through the whole army, the public crier vociferating that all who committed a similar crime should suffer a similar death.

KARTARPOOR ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE SUTLEGE.—By letters received from Kartarpoor, it appears that a dispute has been going on for about a month between the servants of Sirdar Nehal Sing, the ruler of Alwa, and those of Sirdar Soodhee Sadoo Sing, Harlarpoor wallah, regarding the boundary of Monza Jungera. An engagement lately took place, and the troops of the former power wounded some of those of the latter. On hearing this the ruler of Lahore has despatched four cavaliers with commissions to prevent bloodshed among the people of these chiefs, and the messengers have informed them that for the loss of each life, the party who should be the cause of it would be fined one thousand rupees.

CAUBOOL.—On the 20th of Rabee-ool-awal, the marriage of the youngest son of the ruler of Caubool was celebrated with great eclat; the expenditure on the occasion being enormous. The Ameer of Caubool, after all ceremonies were over, proceeded to Jullalabad and there distributed rich dresses to the Eusufzye Sirdars, who were present. His Highness then set out for Khybur for the purpose of awaiting there the arrival of a large reinforcement to enable him to take the field against the Sikhs in a manner so as to do justice to bravely.

MADRAS.

SHIPPING OF MILITARY STORES.—The Madras Government has been actively employed in shipping military stores for Moulemein. Speculation has been on the stretch, to find out the cause of these martial demonstrations.

COPPER COINAGE.—The denizens of Madras are greatly inconvenienced for the want of copper and small silver coin.

CUSTOM DUTIES.—PROCLAMATION.—Fort St. George, July 17, 1837. It is hereby proclaimed that the Governor in Council of Fort St. George, by and with the sanction of the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India in Council, has ordered that from the 12th August 1837, the levy of customs upon goods and merchandize imported or exported by land into or from, or passing through or sold within the territories subject to the Presidency of Fort St. George, and upon goods and merchandize imported by land into, or produced or manufactured within the limits of the Collectorate of Madras, shall be confined to the following 36 articles.

1 Cloths; 2 Tobacco; 3 Betel Leaves; 4 Ganjah; 5 Bang; 6 Godauk; 7 Opium; 8 Oils; &c.; 9 Ghee; 10 Betel Nut; 11 Tamarind; 12 Castor Oil Seeds; 13 Gingly Oil Seeds; 14 Sugar; 15 Jaggery; 16 Coconut; 17 Copra or Dry Coconut; 18 Iron; 19 Chay Root; 20 Indigo; 21 Salt Petre; 22 Grain on (exportation); 23 Gunny; 24 Cumblies; 25 Timber; 26 Cotton Thread (on exportation); 27 Cotton (on exportation); 28 Silk; 29 Pepper; 30 Cardamums; 31 Cummin Seed; 32 Sandalwood; 33 Red Wood; 34 Dying Flowers; 35 Hides; 36 Goa Saly,

All Goods and Merchandize, save and except such as are described in the above List, are hereby declared to be exempt from Land Customs and Town duties from the above date.—By order of the Governor in Council. H. CHAMBER, Chief Secretary.

THE JAVA.—The report of the loss of the Java off of the Cape, is false.

TANJORE GOVERNMENT PAPER.—Several gentlemen, holders of Government Promissory Notes of the Tanjore Debt, made, in March last, a representation to the Government requesting that the Accountant General and Sub-Treasurer as Government Agents, might be authorised to receive such Notes upon the same terms as other Government Promissory Notes. They further suggested that similar precautions, with a view to prevent forgery, as are in use in other Government Promissory Notes, ought to be adopted in regard to the notes of the Tanjore Debt. The address has been favorably received.

SUPREME COURT.—Another case of considerable local interest to the Hindoo population of Chintadrappettah was decided on the first day of the term. The question in dispute related to a little Sawmy House and was, who had the right to it? This Sawmy House contains nothing but a single pillar fixed into the earth at the very confines of the village towards Egmore, and is supposed by the natives to keep the devil out of Chintadrappettah. This decision was upon the second trial to try the right to the property, and must have cost fifty times the value of the Pillar of Stone.—The matter is to be again agitated.

THE GOVERNOR.—The return of the Right Honourable the Governor to Madras has been further postponed. His Lordship, it is supposed, will extend his stay at Bangalore to the end of August.

THE MAIL COACH COMPANY.—The Mail Coach Company are very sanguine of the success of their plan—and also of receiving very large support from the government—we hope both anticipations may be fully accomplished.

LORD ELPHINSTONE.—Lord Elphinstone, it would appear, had left Bangalore for the purpose of visiting some parts of the Mysore country; the purport of this visit had not got abroad, but it was not expected his Lordship would be absent from Bangalore above a week.

TRANSIT DUTIES.—The amount to which the Transit duties at this Presidency have been relieved by a recent proclamation of Government, has been given at ten lakhs of rupees. This, though not equal to what had been expected, must afford considerable relief.

MASULIPATAM.—Masulipatam has been visited with rain, and at length there is every appearance of a continuance of it: the people there are suffering for want of copper coin; the exchange for the last two months having fluctuated between 11 fanams 40 cash and 11 fanams 20 cash per rupee.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—A most daring highway robbery took place a few days ago between Bangalore and Arcot. A gentleman's bandies were stopped three miles on this side of Battanungulam, his men and servants were knocked down, his trunks forcibly broken open with some kind of knife, and all his things stolen.

CHUNDOL LAL.—The following is extracted from a letter dated Secunderabad the 28th July:—

"The prognostications of the city sages touching the immortality of CHUNDOL LAL are likely to prove the baseless fabric of a dream sooner than was anticipated. The poor man is to all appearance dying! He was taken seriously ill with bowel complaint, and has been gradually sinking ever since; refusing medicine and relying upon prayers, charms and charities for recovery. It is supposed that his son, BALA PUNSHAD, the big elephant, will succeed him; but it very questionable whether he will be able to retain the seals of office long. Without the title of a title of the father's talent, and aptitude for business, he out-Herods Herod in all he objectionable qualities."

THUNDER-STORM AT ARCOT.—Letters from Arcot mention, that a tremendous thunder-storm was experienced there on the 2d instant, with very vivid lightning. A sepoy of the 5th L. C., who was on sentry inside the standard guard, was struck dead, and two others were severely wounded. The electric fluid entered on one side of the house and passed quite through it, breaking to pieces two very large and strong teak beams. The tanks were said to be quite full, and the place very healthy: only four men of the 5th cavalry were in hospital.

THE CHOLERA.—Accounts from Secunderabad, to July 18th, state that the cholera had prevailed in the city and suburbs of Hyderabad during the previous fortnight to a considerable extent, and was at that time causing great ravages. The mortality by some reports was 150 a day, and by others 200 a day, in the city and neighbourhood. There has been very little rain at Hyderabad this season, perhaps not more than one-third of the usual quantity, and apprehensions are entertained of a bad monsoon.

Cholera has been so prevalent in Salem that it has been thought necessary to dispatch additional medical assistance to that place.

At Chittoor, the cholera was raging fearfully. No less than 20 individuals of the establishment of one of the judges are reported to have died of it.

PRINCE DE JOINVILLE.—Prince de Joinville, a son of the celebrated Prince D'Eckmahl, is on board of the French frigate Artemise.

BOMBAY.

CHARTER FOR THE BOMBAY BANK.—It is said that the recently arrived mails brought a short and pithy letter from the Court of Directors to the Bombay Government, in reply to the recommendation transmitted from Bombay in January last, in favor of a Charter being granted to the Bank of Bombay. The dispatch conveys the distinct refusal of the Court to sanction the measure, and in strong terms, cautions the Bombay Government not to hold out the least expectation that the application will be entertained at a future period. The Board of Control have without hesitation confirmed the view taken by the Court of Directors of the matter.

THE GUICOWAR.—Venecram, the karbharee of His Highness the Guicowar of Baroda, recently left Baroda under the pretence of attending the nuptial ceremony at Gopallwar Myral, giving it to be understood that he should be back in four days. Some say the truth really was that he was going to Calcutta with an appeal against the Bombay Government from his master, while others affirm that he was taking himself off after cheating his master, and that he had a Parsee with him. He was coming in a carriage from Sawlee, when his master sent him a palankeen and some rich honorary dresses. At the instance of Venecram, a great meeting was held at the house of Murree Bhugtee, on the 27th of June, to address the Supreme and Bombay Government, testifying their approbation of his conduct and utility, and requesting that he should not be removed from the office he at present holds under the Guicowar Government; and accordingly addresses have been prepared and signed by a number of people, and are about to be presented to the Resident.

PUNISHMENT AWARDED FOR ASSAULTING THE HINDOOS AND POLLUTING THEIR SHRINE.—On the 17th July, Mr. Pyne, the session Judge at Tannah, after a careful and deliberate investigation, passed sentence of ten years' imprisonment with hard labour in irons, upon 17 Mussulmen who were convicted of assaulting the Hindoos, polluting a Hindoo Temple, and destroying an image of Wittoba during the late Mohurram. The punishment awarded is considered by the people at Dheewndy and the Hindoo community a slight one for so daring an outrage.

THE SATARA STATE.—The Satara State is again in as disturbed a condition as it was when Govindow the Dewan was taken into custody.

SHIP LAUNCH.—On the 19th ultimo, a beautiful ship of six hundred tons, was floated out of the Bombay docks, and named the Rajasthan. The ship belongs to Messrs. Nicol and Co.

THE CROPS.—The prospects throughout the country are extremely favorable, and a sufficient quantity of rain appears to have fallen in many of the most important districts to satisfy the demands of the cultivators. There seems every prospect of an abundant season and the price of grain has already in some quarters suffered a decline.

PRESENT TO MESSRS. MCGREGOR, BROWN RIGG AND CO.—On the 22nd ultimo a handsome silver snuff box was presented by Messrs. Farnworth and Co., Agents to Mr. Waghorn, on behalf of that gentleman, to Messrs. McGregor, Brownrigg, and Co., as a proof of the thankfulness with which Mr. Waghorn regarded the attention and assiduity with which the last mentioned firm had previous to the transfer of his agency from them to Messrs. Farnworth and Co., at all times promoted his interest.

THE BHEWNDY CRIMINALS.—The Sudder Adawlut has reviewed the sentence passed upon the Bhewendy prisoners by the Session Judge, and decided that in condemning them to 10 years' imprisonment, that gentleman had exceeded the power vested in him by the Government Regulations, which prohibit the Judges of the Zillah and Provincial Courts, in cases of this nature, from awarding a punishment of more than 7 years' imprisonment. The Sudder Adawlut finally decided that six of the prisoners should undergo each an imprisonment of one year with hard labour, and further pay a fine of 1,000 Rs. or suffer another years' imprisonment with hard labour. At the end of their imprisonment, each individual to enter into recognizances for his good behaviour for 5 years, himself in 2,000 Rs. and two securities, each in the same amount. Five of the remainder were set at large from then having been convicted upon the testimony of only one witness; but were ordered to find securities for their good conduct as above. Six who were considered as the ringleaders in the late affrays have not as yet had sentence passed upon them; but their case is under consideration. Several witnesses in the case, who were found guilty of prevarication and perjury, have been sentenced to dheend or parading through the town on an as, imprisonment and hard labour.

A meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held on the 5th instant, when Mr. Brownrigg was elected Chairman and Mr. Gordon Deputy Chairman, for the ensuing year. At the same meeting a resolution was come to, to petition the Court of Directors on the subject of extending the powers of the minor presidencies.

GOPALL RAO MYRAL.—Venecram, and one or two other officers of his Highness, have gone to Shingar to conciliate and bring back Gopall Rao Myral, who has departed from Baroda.

MURDER.—The daughter of a wealthy tailor has been murdered by an old woman and her accomplices in order to procure the ornaments the deceased had about her person at the time, valued at about 800 rupees. The murderers have been apprehended.

AFRAY BETWEEN THE GOSAEENS.—We understand that two men were lately killed in a dispute between the two sects of Gosaeens, who, to the number of several thousands, had repaired to Trimbuk, near the source of the Godavery river, on pilgrimage in the last month. It seems that good order was preserved on the 9th ultimo by the presence of a body of troops from Nassick, and the assistant Collector, Mr. Bell; but on the evening of Monday the 17th, when Mr. Bell, with the men, had returned to Nassick, the hatred of the contending sects burst out into an open quarrel, and each party began to pelt the other with stones. The sect called Oodasee stood on one side, and those giving themselves the high names of Nirunjunes Nirbanes were on the other; and it was this latter party that unfortunately lost two of its number in the contest. Immediately on being informed of this, Mr. Bell arrived on the spot with two or three hundred sepoys, and apprehended several Gosaeens, the leaders of the affray, and took them to Nassick. It is said that none of the Oodasees, who were the aggressors, have been apprehended. They are the most numerous and the most powerful sect, being composed of the pearl dealers of Bombay, Hyderabad, &c. Many of them call themselves followers of Nanuk, or the founder of the Sheik religion.

CEYLON.

MEETING OF THE FRIENDS OF SIR R. W. HORTON.—On the 27th of July a meeting of the friends of Sir R. W. Horton took place at the Hon'ble the Chief Justice's, for the purpose of taking into consideration the best mode of testifying their regard for His Excellency previously to his departure from Ceylon. A letter was, however, received from Sir Robert Horton declining to sanction their purpose whilst he remained Governor, so that the Meeting was dissolved without coming to any resolution.

CENTRAL CIRCUIT.—On the 28th of July last, the Hon'ble the Chief Justice Mr. Sergeant Rough, left Colombo for Kandy, on the Central Circuit of the Supreme Court.

BURMAH.

ARRACAN.—Letters from Arracan to the 29th July, say, the assistant-surgeon at Kyauk Phyo and upwards of 100 men are in Hospital, and the officers are some ill, some well. Including the medical men, there are only seven at present doing duty with the regiment.

On the 13th July, there was an inundation; the water rose many feet. The river rose at least twenty feet, and seventy houses on the river side were washed away; houses, cows, goats, &c. followed them; the streams in the town could not be forded by a man, and mud lay on the ground three inches deep and destroyed the roads altogether.

Intelligence from Rangoon to the 28th of July has been received during the week. The Resident, Colonel Burney, had arrived there on the 6th of that month, having left Ava on the 17th of June. The new King, Tharawaddie, left Ava on the 10th of June for Kyaukmying, a town on the right bank of the Erawadi, fourteen miles due east of Monteshobo, where he proposes to establish his future capital. As the Residency could not accompany him, and as he desired to have Ava deserted and a heap of ruins, the Resident obtained his permission to retire with the Residency to Rangoon, until such time as he has settled his Government and appointed proper ministers and officers. The King parted with the Resident on the best of terms, and authorized him to correspond with him from Rangoon. It is, however, to be apprehended, that he is intoxicated with his extraordinary success,—has such a high opinion of his late and fortune,—gives his tongue such great liberties, and is surrounded by such a set of ignorant and mischievous people, that the chances are very strong in favour of another Burmese war. He has set Aloupra as a model to himself, and is urged by his own pride and vanity, as well as by the incessant instigations of his followers, to try and restore Burmah to its former state of power and glory,—that is, to dispend altogether with the presence of an English Resident, and to recover the territory and honor lost by the last war with us. A translation of the new regulations issued regarding the duties and customs at Rangoon has also been received. The regulations and orders of the Royal Grandfather alluded to in this document, prescribed the scale of duties which existed in the time of the late King, and a copy of which with explanations was published in the Hurkaru of the 6th September 1834. The reduction now ordered, amounts to about 217 rupees in the port and anchorage charges, besides the abolition of a tax of 10 per cent., which has hitherto been levied here upon the hire of coolies, carpenters and caulkers. Tharawaddie still persisted in considering the treaties made with the British by his brother, as cancelled by the change of Government, and refused to recognise the rank and authority of the Governor-General, and our right to maintain a Residency at his capital.

SUMATRA.

The following information respecting the Boonjal war is communicated by a correspondent of the Hurkaru, in a letter dated the 8th of July.—Since the unsuccessful attempt of General Cleerins in October, 1836, to carry the Fort of Boonjal, from which he was bravely repulsed after having effected a breach, things were allowed to remain in statu quo, until March last, when Major-General Cochius, a veteran who had already gathered laurels in the field of Java, arrived with a fresh and considerable reinforcement from Batavia, and with a soldier's determination to put an end to hostilities that had already been attended with so much expence and loss of lives. Since the arrival of General Cochius, preparations of the most belligerent nature were set on foot under his immediate superintendence. A successful attack was made on some of the strongest posts of the enemy, one of which surrendered at discretion, and the rest were taken possession of at a great sacrifice of lives on both sides; for the hostile parties were compelled to approximate so closely as to be obliged to dispend with firing, and to have recourse to the bayonet and the pike. The Padries fought bravely, according to the General's own statement, but were eventually defeated and forced to retire further into the interior. The war may now, in a manner, be said to have come to a close, as the few villages that have not yet been taken possession of, are so insignificant, that the denizens of Padang were in hourly expectation of hearing of their surrender,—particularly as the supplies of the Malays were entirely cut off, and all communication with the main body effectually prevented.

There were many speculations afloat, among the European Inhabitants of Padang, with respect to the effect, the possession of the interior by the Dutch Government will have on the trade of this coast. Some anticipate a monopoly of coffee on the part of Myneer, which, if it really takes place, will occasion serious grievance to the mercantile community. Others seem to think, that the trade will considerably improve, inasmuch as the demand for articles of European manufacture will materially increase. This is a circumstance not unlikely to occur, but the question is, whether the "Dutch Trading Society," who form already a stumbling block in the way of the merchants, will not have the trade of the interior exclusively in their hands, supported as they are both by the home and the local Government.

PENANG.

Penang papers to the 15th of July, have been received during the month. The Penang Gazette state that the Rajah of Acheen had refused positively to give the Dutch any satisfaction for having harboured the men who run off with the Dutch guarda-costa schooner Dolphin, after having murdered her Commander, and for having retained the vessel, the treasure on board, and the children of the late Commander, although Myneers had offered to compromise the matter and expressed their willingness to be satisfied if the children only were restored. The reason the Rajah assigns for adopting the course he has pursued, is, that the Dutch had unjustifiably invaded the territories of his relation, the Rajah of Pagaruyong, murdered his subjects, and sent the Rajah himself a prisoner to Batavia. The Acheen Rajah was repairing his fortifications and making other preparations for war; and we may, therefore, expect shortly to hear of the commencement of hostilities between the Dutch and Acheenese.

SINGAPORE.

The Singapore journals of the 13th of July, furnish intelligence from China to the 12th of May, which is not, however, of much importance. The men-of-war had been cruising about the Straits in search of the pirates, but had not fallen in with any of them; although they had been met by, and had given chase to, trading vessels, which had only shortly before been boarded by the boats of the Zephyr. Two Chinese merchants have been expelled from the Singapore Chamber of Commerce for fraudulent practices.—Saltpetre has been recently manufactured in large quantities at Perak, and promises to become an article of considerable export.

Singapore journals to the 20th July, intimate the release from slavery of several Quedah Malays, of both sexes, who had been in a state of bondage in the islands of Lingin. The emancipation of these unfortunate people, was accomplished by the commander of the Dutch frigate Ajas.

Prince William Frederick Henderick, a son of the Dutch king, was about to visit Singapore.

PERSIA.

Letters from Persia, 10th 9th of July, state, that the passengers per Hugh Lindsay were expected at Tehran on the 7th June. The Shaw had it in contemplation again to proceed towards Herat with hostile views.

Advises from Bushire state that a proclamation has been issued by the Shaw of Persia, prohibiting horses being exported from his empire; it has already taken effect at Bushire, to the great prejudice of the British trade.

The Persian Gulf has been very unhealthy. Lieutenant Poole, Indian Navy, and Mr. John Stewart, Assistant Surgeon, both died on the 10th of June off Abutubee, of the Bassadore fever, after an illness of only three days, the former commanding, and the latter surgeon of the H. C. sloop-of-war Clive. The officers, seamen and marines have subscribed handsomely towards erecting a tablet to their memory.

A letter from the Tehran, of the 7th of May, states:—There is very little of novelty here. The Emperor of Russia, it is stated at Tiflis, is coming to Poti and Erivan in October. This will place our Shah in great alarm, and no doubt the journey will not be undertaken without an object, and of course an interview will be proposed by the Emperor; but I entertain hopes that the Shah's alarm will prevent him from acceding to this. There is little apprehension of Herat this year. The financial embarrassment is so great that it appears to be out of the power of the Government to assemble troops without taking money out of the treasury, which step, as there is very little left, it is unwilling to undertake. The Russians are sending 12,000 men from Georgia against the Circassians, and 12,000 are to proceed from the Koban.

CHINA.

During the month have been received, per Sylph, China papers to the 13th of June. The Opium business remained in much the same position, as at our last intelligence. The last quotations were, for Patna, old 880 dozen per chest; new 815. Benares old 730 drs.; new 665. Malwa 525 to 535. Turkey, 525. The transactions were very limited, and nearly confined to "outside" deliveries of Malwa. One of the Government preventive cruisers had attacked one of the opium junks with 100 chests on board: the crew, amounting to 40 men, made a stout resistance, but the cruiser having sent a shot into the junk's side, below water mark, she went down with all on board. Governor Tang had issued a threatening edict without date, directing the English merchants Jardine, Dent, and Turner, forthwith to betake themselves to Macao, for that nothing was left to him (the Governor) but to let the laws take their course. The Canton Press contains an account of the mutiny of part of the crew, Manila men, of a Spanish vessel, La Fama. They murdered the captain, mate and boatswain, but were afterwards overpowered and secured whilst in a state of intoxication. On the news of the revolution at Goa and Demau reaching Macao, a disposition manifested itself at the last mentioned place to follow the example so set them by the former settlements. The Governor therefore called a public meeting, to deliberate upon the question, when it was unanimously resolved to adopt the constitution of 1822.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From the Bengal Hurkaru Price Current, August 26, 1837.)

INDIGO.—The accounts from the Upper Provinces are extremely unfavorable, while the rains and the north easterly winds during the past week must materially injure the districts nearer hand. The out-turn of the crop therefore may now be confidently reckoned below 90,000 maunds.

RAW SILK.—Very little has been done since our last at low prices. No transaction has yet taken place in the new bund, but as the produce will be large, prices will probably decline still further.

SILK PIECE GOODS.—A few purchases of corahs are reported for the Europe Markets, at unaltered prices. The exports this year, as compared with last, are very heavy.

COTTON.—A few transactions have been made for shipments on the vessels under dispatch for China; but no activity in the market and prices remain unaltered.

SALTPETRE.—The purchases reported are for the English and American markets. We quote the prices at a shade of decline since our last.

SUGAR.—The scarcity of coon bills has caused some inquiry in this produce for remittances to England, and several parcels have been bought during the week at our last quotations.

LAC.—In limited enquiry. A purchase of a parcel of Lac Dye for the American market is the only transaction reported since our last. The prices of both Shell Lac and Lac Dye have given away.

GRAIN.—The demand is limited, and confined to Moonghy and Ballum Rice, and Wheat for shipments to the Mauritius and Coasts.

The prices of the day exhibit a shade of improvement on Moonghy and Ballum Rice, Wheat and Grain.

OPPIUM.—Nothing yet doing, but shipments will be actively resumed, the moment the Government orders resulting from their late liberal measure, are publicly notified.

CANEA.—A sale is reported at a slight reduction in price.

OPPIUM (BOMBAY).—Have also been sold at a shade of decline in price.

MACE AND NUTMEGS.—A sale of the latter is reported at our quotation which remains unaltered.

PEPPER.—In limited enquiry, and the assortments may be quoted as in our last.

BLOCK TIN.—Has given way in price, in consequence of recent importations.

MULE TWIST.—Two days of Native holidays have occasioned some interruption in the course of business this week. No sales have been reported, and we may quote the prices as in our last.

TURKEY RED AND OTHER DYED YARNS. Without sales, and remain at former prices.

CHINTZES.—Very little done since our last. Fine quality Pines and Neutrals are enquired for at a slight improvement in prices.

WHITE COTTONS.—The market continues in a depressed state, and transactions since our last have been extremely limited. We have no change in prices to notice.

WOOLLENS.—A sale of 290 pieces middling quality assorted colors is the only transaction reported since our last at our quotation.

COPPER.—The market continues inactive, and prices, notwithstanding the absence of sales, are quoted at a decline throughout the assortments.

The sale of Sheathing and Braziers, reported in our abstract, is by the Honorable Company at co.'s rs. 35 per factory maund, cash.

IRON.—The sale reported exhibits a further decline in the prices of this metal.

STEEL.—The sale of Blistered Steel has been effected at our quotation.

LEAD.—Without sale, and remains at our last quotations.

SPELTER.—Has given way in price. We have heard of no sales during the week.

TIN PLATES.—The sale reported shows an improvement on the price of this metal.

QUICKSILVER.—Continues in very good enquiry, and our market is bare.

MOONGHYR.

JOINT MAGISTRATE'S COURT, 24TH AUGUST, 1837.

A PACK OF BLOOD HOUNDS LET LOOSE UPON THOSE WHOM THEY HAD WORRIED.

Yesterday and this day were occupied by the court in examining finally the case in which Buratalee, jamadar, and others, stood charged with torturing Moonghia, by which she died. The case having been brought to a close by the Assistant to the Joint Magistrate (Mr Hodgson) a roobukaree was made referring the case to the court, in which that court lays it down as its opinion, that the allegations of Mohun, the prosecutor, had been borne out by the evidence, &c. procured before it, and gives it as its opinion that the case should be committed to the court of the Sessions judge. This is a lengthy roobukaree, in which all the particulars have been distinctly touched on. His court reviews the whole of the evidence, and following witnesses, whose depositions we had not been present at the assistant Joint Magistrate's court to note down, were heard along with those we had reported on in a former occasion. Sobha, the husband of Moonghia, deposes that Rughoosa, Joommun Khan, and Nyasook, had bound and beat her in consequence of which she died. That Buratalee, jamadar, Mookoun Lal, zameendare's Putwaree, Roobnath, hulwasee and others, ordered to beat, &c. That they bound her in the morning, and after repeating the above treatment several times during two days, compassed her death. Marks of beating, &c. were very visible on her body. Did not come to complain himself in consequence of having been laid up by the ill treatment he had himself received. Jithase, the daughter of Moonghia, plainly corroborates the above. That her mother in her presence was reduced to a state of nudity, beat, &c. That she was never in the habit of using opium, nor in the present occasion had procured her death. Her mother had attempted to escape from the injuries that were being inflicted on her by running away, but she was forcibly brought back by her prosecutors, who repeated their cruelties. Chundoo, a nephew of Moonghia, corroborates much of the above and among others things deposes, that she was beaten with the ends of lathies. He did not eat opium. Deena Dasad, another nephew of Moonghia's, corroborates the above. Bechoa, the son of Moonghia, deposes that, besides the ill treatment which his mother had experienced, he had himself been tortured and carried towards a jungle with a command to shew where he had concealed the money he was suspected to have stolen. He was brought back to the tree. Moonghia's clothes were taken from her. She was thrown on the ground by her neck being twisted. She was beat with shoes, kicked, and beaten with the end of lathies, of which ill treatment she expired. Several men were bound in the first instance in order to procure confession, but failing to accomplish their object, some of the followers of the jamadar cried out, "you will get nothing from the men, the woman should be brought into requisition," which was done accordingly. Deena, one of the witnesses, was taxed with having omitted to mention to day, the circumstances of his having brought jamoon leaves, &c. for Moonghia, when she was about to expire, but which he had done before as per jamadar's report. He stoutly denied that he had ever said so in the Moofussil, and that it must have been a fabrication of that officer. Sobha, the husband of Moonghia, was taxed with contradicting himself by having in one instance before said, he was laid up from the effects of the beating he had received from the jamadar and his crew, and in another that he had followed the corpse of his wife to Moonghyr, and was present when it was committed to the Ganges. Moreover, that if his wife's death concerned him more than Mohun his nephew, it would have been expected that he would have come forward to prosecute those who had compassed her death. This was easily accounted for by Jithase, who seemed to be quite clear in explaining that her father was indeed laid up during the best part of the two days of the prosecution, but was sufficiently recovered to follow the body of her mother to Moonghyr. That as Mohun was an active man, had withal a good deal of assurance, and was moreover employed when occasions required it in preference to others, he was on this occasion also sent forward to prosecute their common tormentors. We plainly saw that the old man was by far not a fit person to be employed as leader in a case in which he would be opposed to people in power, and such power too in the Moofussil, that none but madmen or those rendered desperate by persecution, would dare to exasperate by a prosecution.

We saw the motive of the selection of Mohun instantly by the question itself of the court, for before it was proposed, it scarcely occurred to us, that the prosecution by Mohun could be construed in the way it has been. The court seemed to give the prisoners the benefit of a doubt and that in the single circumstance of Sobha's apparent discrepancies. The court gave as its res (in summing up the case) that it could not be supposed, from the evidence adduced in the case, that Moonghia had come to her death by opium, nor yet that she had been killed outright by the treatment she was represented to have received from the jamadar and his gang, though the court could not but allow that the woman might have died by excitement of her feelings on the occasion of the tudrook. This of itself would have appeared to us to furnish one of the strongest reasons for condemning the whole crew of torturers, for the feelings of women ought to have been remembered, ere they were tortured by engines and tormented by chilies. The very circumstance of chilies having been called for, and gone to be fetched by one of the ministers of the arch tormentor, would reasonably appear to have had terrors enough for the feelings of the woman who was to be subjected to a monstrous species of barbarity, leaving other injuries aside, to have produced death, and the crime of the tormentor ought to be based on the circumstances of the feelings of his victim being overpowered by excessive dread. But it cannot be denied that the woman did not die before the arrival of the blood hounds of the police at Gola on a glorious shikar, but just when the tudrook was going on step by step, day after day, in the most unwarrantably illegal manner, that is, endeavouring to extort confession of guilt from suspected persons.

The result of the decision on this case will place the prosecutor and his witnesses in a position of which some notion may be formed by those who are acquainted with the manner in which these things are managed in the Moofussil. The jamadar has not only been released, but restored to his office in the self-same thanna.—Markham, September, 18.

The public sale of mohals in the arrears to Government, commenced on the 12th and closed this day. As it is usual on such occasions, a great deal of noise and bustle were patiently endured by the presiding authority. At times it was a regular Babylonish disorder of sounds and words, which, were we gifted with command, power and capacity of ambidexterity, and hands as numerous as the Goddess Parvati's, we should struggle being able to produce any thing like a comprehensible sketch, with a view to delineate the features of the land confusion. Here was one bellowing uproariously for further time to pay in his dues; but on being questioned knew not how he could contrive it. There was another racking his invention to procure a suspension of the stroke of the fatal hammer for a few days, and verily and truly he would discharge all his dues to the uttermost farthing; but defaulter as he was, not a Rubba could he get out from his humabund or pargue, by way of earnest of his sincerity. Another vowed to ob-jurgations of his fellow-shareholders, who, if the Court would believe him, had by hook or by crook, that is, by means every thing but fair, collected all the Mofucil assets and appropriated to their own respective uses and comforts, leaving the hopeless complainant just intervices to comfort himself as well as he could with such substance as might afford a plentiful repast to a comelion How then would he manufacture the means of aiding the officers of the state, which peradventure required to be headed to pluckers against the uncouth appearances in the Northern bar? Another had the money desiderated ready to be paid, by which he meant, by and bye, no body could say when, although he attested his fidelity to the Government by Dahass Sahib ka' Some, at the very nick of time between the elevation of the arm of the Collector and his momentum with the dahing thwack on the table, dahmied the chalan, and opportunely extricated themselves from total wreck. We were amused by some again, who came provided with the needful, but cunningly kept themselves concealed in the crowd, and I sent another person forward to bid for the lot and purchase it denomies; but the court seemed to be up to such tricks, a question or two brought to light the manoeuvre, and the disconnected defaulter crept forward and paid down the cash. There were others who protested that they had deposits of money over and above the amount of their dues in the Collector's treasury, from which they begged the deficiency might be recovered.

 Enquiry, however, showed, that the said deposits were made by others on whom the defaulters had certain claims, in virtue of which they wished they might be considered as their own, and so on, but the following lots were knocked down.

1st. Talook Puhawar in Purgannah Mulker, on Mouza containing 1 025 beeghas for which the proprietor paid a juma of 677 rs. 5. as 4 pie, and sold for 250 rs. The small amount for which it was sold, would lead to suppose, that it cannot be a productive estate, but as far as our information extends, it is not so in reality. There is a clear remunerating profit and the lands not reckoned bad.

2d. Talook Infurnagur in purgannah Bulea, comprising two mouzas, measuring 3,003 beeghas, and the Sudder juma payable thereon 2,619 rs. 11 as. 9 pie, knocked down for 6,300 rs. This is a good bargain and would make a good estate for a moderate capitalist.

3d. Jhiktea, in purgannah Farkeea, one mouza containing 231 beeghas and paying 180 rs. Sudder Malgoonara, knocked down for 520 rs. Of this estate it might be said that, if the lands were all engaged by riots at so low a rate as 1½ rs. per beegha, and the expenses of collection taken into consideration, there does not appear much in its favour. Good lands ought in any part of this district to pay at the least 2 rs. a beegha. 1½ 10 per cent. allowed to the maliks in the settlement would scarcely be gleaned from this mahal. And yet a purchaser was found to pay 520 rupees for it. For there is more in the parcel than is allowed to be known.

4th. Talook Beebhoord, in Purgannah Moonghyr, one Mouza, comprising 61 beeghas, (so we hear) for a juma of 200 rs. is forced, knocked down for 100 rs. This lot is a complete puzzle. How in the name of figures 200 rs. be paid to Government, expenses, of collection realized, and a remunerating profit super-induced from only 61 beeghas of land, is a question we are not able to understand, unless we can suppose that the lands are first rate, sugar cane for instance, which pay commonly 5 rs. per beegha; and 4,125 rs. paid for it! We are afraid the purchaser will find his fingers burnt by the bargain.

5th. Talook Mander, in purgannah Murethoo, one Mouza, paying a Sudder juma of 747 rs. 11 as. 10 pie, knocked down for 750 rs. The quantity of land comprising this Mouza we have not been able to ascertain. Whether the purchaser knows it or not we cannot say, but if the amount of the juma be considered, we might imagine that there ought to be a large tract of country attached to this Mouza, but the scale of juma, and the moderate amount of sale, makes the lot rather suspicious.

A review of these sales, though the estates that have been disposed of, subject to the confirmation of the Commissioner of Revenue, were small, gives a pretty fair criterion of the value of such landed property. We find that the majority of the talooks have lands extensive enough to yield a handsome profit, if they are good, and the prices paid for them by the natives themselves, might be regarded as a fair assurance of their value. We have made inquiries and have reason to be satisfied that there are no disputes connected with them. Boundary contentions will always exist in large estates between neighbouring Zamindars, but the lands contented for will generally appear to comprise a few beeghas, the complete loss of which, eventually, by the decrees of the courts, would not weigh a feather in the accounts of profit and loss. The extreme tenaciousness of right to every foot of land recorded in the jumabundee, is the only cause of the numerous complaints we hear about boundary disputes, and which is the cause no less of the large sums of money expended in carrying on fruitless litigations. Possession is readily given to purchasers and as easily obtained by them. It may happen that to pay a kist or two it would be necessary to have funds at their command to enable them to pay off the first one or two kists. After that all goes on smoothly enough. Native purchasers will not encroach on their coffers if they can possibly realize sufficient to pay the instalments from their tyute, and prefer keeping the latter back to the last moment. There is a about the Collector's Court speculators who purchase talooks and a day or two after the lots are knocked down to them, readily sell them to the defaulters, and thereby secure handsome profits. We have known individuals who realize large sums of money by such a trade. Others again appear in court on the days of sale with ready money and make advances to the defaulters at high premiums, payable in a few days on account, which they invest upon, or deposits of jewels or other valuable articles, and thus make a profitable job of it. We have never known them to lose by it.—Hankow, Sept. 19.

SEPTEMBER 6, 1837.

A BARE CASE SINGULARLY WORTHY OF NOTICE

About the 5th of July last a reebukara, accompanied by others, depots of witnesses, &c was sent by Mr. Liff, appointed sole deputy opium agent in this place, to the Joint Magistrate's Court, purporting to be investigations held by him in a case of some opium made away with by his Gomphtha Bodunchoonder Suika Nabeenchoonder Bhatterya, and Lamlal, and thereby, committing them to be used in the Foujdaree Court. The Court, without calling upon Mr. Liff to show when he had been arrested with judicial powers, and without further investigation, committed the defendants to the Hajjeh-tajee jail to be tried for the crimes laid to their charge. The defendants earnestly entreated the Court (the Officiating Joint Magistrate presiding at the time) to allow them to give bail, but their prayers were not attended to, and to jail they went. About a month afterwards (the joint Magistrate presiding) they presented a darkhast soliciting to be released from prison on bail, which the Court readily agreed to. Bulunchinder was bound (in the Foudaree Court) in recognizances of 300 rupees. Nubeenbunder and Lamlal, each in 100 rupees. The Court at the same time, considering the informality (as the Court thinks it merely was) of the proceedings by which the defendants were committed to the Foudaree Court, sent back the roobukaree, &c. of Mr. Clift with instructions to refer the case to the Court of the Deputy Opium Agent in the first instance. This was accordingly done, but the roobukaree and its accompaniments remain the same, the defendants continuing in bail meanwhile in the Foudaree Court. The proceedings of Mr. Clift were laid on the table in the 27th August, and the Sarishtahdar of the Opium department was about to read them, when one of the pleaders entertained by the defendants objected to the roobukaree with its accompaniments, forwarded by Mr. Clift to the Collector's Court, being proceeded on, as he did not consider them to be warranted by the Regulations of Government. The Court allowed the objection so far as to postpone the production of the proceedings of Mr. Clift, till it had questioned that officer on the subject of the objection taken by the pleader of the defendants. The case remained suspended till the 3d instant, when the proceedings of Mr. Clift, were again laid on the table and the Opium Sarishtahdar called upon to read them. The pleader of the defendant presented himself presently before the Court, and begged to know whether his objection had been overruled.

The Court replied that it had, on the strength of Reg. VII 1824, and of those of the instructions of the superior authorities furnished to Mr. Clift his appointment or afterwards, and his having taken the usual oath of office. The pleader contended that the regulation quoted by the court, as well as all the others on the subject of the Opium, or, cy, were applicable to covenanted officers alone and not at all to uncovenanted ones. He quoted Regulation IX of 1833, and observed that, in the Act of the appointment of uncovenanted Deputy Collectors, in which was power for Government to enact a special regulation in order to delegate judicial powers to them. As no such law had been made in favour of the uncovenanted Sub Deputy Opium agents, it appeared plain that Government never intended to put them in possession of judicial powers. That he considered the Sub Deputy Opium agent merely in the light of overseer of Opium cultivators, godown keepers, and refiner of the drug, and nothing more. He did not think any authority not excepting the Opium Board, competent to commit judicial powers to any person without the sanction of the existing or any special regulations of Government. He therefore prayed that the proceedings of Mr. Clift might not be made the ground of criminal prosecution against his clients. He at the same time presented a darkhast stating, that as he did not consider Mr. Clift to possess judicial powers, and that as, therefore, he could not commit his clients to the Foudaree Court (but which has nevertheless been done and in consequence of which his clients were imprisoned and are now held on bail) he prayed that his clients might be released from bail. The court said it would reject the prayer of the darkhast as it was satisfied that Mr. Clift was entrusted with judicial powers. The pleader begged that before the court passed any order on his darkhast, Mr. Clift might be called on to produce any authority he might possess for exercising judicial powers, and that the document might be filed with the darkhast. The Court refused to do so and remanded the petition adding that it would not produce the depositions sent by Mr. Clift, in the Foudaree Court, but in the Opium Department, where it would merely examine the matter, and if necessary, commit the case to be tried in the Foudaree Court. On the 5th September the pleader submitted the following demurrer for the consideration of the Court in the Opium Department:

"I respectfully beg on the part my clients, to demur to their being examined in the deputy Opium agent's court on the plea of Coram non Judice for the following reasons, viz. The court has been pleased to overrule my objection that an uncovenanted Sub-Deputy Opium agent was not authorized by the Acts and Regulations of Government to hold judicial proceedings (as Mr. Clift had done on the present occasion, as I conceive, unwarrantably) and that, therefore, the roobukaree with its accompaniments, sent to this court by him, ought not to be proceeded on. The Court has decided that the said Sub-Deputy Opium agent was, by the provisions of Regulations VII. 1824, and other Regulations (which still in my humble opinion do not apply to uncovenanted officers) vested with judicial powers. I respectfully submit that if such judicial powers are recognised in uncovenanted officers, the commitment of my clients by the Sub-Deputy Opium agent to be tried by the Foudaree Court, cannot be regarded as informal, and therefore my clients are now on their trial before that Court. It would be informal to examine them in this court while they are bound by bail in the Foudaree Court,—I am not acquainted with any regulation authorizing such a mode of procedure. If the Sub-Deputy Opium agent has a right to exercise judicial powers, (which I contend he has not in any shape whatsoever) his committing my clients to be tried in the Foudaree Court cannot be informal. It would rather have been irregular had he instead of so doing, sent them to be examined a fresh by the Deputy Opium agent. As, therefore, it has been decided by the Court, that an uncovenanted Sub Deputy Opium Agent has the privilege of exercising judicial powers, and he has in virtue of such powers, already committed my clients to be tried in the Foudaree Court, they cannot be examined anew in any other court. I therefore respectfully beg on the behalf of my clients to demur to the jurisdiction of this court to examine a case that is pending in the Foudaree Court. I this day the proceedings of Mr. Clift were again laid on the table, and the Court, (on the pleader presenting himself before it) said that it had already deferred the case too long; and notwithstanding the arguments of the pleader that the uncovenanted Sub Deputy Opium agents, were deus in this district allowed to exercise judicial powers, as he had learnt, the Sarishtahdar of the Opium Department was ordered to read the roobukaree of Mr. Clift, which was done accordingly. But the court would not allow the other papers to be read that accompanied it. It was stated in a part of the roobukaree that Mr. Clift had dismissed the defendants from their officers, which circumstance was noticed by the pleader as confirming his opinion, that as those officers were not included in the Deputy Opium agents establishment, but peculiarly his own, it might be taken as a proof of the nature of the duties he was required to discharge as overseer of Opium cultivators, &c. The Court said that Mr. Clift had the power of discharging the officers of the Opium Department also. The pleader was obliged to submit, expressing his regret that this case was not before a King's Court, for if it had, he would have advised his clients not to answer to the charge of the Court. The Court replied, that that was according to the English law; but if his clients refused to answer to a charge before his Court, he would commit them prison for contempt of Court. A roobukaree was directed to be sent to Mr. Clift purporting that the Court did not think it necessary to peruse any of the papers (why?) accompanying the defendants, but would send them to the Joint Magistrate's Court, where the defendants, &c., would be tried. The defendants are therefore recommended for trial in the Fouzdaree Court. Nothing further was done this day in this case. The pleader for the defendants has forwarded a petition to the Sessions Judge, praying that his clients might be released from bail, and that Mr. Clift might be called upon to shew by what authority he exercised judicial power. — Harkara, Sept. 22.

JOINT MAGISTRATE'S COURT, SEPTEMBER 8, 1837.

THE SAVING PROCEEDINGS.

We understood that a roobakaree has been sent to this court by the Sessions Judge, forwarding either a copy of the darkhast of the moohitakar of Budanchunder Surhan, &c. or the original requiring the court to send a daghat on the particulars of the representation made by him. We hear further that the roobakaree has been read this day at the house of the Joint Magistrate, &c. We are certain that it has not been read in this court yet, a circumstance which we cannot account for as we are ignorant of the discretionary power vested in the Magistrate to have public proceedings of the higher Courts read in his private dwelling house. We, moreover, understand that a reply to this roobakaree has been dictated (at the house of the Magistrate) to the Sarishtadar; but which we presume should have been done in open court, in order to enable the moohitakar to know what course they should promptly pursue in matters in which their clients are concerned. A darkhast was this day presented to the Deputy Opium Agent by the above mentioned pleader, praying for copies of the roobakaree sent by Mr. Clift with the other papers that accompanied it. The Court directed them to be furnished. We observed hereupon, that the Sarishtadar and Peshkar (who read the pleader's darkhast) informed the Court, that the application was for Mr. Clift's proceedings, &c. as if they imagined the Court had ordered the copies to be given without having heard the darkhast; or were doubtful whether, upon further consideration, the Court might not change its mind and countermand the order to grant the copies; but the Court repeated the permission.

9TH SEPTEMBER.

The pleader informed the Deputy Opium Agent, this afternoon, (the Court did not sit earlier) that pursuant to the order he had given him to take copies of the proceedings of Mr. Clift, he had applied at his (Deputy Opium Agent's) Shurkate, but was told that the whole file had been sent to Mr. Clift. That he had sent his Mahurri to Mr. Clift's office to take copies of the papers with the darkhast bearing the orders of the Court to grant the copies; but that Mr. Clift said, through his people, that he had objections to giving copies of those proceedings. The Court would not believe it, until the pleader's Mohurri came forward, and then said that he considered him and Mr. Clift's office as one, and therefore the carrying away of the papers from his office to Mr. Clift's was nothing improper. If the office of Mr. Clift is to be regarded as that of the Deputy Opium Agent, we cannot see the consistency of sending a case to be examined (previous to its coming to the Fouzdaree) by the sub-Deputy to the Deputy Opium Agent, for from two offices, or no should more properly call them Courts, are to be regarded as one, nothing can be more absurd than sending a roobakaree from the sub-Deputy's office to the Deputy Opium Agent's office. The Deputy informed the pleader, that he had learned that the papers sent back to Mr. Clift were copies, as the original ones were in the Fouzdaree Court from the beginning, and even though they were not returned, stated, and not read yet. We were then permitted to understand all this. It was then stated that the defendants were committed to the jail, without the proceedings of Mr. Clift being read at all, for how they are trusted out of the Sarishtadar enclosed in a sealed envelope? It also appears to us that all the proceedings held, or designed to be held of late (and which illustrated the objections, and demurrers of the pleader for the defendants) in the Deputy Opium Agent's and the Fouzdaree Court, were to be grounded on copies of the proceedings of Mr. Clift; and in the last none other than these self same copies were laid repeatedly on the table. We are lost in conjecture as to the object of the Fouzdaree Court in committing the defendants to the Hajut Tajewee jail in the first instance, on the strength of the copies of the above mentioned proceedings, and allowing the original ones to remain unopened. The Court, however, ordered the Opium Sarishtadar to give the copies required by the pleader, who was informed that hitherto the mind of the Court had remained unbiased in the case, and that to avoid it, it had purposely refrained from reading the papers that accompanied the roobakaree of Mr. Clift; but as the defendants had tried to evade a trial, it was impressed with a sense of their being guilty. The pleader observed that the impression might nevertheless be wrong, for so far from wishing to evade the trial, they had merely objected to their being tried on the new charge (of theft) brought against them, while they stood charged at the same time with a different act, namely, of Tufangut kurdun (removing opium). The Court said it would presently call up the prisoners and try them on the charge of theft. This was done accordingly. Hereupon the pleaders presented a darkhast on the behalf of the defendants to the following effect: "That on the 6th instant, the present case had been roobakared on the strength of proceedings sent by the Sub-Deputy Opium Agent, and that after taking this roobakaree (the rest of the papers were not read) into consideration, the case had been committed to the Fouzdaree Court. In as much as the case was a delicate one, the court will be pleased to consider seriously, first, that the prosecutor and Mr. Clift had committed his clients to be tried in the Fouzdaree on a charge of removing opium, conformably with which, the officiating joint magistrate had, on the 6th of July, committed them to the Hajut Tajewee jail on that charge and not for theft, as is evident from the purwanah sent to the jail daragah on the occasion. In the second place there are no regulations authorizing any case wherein the parties are charged with Tufangut any things (meaning, excepting money) to be tried in the Fouzdaree Court, nor that they are liable to any punishment. Thirdly, it does not appear from any Regulations that, when a case had been committed in the Fouzdaree for one crime, and while that case is pending, they can be proceeded against on a fresh charge, in the same Court and number, in the same case, and in which the same prosecutors, defendants and witnesses are parties; and that it can be examined afresh. He therefore prays, that the prosecutor and witnesses may be called upon to answer which of the charges is the real one, because in the first instance, they bring a charge of Tufangut kurdun, and in the second, of theft; when the notice of the prosecutor will be proved to the Court. He therefore prays, that it would take the above particulars into its serious consideration and deliver his clients from the calumny of the prosecutor. The Court Namunaword the darkhast, stating that the case was not formally committed for trial in the first instance, (N. B. nevertheless the defendants were sent to jail) in consequence of which, the case was sent back to the Sub-Deputy Opium Agent, and the prisoners released on bail. But in the opinion of the Court, Tufangut kurdun and theft, were the same thing. The pleader maintained that, had the two acts been regarded in the same light, the former Court (officiating Joint Magistrate's) would doubtless have mentioned the word theft in the purwanah sent to the daragah of the jail and not Tufangut kurdun; but as the latter and not the former had been imported, it was a proof that the act was not regarded in the light of theft. That it is always customary in committing prisoners to the Rajat to specify the nature of the charges that had been brought against them. It was plain from the purwanah sent to the darogah in the case of his clients, that the charge brought against them was at that time not of theft, but simply Tupwant Kudam. Moreover, the rebuttal of Mr. Clift asked, did not charge his clients with stealing but making Tupwant, and that it left it to the Court to pass what orders it thought proper on the occasion, and that he had shown was for their being committed to jail not on the charge of theft, by the Officiating Joint Magistrate. The Court, however, proceeded with the trial of the prisoners.

Chitto Singh, burkundaz, was placed at the bar of the Court as the prosecutor, and was proceeding to depose to certain facts which he had heard of when the pleader observed to the Court, that the deponent was giving hearsay evidence. The Court said, that it was customary throughout the Mofussil to receive such evidence for the elucidation of facts, and it could not reject to receive it on the present occasion. The pleader cited a case tried lately in the 24 Pergunnahs, in which a witness was rejected (at the instance of the pleader) that was about to give hearsay evidence. The Court, however, overruled the objection, and allowed the deponent to proceed. The witness stated, that, four days after his return from Patna, Nobinchund Chatterjee (one of the defendants) came to the kotha (factory) from the Gomastha (Buddunchunder, another defendant) with the key of the godown. Moujeeal was with the deponent. Chatterjee desired him to go and open the godown, observing that the Collector of Bhagalpore was expected to inspect it, for which purpose it required to be cleared out. Chatterjee opened the godown, into which deponent accompanied him, and the other burkundaz, saw six pots of opium which, at the desire of Chatterjee, were removed into the puthi (stone) godown. Chatterjee then locked the godown and the deponent went home to dine leaving the kothas in charge of Mohun Singh and Hurlean Singh, ziladars. When he came back, he was asked by Hurlean Singh whether there had been any mal (opium) in the godown, to which he replied in the affirmative. He was told, that Chatterjee had taken the pots away on the head of Khedoo kuhar. Deponent went in and did not find the pots there. Here upon, he made a noise about it. Next morning Buharkhan and Goordul, ziladars, went to Bijnath Sahas with him, and mentioned the circumstance, who remained silent a little while, and then told him to go and inform Buddunchunder Gomastha in the Fort. He did so, Buddunchunder told him that, as there were only two seers of opium in six pots in the godown, he had desired it to be brought to him, but he would send it back to the factory. Four days afterwards Chatterjee came at ten a.m. with two pots, one containing 7 or 8 seers, and the other about 2 and 3 seers of opium, borne on the head of Khuradhar, Kooree, and locked them up in the khusanghama. Deponent desired him to bring the other 4 pots, but Chatterjee went away without saying anything. Some days afterwards, deponent went to Mohandial, Mokhtarhar, and mentioned the case to him, — got an urree written to the Collector of Bhagalpore, and enclosing it in another to the Surishtadar forwarded it, but to which no reply was received. He thereupon remained quiet. In answer to questions put by the Court. He had sent the letter by dark, the receipt is by Mr. Clift. Did not mention the circumstance to any body besides the Maharrir and another. When he found the Collector of Bhagalpore took no notice of the affair, he mentioned it to nobody else. Did not inform Mr. Clift at all. As the Umlah's did not do so, why should he? To questions by the pleader. No opium ever remains in the godown after the final chulan. Does not know by whom the last chulan was made, nor that according to accounts any opium remained in store after the chulan. Because the Moharrir and other Umlahs did not inform Mr. Dunder when he came to inspect the factory, how could he? Did not give notice to the Magistrate nor yet to the Thannah of Police. The opium which he said had been in the godown, is not there now. Was at Patna and does not know whether Buddunchunder was with him at the time of the chulan. Did not see the deffen take away the opium. (He used the term mal throughout.) Buddunchunder did not sign the chulan in his presence, but it was taken to him for signature to the Fort. The opium was taken to the base of Buddunchunder at Lathapathur. Mohun Singh and Harban Singh told him that Buddunchunder was sick and therefore the chulan was taken to him to the Fort. The prisoners deny the charges brought against them, and as they must stand or fall by the depositions of the witnesses, we will, for brevity's sake, not insert what they had to state particularly, but which they did at some length. Mohun Singh, Zilladar, witness, deposed that in the month of Sewan (does not remember the year and date) was cooking his dinner at the kothas, when Chetoo Singh, burkundaz, left him in charge of the godown. That Chatterjee, Khedoo-Kuhar and another person came and taking his chiring went away. Two ghurias after this, the deponent went into the godown, and saw the pots being put in a basket, and was told that they contained scrapings (Koorekhan). Asked them what they were going to do with it? Chatterjee said that as Mr. Dunder was expected, the Gomastha had desired him to bring the pots. Deponent objected to their being carried away, but Chatterjee would not mind what he said, upon which deponent told him "You may take them away if you please." Upon Chetoo Singh, burkundaz returning, he asked him whether there was any thing in the godown, and was told there were some scrapings. He told Chetoo that deponent had carried away the mal. Next morning Chetoo came to him and said, "I went to the Gomastha, who told me, I have brought away the pots but will send them back by and bye." The mal was brought back at 10 a.m. on the head of Khuradhar Kooree. Chetoo came, opened the godown, and put the mal into it. Chatterjee came with Khuradhar. Does not know what became of the mal afterwards. To questions by the court Did not mention to Goordul that the mal had been brought back. The key of the godown was by Chatterjee. Kheloo made no objection to carry the pots. He had heard Chitto Singh say that he had sent an urree. To question by Pleader. Because Chatterjee was in the habits of distributing the dadnu to the ryots (we presume) he did not give notice to the Thannah of the act he had been guilty of. Did not see any Umlah do any thing before Chitto and Moujeeal had charge of the godowns. He saw the opium in the pots by means of a light. There were six pots, three on each side of a basket. When he returned from Dehat Buddunchunder's adaut was sick. Gomastha Buddunchunder was in his house, when the chulan of the opium was made. Chatterjee chulane the mal. There were in the two pots small quantities of opium. The two pots that were brought back were quite full. Could not tell the contents of the two pots, though he could say that the six pots contained each one seer, one and a half seer and so on. There was little in the pots therefore he could tell the quantity in the dark. Does not know where the two pots came from—said again from the base of the Gomastha. The two pots were of course part of the six. Does not know whether there is any opium in the godowns now. Does not know if any person informed Mr. Dunder when he came to inspect the godowns. Does not know if any body told him that Chetoo Singh went to give notice to Moujeeal. He did not go himself.

Hurlean Singh, witness, deposed, that on a certain Tuesday in the month of Sewan, he saw some gharias light from his house coming from the South, by which he saw three persons coming out of the Kothas, i.e., Chatterjee, Sam Lal, and Khedoo Kuhar; the latter was a shot on his head. He asked them what the basket contained, to which the babas replied there were scrapings. He put his hand up to feel what it contained. Chatterjee told him, "What will you see? there are pots with scrapings—I am malik of the mal, you are only sapa hee." At this juncture Hissal and Shodon stopped off towards the East. Several persons were sitting towards the South. West and told them that scrapings in pots had been made away with. They replied, "he is malik, what will you do? Just then Chuttoo Singh, Barkandee, arrived, deponent asked him, whether there were any scrapings in the pots. Was told there was mal. Chittoo then went into the kitchen, and came out saying, "they have taken it away." In the morning Chetoo went to the Gomashis and returning said, "The Gomashis said he would send back the mal to the kitchen." Knowing nothing further of the matter. So questions by the Court. Neither Chetoo, nor any body else had told him there was any opium (mal) in the godown. He was at the outer gate. Does not know who had charge of the keys. Saw the godown locked, and again that it was unlocked when Chuttoo went in and saw no mal. Did not himself see any, nor knows whether there was any. Is questioned by the pleader. Does not know how many pots there were. He gave nobody any notice of the circumstance because there were others who ought to have done so. The Moodindes did not go to give notice to Byjant Sahas, but Chetoo went. Here the examination closed, it being past 8:15. The Court observed that the witness had bakhshas (extremely well) sustained the charges of the Prosecutor, and that as therefore there were strong grounds of guilt attached to the prisoners, he would (now) release them from bail, and commit them to the kyat for further examination. The prisoners were accordingly sent to the jail.—Hulk, Sept. 23.

CHOWRINGHEE THEATRE.

SIR PERTINAX MACSCOPHANT.

The successful debut of an amateur in the "singularly difficult character" of Sir Pertinax Macscophant, and the triumphant return of puns and burlesques comedy to the Chouringhee boards, are events which, in the present state of Calcutta theatricals, cannot be passed over with indifference. We have been for so long a time accustomed to human and insect—broad opera, translated farces, pieces de circonstance, and all the etceteras which have marked the decline of the drama in England, that we had begun to think the right of intelligence and rationality fully at an end in India also. Nearly five years had elapsed without bringing a single recruit to the Chouringhee Theatre of even moderate ability. Modern youth having no such models before them as Cooke, Keen, Young and the Kembles,—whose transcendent talents hallowed the stage and gave birth to lofty and heroic thespian aspirations,—are rarely seized with that restless desire for heroic fame which seeks gratification the moment it is fully emancipated from the paternal dominion. John Reeve, Farren, Macready, and a few others, amuse the occasional half-price visitor, and perhaps send him away lamenting that the efforts of the two latter in the recent competitions of our dramatic writers are not better supported, but they do not awaken any ambition in the spectator—they exert no him no violent sympathy—they inspire him with no feverish desire to tread in the same path of professional distinction. Hence the want of successful debuts—hence the difficulty of sustaining the phalanx of existing veterans and, as all the distinctions of English society and manners extend their influence to the colonies, hence the decay of our amateur theatricals. If we have still a small band of enthusiasts who maintain their position for the pure pleasure of our principal dramatic writers, they are either too indolent, or too much occupied with matters of grave importance to surrender any large portion of their time to the interest of Thalia and Terpsichore, and we are consequently for a considerable part of each year condemned to the absurdities of Mr. Dimples, the plagiarisms of Mrs. Brimble, or the antiquarianisms of Messrs. Macintosh, Macmillan and Macle.

It is to be regretted that we have lately attempted to supply the deficiency of a gentleman of education and talent, in the mighty character of Sir Pertinax Macscophant—a character which even in the palmy days of the British stage could only find two tolerable representatives independently of its bold and ingenious creator, Macklin, was an event of so refreshing and novel a character, that we could not marvel at the anxious state of the crowded boxes, or the apprehensions of the few and scattered critics of the pit. To say the truth, however, we were not ourselves very confident of the success of the undertaking, and we hailed it rather with painful than pleasurable emotions because we felt that a failure would inevitably prejudice the cause of English comedy, and give the advocates of trash an opportunity of sneering at the unaccountable temerity of the amateur. But we rejoice—most heartily rejoice—to proclaim that our fears and forebodings have been entirely dissipated. The attempt of the debutant was triumphantly successful, and the standard of comedy may be said to be through his agency, once more firmly planted on our neglected soil. Without any pretension to an acquaintance with stage business—without the possession of powers of gesticulation and varieties of tone which materially assist in the portrayal of the strange emotions and minute turns of passion peculiar to the character—our debutant presented us with a highly entertaining sketch of the corrupt, cunning, unprincipled, ambitious parasite. If he wanted the carbonic aneur—the occasional shuckle—the fawning leer which the experienced actor would have employed, he had what few of our amateurs think it necessary to possess,—a thorough acquaintance with the words of his author and a due sense of their import. His articulation was clear and distinct—an inestimable virtue in a Chouringhee amateur—and his action, though a little redundant, generally well suited to the passion of the moment. We have not room to enumerate the scenes in which we thought the representative of Sir Pertinax most successful, but we cannot omit a passing tribute to the exquisite, dry humor with which he described the "course of his wooing" and the happy effects of his "wooing." It was extremely felicitous. On the whole, we cordially congratulate our amateur upon the perfect success of his hazardous enterprise—an enterprise the more deserving of success from its having originated in a generous desire to serve the interests of genius suffering under the baleful effects of "chill penury." We hope that ere long we shall enjoy a repetition of the play, and perhaps hail the amateur in the second great character of the immortal Macbeth.—Sir Arvid MacSarcasm. With the amateurs that we now have in Calcutta, Love is a Blade could be brought out in excellent style.

The character of Sir Perimeter so completely, fixed and monopolizes the attention of the audience that the rest of the parts in the Mind of the World generally pass through the scenes without observation or remark. They are, however, in inexpressible strength, and might, if badly filled, seriously affect the just delineation of the master rôle. We have, therefore, much pleasure in saying that Lord Lumbagoose, by the worthy secretary, Sturgeon by Count Almaviva (of the Italian opera), Henry, by Mr. Davis, Dady Rodolpho by Mrs. Chester, Little Mac-Sarcasm by Mrs. Francis, and various Kitharoids by a young and rising amateur, who is qualifying for the second old men of the stage, were very well supported.—Englishman, Sept. 8.

MR. P. DELMAR'S CONCERT.

On Monday evening Mr. P. Delmar's benefit concert, the first he has taken (by the way) for the last four years, went off with what he call great éclat. The audience was numerous, and many subscribers were unavoidably prevented from attending, so that we may venture, we trust to congratulate Mr. Delmar, on the results of his exertions. Of the selection of the music, we have already expressed our opinion, it was judiciously made and the applause bestowed on the execution of the various pieces, as they took their turn for exhibition to the audience, was a true test, to show that the Comptroller of Taste commands no small one. We left the Concert Room highly gratified, and we believe that the satisfaction felt and expressed was very general.

Most of the pieces of music, were in old hands, or rather we should say eminent hands, and we need not expectate on the well-known abilities and musical acquirements and qualifications of Miss Atkinson, Welter, Linton, Thomson, or Delmar himself,—justice, however, to unobtrusive merit, and to talents and musical qualification of great promise, renders it imperative upon us to notice the Duet from Zaire, in which Miss Harte, here so distinguished apart. This young lady, rejoices in a soprano of considerable compass and power, her method strikes us as good, and she exhibits much good taste, and bids fair to attain to, and maintain, a very eminent place in her profession, we wish her much success. Mrs. Chester and Madame de Ligny received much applause.—Hurkaru, Sep. 6.

BAZAR TAXES—DURRUMTOLAH BAZAR.

We give in-ertion in our correspondence department to a document which appears to us on several accounts worthy of public attention. We refer to Mr. M. A. Thynell's appeal on behalf of his client, Dr. Jackson, to the Bengal Government, for the remission of a certain tax put by him for the Durrumtolah Bazar under circumstances which render the enforcement of the tax neither just nor equitable.

The case is altogether curious. It is the first instance, so far as we are aware, of a man being taxed for ground rent and assessed taxes, to which remission, it would seem, he has really no claim, while he, without remonstrating, was paying a sum of 2,000 rupees per annum, which, it appears to us, could not in equity or justice be demanded from him, and which there can be little doubt would never have been paid by Dr. Jackson's predecessors had they rightly understood the nature of their own tenure of the property. Mr. Bigsall, when the case was placed before him, after a full consideration of all the circumstances, was of opinion that the payment of the 2,000 rupees a year was in fact a consideration for privileges long since abrogated by law. It is unnecessary for us in this place to go into details, for the whole case is stated with great force and perspicuity in Mr. Bigsall's letter; to which we the more readily refer our readers, that it contains some information relative to the Land Revenue, which is interesting as illustrating an important portion of the history of our Eastern revenue laws, and which will be new to many who are not under the necessity or in the habit of referring to the subject. That such information is by no means unimportant even to those who never had and are never likely to have any share in the administration of the revenue laws, the case before us may serve to prove, for in consequence of not possessing this information and of not enquiring into the nature of their tenure, not only Dr. Jackson but his immediate predecessors in the proprietorship of the Bazar, have gone on paying 2,000 rupees a year for a privilege they do not enjoy and never have enjoyed, for the benefit of a monopoly and the privilege of levying higher duties long since abolished by law. The case too, may serve as a warning against the danger of too readily taking for granted, that because a payment has been made for a considerable period, it must therefore be justly demandable, and that danger is greatly augmented when the payer happens to be a Government, for Governments in general seem to have adopted the maxim of the Theatines, of which the public are so considerably and consistently advised in the play Bills, "No money returned about the rights of the people," and in their corporate capacity the members of an assembly will not hesitate readily to throw principles and adopt maxims, which in their individual capacity, they would hold and reflect on their knowledge or their intellects to have imposed on them; so for example in the case of the Forgotten Company's paper, in which the error was pointed out by their rectitude and defeated justice by a legal technicality, which every one of them in his individual capacity, would have blushed to have had pleaded in his or her defense.

the case of the Durrumtollah Bazar, the Sudder Board of Revenue are not ashamed to agree that because the 2,000 rupees continued to be paid for many years after the bazar duties were abolished, it is to be inferred that the proprietor of the Bazar who paid it, did not consider the abolition an infringement of their contract! As if the real question were, not what they might happen in their ignorance to consider or not consider, but whether the abolition of the most important consideration for which the money was paid did not in effect vitiate the contract, and nullify all further demand of the consideration money. The other arguments noticed in Mr. Big-nell's appeal, are equally what Mr. Spinkins, we suppose, would call "beside" the laws of "equity and good conscience," for which it is now more than ever incumbent on all public authorities of the Honorable Company to evince their respect. It is quite clear that when Mr. Smollett entered into his agreement in 1793, he had the authority of law and usage for levying all the various duties included in the term "seyer," it is equally clear that he did levy them, that he paid the sum of 2,000 rupees a year for the privilege of levying them, and for that of establishing a bazar which could not then be done without permission of Government when then the seyer duties were abolished in Calcutta, as they had already been in the interior, on what principle of justice can it be maintained that the proprietor of a bazar in the Metropolis, was not entitled to compensation as well as the Zemindars of the Mofussil? and when the law was so altered that any man might establish a bazar without permission of Government, on what principle of justice can it be maintained that the consideration money for the privilege of establishing one, can any longer be claimed? Those who attempt to defend such a claim might as well argue that if the Company had agreed prior to the abolition of their monopoly to pay the people of England £100,000 per annum for the privilege, they would still be bound to pay the money when the monopoly was abolished! True, there was a right reserved in the agreement with Mr. Smollett to concede the privilege to others, but who does not see that granting a similar privilege to others is a very different thing from throwing open the right to all.

It is gratifying however, to record that upon Mr. Big-nell's letter being referred by the Bengal Government for the report of the Sudder Board, the justice of the claim was fully admitted by that authority, who stated in their report to Government, that the question now put before them was a very different one from that which had been previously submitted to them by Dr. Jackson. The Sudder Board has accordingly recommended the remission of the 2,000 rupees per annum levied on the Durrumtollah Bazar, and a like remission in the case of all other bazars similarly situated, the remission amounting in all to about 15,000 rupees per annum.—Hurkaru, Sept. 15.

To R. Dr. MACNAGHTEN, Secy.

Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Sir,—On the 24th March, 1835, the Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal, was pleased to forward, through you, as the acting Secretary to the Sudder Board of Revenue, a letter from the Secretary to the Government of India, under date the 17th of March, 1835, with its enclosures from Dr. A. R. Jackson, urging his claim for a remission of ground rent and taxes on the Durrumtollah Bazar, and to request that the Board would, in communication with the Legal Officers, furnish a report, on the points in question, in the letter from Mr. Secretary Macnaghten. The report of the Sudder Board was forwarded to your Excellency on the 17th May, 1835, but understanding that it had not yet been submitted for the final orders of the Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council, may I request you will do me the honor to lay before the Right Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal, the following observations which on behalf of Dr. Jackson, I would wish to offer in reply to the report of the Sudder Board.

2.—I would observe, in the first place, that Dr. Jackson is now aware he misstated the nature of his claim, when he applied to the Government for a remission of ground rent and assessed taxes on the Durrumtollah bazar. There are, no doubt, cogent arguments which may be urged against such a claim, but I would very respectfully submit that he is entitled, upon every principle of equity, to a remission of the annual payment of Rs. rupees 2,000 demandable by Government under the conditions of the Deed executed on the 28th December, 1793, between the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies and William Smollett of Calcutta. The justice of this claim will, I think, be apparent from a review of the circumstances under which that Deed was executed, and which I now beg to bring to the notice of his Lordship.

3.—Previous to the year 1790, the privilege of establishing gungee hauts and bazars, and of imposing and collecting duties upon the articles exposed for sale in the same, had been conceded to the zemindars throughout Bengal, Behar and Orissa. Experience having proved that the power with which the landholders were thus vested, led to great oppression and the imposition of many vexatious duties on articles of internal manufacture and consumption, as well as exports and imports, the British Government determined in the above mentioned year to take from the zemindars the powers that had been thus abused, and to exercise the privilege of imposing and collecting internal duties immediately and exclusively on the part of Government. It was subsequently found, on the collection of the Sayer being committed to the officers of Government, that the exactions were so numerous and complicated, and imposed on such impolitic principles, as to preclude the possibility of regulating them in such a manner as to render them productive to the state, and at the same time to prevent their operating as a burden on the internal commerce and industry of the country. It was in consequence determined to abolish the Sayer collections altogether, with certain specified exceptions, throughout the three provinces, leaving it to a future consideration what internal duties or taxes should be imposed in lieu of them. But in resuming the privilege of imposing and collecting internal duties which had formerly been vested in the landholders, the Government proceeded upon the equitable principle of allowing a full compensation for the resumption of such privilege, adequate to the profit formerly derived from its enjoyments, and in the adoption of these arrangements it was expressly declared that the Government had no intention to deprive the landholders of the right of making any collection of duties, although included under the general denomination of Sayer and market cesses, were not in reality a duty, but a consideration for the use of ground, shops or other buildings. The payments received on this account were recognised as being clearly of the nature of rent, the private right of the proprietors, and in no respect a tax or duty on commodities the exclusive right of Government.

4.—The whole of the rules connected with the resumption, and subsequent abolition of the Sayer duties throughout Baggal, Bahar and Orissa, are embodied in Regulation 27 of 1793, and his Lordship will find on a reference to Section 2, Clause 14, of that Regulation, that the gungee, bazars and hauts within the limits of the town of Calcutta, were specially exempted from the operation of its provisions. Mr. Harrington, in the 3d volume of his Annals of the Regulations, assigns two reasons for this exception. The first was founded on a consideration of the legal difficulties which at that time might have attended the imposition and enforcement of any new taxes within the immediate local jurisdiction the Supreme Court ; and a second reason for the continuance of market duties at the seat of Government when they were abolished in the interior of the country, had reference to the more effectual means of regulating the collection of them, so as to prevent their becoming a source of vexatious oppression, or a cover to exaction of a different nature, as had been experienced when the levy of internal duties, under the indefinite denomination of sayar, was left with the landholders and farmers of the land revenue.

5.—It is clear then that in 1793, the date of the agreement between the Hon ble the East India Company and Mr Smoilt, the permission to establish the Dhurrumtollah Bazar, (in consideration of which the annual sum of Rs. rupees 2,000 was covenanted to be paid to Government) conferred upon the proprietor of that Bazar a right to levy certain duties, quite distinct from any collection that might be made on account of the use of ground, shops or other buildings, which collections were declared by Regulation 27 of 1793 to be the private right of the proprietors, and consequently were not included in the abolition of the sayar in the interior. The Rs. Rs- 2000 must have been paid for the transfer of the right to collect duties, which the preamble to the above mentioned Regulation declares to be the exclusive privilege of Government, not exercisable by any subject without its express sanction, adding that it had ever been a well known law of the country that no person could establish a gunge, haat or bazar without authority from the governing power, although the practical assertion of this principle in the Moteah, might have fallen into desuetude. Mr. Harrington, under the head of " Calcutta Market duties," states that " in consideration of the revenue paid to Government, the proprietor and farmers of the several Bazars are entitled to levy a duty from the market vendors," and the same gentleman gives a list of the rates of duties collected in the different Calcutta Bazars in the year 1788. In addition to these duties, which appear to have been comprised under the denomination of Fulah, another tax called Tehbazaree was levied by the proprietors or farmers of Calcutta Bazars. The party entitled to the Tehbazaree exacted the same not only from those who exposed articles for sale within the actual precincts of his Bazar, but also from all vendors of commodities within certain limits, though it does not distinctly appear upon what principle the Tehbazaree boundary of each bazar was fixed.

6.—Dr. Jackson is not in a situation to prove the amount of the tulah duties collected by the first proprietor of Dhurrumtollah Bazar, but it is probable they were regulated by a standard very nearly approaching to the rates mentioned by Mr. Harrington, as having been levied in 1788. With reference, however, to the Tehbazaree tax, my client can produce satisfactory evidence to shew that it was levied up to the year 1820, and that the limits assigned to this particular bazar extended as far as Brijetollah. The produce of this Tehbazaree tax was little short of rupees 700 per mensem.

7.—Such were the general circumstances under which Mr. Smoilt, in 1793, agreed to pay to the Government Rs. ru 2,000 annually, in consideration of the permission to establish the Dhurrumtollah Bazar. At that time no person could set on foot a rival establishment without the express sanction of Government, which it might reasonably be supposed would not be afforded to the detriment of existing Bazars, so long as the proprietors should duly perform the conditions of their covenants. In addition to this virtual monopoly, for such it was to all intents and purposes, the Government transferred to Mr. Smoilt and his successors for 99 years, its own exclusive and most valuable privilege of levying the duties above mentioned. But how does the case stand now? Any person who pleases is at full liberty to establish a bazar in Calcutta, without permission granted or leave solicited from Government, and on the 17th July, 1820, a public notification was issued abolishing the Tehbazaree duties, or at least all collections on that account beyond the actual precincts of the bazar. It may be difficult to point out the precise duties formerly levied, and subsequently abolished by authority, and I have in vain sought for full information on the subject ; but the Sudder Board of Revenue, in the 4th paragraph of their Report, admit that the stall-hire and shop-rents constitute the whole income at present derived from the Dhurrumtollah Bazar ; that is to say, Dr. Jackson collects nothing but rent, the private right of the proprietor, and which was specially reserved when the sayar duties in the interior were abolished in 1790. For what then does Dr. Jackson pay Rs. Rs. 2,000 per annum? For the privilege of holding a bazar? This is now no privilege at all, for it is the universal right of every resident in Calcutta. For the transfer of the Government's exclusive privilege to levy certain duties? The Government itself has prohibited their exaction. When in 1790 the Government resumed the Sayar, it made full compensation to the landholders for the loss they sustained by the resumption. Does not the same principle hold good here? When the Government for the general advantage of the community of Calcutta, has relinquished its right to limits, the number of bazars, and to impose vexatious imposts, is it not bound to give up all claim to the revenue it formerly received as a consideration for the grant of the monopoly, and the transfer of its right to levy the duties? I cannot conceive it to be necessary to argue this question. A sum of money was agreed to be paid to the Government in consideration of the grant of certain privileges, the Government by its own act has done away with the privileges, and upon what possible principle can it continue to demand payment of the consideration money? Dr. Jackson enjoys no one immunity over any other inhabitant of this city, and why should he be taxed with this heavy annual cess?

8.—The Sudder Board of Revenue, in the 6th paragraph of their report, state that the privilege of levying Tehbazaree and other duties, " is not in the agreement." In express terms, it certainly is not. But is it possible for any one aware of the circumstances connected with Calcutta bazars in 1793, and of the fact that the Sayar duties abolished in the Mofussil were continued in Calcutta, to doubt for a single moment that the intention of the agreement, as understood by all parties, was to confer upon Mr. Smoilt all the privileges lawfully enjoyed by the proprietor of a bazar, in the interior, previous to the abolition of the sayar, and in Calcutta, subsequent to such abolition, and that of these privileges one of the most important was the Tehbazaree duty? The Board, indeed, would seem to recognize this fact, for in a note appended to the last paragraph of their report, in arguing against Dr. Jackson's claim to the remission of ground rent and taxes, they say, " at that time the complicated system of taxation comprehended under the native sayar system was in existence, and the terms of the contract seem particularly intended to guard against any new demands under this head." This is no doubt the correct statement of the case. The real intent of the agreement was to make over to Mr. Smoilt and his successors for 99 years, for a certain fixed annual sum, the privilege of levying all the duties comprehended under the name of sayar. That the Tehbazaree was one of these I need not argue. Mr. Harrington shews that it was collected up to 1790, and Dr. Jackson is prepared to prove that the levy was continued until 1820.

9.—The next argument of the Board is founded upon the circumstance that the Government revenue of Rs. Rs. 2,000 continued to be paid for many years after the Tehbazaree and other exactions alluded to, were abolished by law, from which it is inferred that the then holders of the Dhurrumtollah Bazar did not consider the prohibition to make such exactions as any infringement of the contract. I would observe in reply, that the inhabitants of Calcutta, speaking generally, are but little acquainted with the revenue laws, and I can easily conceive that the former proprietors of Durrumtollah Bazar may have been utterly ignorant of the nature of the right under which duties had hitherto been levied, and just as ignorant of the claim which the abolition of those duties gave them to a remission of the Government revenue. It is a fact that there are zemindars in the interior who at this day levy the very market duties for the abolition of which they received a compensation at the time of the permanent settlement, and this is done in many instances without the parties being at all aware that they are infringing any law. In the case of the Durrumtollah Bazar the reverse has happened; the Government has been receiving a revenue for the grant of privileges which have no longer any existence, and the parties have paid the amount, without knowing that the equivalent in consideration of which it was originally given has been taken away from them. But the question is not whether former proprietors of the Durrumtollah Bazar have ignorantly acquiesced in this payment, but whether the Government has any just claim to demand its continuance now that the right is disputed. I very respectfully submit that it has none.

10.—The third argument of the Board is to the effect that Dr. Jackson has no right to complain of the circumstance that any party is now at liberty to establish a bazar within Calcutta, without permission from Government or the payment of any revenue; because in the agreement of 1793, there was a reservation of the right of Government to establish other bazars, and such being the case, it was of course at liberty to grant this permission on any terms it pleased, either more or less favorable, or if it pleased, without requiring any payment at all. Now without pausing to inquire what would be the legal construction of this stipulation, (although I do not entertain much doubt upon that point,) I feel confident his Lordship will not consider the interpretation put upon it by the Board to be an equitable one. When Mr. Smoult agreed to pay to the Government a large annual amount for permission to hold a bazar, it could never have been in the contemplation of either party that the Government would issue an order granting to all the inhabitants of Calcutta, generally and indiscriminately, the very same permission; such a supposition is impossible. The only object of the reservation insisted on by the Board must have been to guard against an abuse of the privileges granted to Mr. Smoult, and not to enable the Government to secure the revenue of a virtual monopoly for 99 years, and then to abolish the monopoly, throwing the whole loss of such abolition upon the party with whom they contracted.

11.—The only other argument of the Board against the present claim is founded upon the supposition that Dr. Jackson must have included in his calculations, not only the fair profit to be expected from the capital invested in the buildings erected by him, but also the sum for which he made himself liable to Government. I am really unable to understand upon what principle this calculation of profit and loss can be urged against Dr. Jackson's claim. If he had been mistaken in his calculations and unfortunate in his speculation, the Board of Revenue would not have recommended the Government to make good his loss; nor do I see how the circumstance of his speculation proving a fortunate one, is to deprive him of any right to which he would otherwise have been entitled. The same remark applies to the following note at the conclusion of the Board's report. "Dr. Jackson, by purchase, has merely acquired the rights possessed by Mr. Smoult, therefore to admit his claim would necessarily involve a retrospective claim." It is sufficient to say that Dr. Jackson makes no claim except on his own account, and that claim, I most respectfully submit on his behalf, is founded in justice and equity.

12.—I will not trouble his Lordship by a recapitulation of what I have already urged, and which might indeed be summed up in the simple statement, that the Government of 1793 must have intended to give something or other, in return for the 2,000 rupees a year made payable by the proprietors of the bazar; whereas Dr. Jackson receives nothing at all. Most respectfully soliciting the attention of his Lordship to these observations, which I have now the honor of submitting for his consideration,

I have the honor to be, &c.

M. A. BIONELL,

Constituted Attorney of Dr. Jackson.

P. S.—I have not noticed those parts of the Board's report which relate to Dr. J.'s claim to remission of ground rent and assessed taxes, such claim being now abandoned by him. Copies of the previous correspondence accompany the letter.

COLLECTORS' SALES.

The following statement had been handed to us for publication:—

"Baboo Prossuno Comar Tagore, proprietor of a talook called Hoodah Puchim-Mushara, situate in the Purgunnah Bhabayamoorah, in the district of Midnapore, and paying to our Government an annual revenue of Co.'s rs. 3,287-4-3, having been informed by his mooktar in that district, that there stood a balance of revenue amounting to Co.'s rs. 433, due to Government on account of the said talook, directed a remittance of Co.'s rs. 400, in a Bank of Bengal post bill, dated 19th August, 1887, and Co.'s rs. 33 in cash, to be paid into the collector's office; and the mooktar, accordingly did, on the 1st September, tender the post bill and the money to Mr. Houston, collector of the district.

"Mr. Houston, not only refused to accept of the proffered payment, but fined the mooktar in the sum of five rupees, on the latter attempting to explain the ground of his application, but caused the talook to be sold for the sum of Co.'s rs. 3,600.

"This proceeding of refusing a post bill to transfer for revenue is contrary to the standing orders of the Government, contained in the circular issued by the Accountant General.

"The mode of remittance by Bengal Bank post bills is universally adopted and similar remittances made by Baboo Prossuno Comar Tagore had been accepted of by Mr. Houston's predecessors.

"The credit of the Bank of Bengal is likely to be affected throughout the district by its bills being thus dishonored by Government officers.

"Mr. Houston, being a Government officer, was the last person from whom it could be expected that bills from a bank chartered by Government and under the superintendence and control of Government, should have been thus dishonored and that against the positive instructions of the Accountant-General and the established practice of the office."

Knowing, as we do, that the intention of Government was to facilitate the circulation of Bank of Bengal paper, and that the post bills now issued by that institution were sanctioned by authority, we can hardly imagine that any collector of the public revenue could be ignorant that it was his duty to receive them in payment. We must, therefore, suppose that there is some mistake, either the want of an endorsement, or the supposition of forgery. But even allowing this to be the case, one would think that so harsh a measure as the confiscation of property might have been deferred without violating the spirit of the regulations when a payment was obviously intended conformably to the law, though it might by accident have been somewhat irregular. But if there was no objection except that the collector did not like a post bill, but preferred bank notes, we think the Government can do no less for the sake of its own dignity than to repay to the Baboo all losses and expences which he may have incurred by this extraordinary proceeding. Upon whom is to be the final incidence, the Government or the collector, must be decided by the conformity of the latter to his instructions; but at all events, the sufferer should be remunerated. Otherwise, what confidence can the people have in the security of their property? Will they not say, if Bengal Bank bills are refused one day, may not their notes be refused the next, and may not the collector, equally object to silver under some pretence or other, if he wants to take our estates from us? Surely the Indian revenue system is harsh enough, without adding unnecessary harshness.

Here the agent of the proprietor is fined for attempting to explain that his tendered payment is according to the law. We hope the proceedings will go home as a chapter in the commentaries upon the Black Act.—Englishman, Sept. 14.

We are now with some regret about to bring to public notice, the conduct of the acting Collector in the Zillah of Midnapore. We do so, not with a view of holding up unnecessarily to public censure, the conduct of an individual, who will to a certainty receive the usual allowance of bureaucratic whiggish consequent upon his offence, or for the purpose of rendering ourselves instrumental to the infliction of a double punishment for one and the same offence. Such is not our motive; we are, we hope, actuated by a more laudable and less invidious intention; and that is, to bring to the attention of the junior officials of Government, the fact that a hasty, and perhaps a petulant disposal of cases which many come before them, is certain, in the present state of things, to find its way into the columns of the newspapers, and that Government officers offending in this fashion are subjected, now-a-days, to the coercive power of public opinion, as well as to the oburgations of their official superiors. We trust most sincerely, that the result of the present and past exposures of official derelictions, in which it has been our fate to take part, will tend to inspire with more caution, and greater prudence and circumspection, those who have rendered themselves obnoxious to our Public notice.

The facts of the case which has elicited from us the above observations, are as follow. In the month of August last, the mookhtar of a wealthy Zemindar, resident in Calcutta, gave notice to his principal, that there was due and owing for Government Revenue, on account of the Talook Hoodah, Pushim, Mushihara, in Pergunnah Boyamootah, in the Zillah Midnapore, the sum of rupees four hundred and thirty-three, whereupon the Zemindar proceeds to the Bank of Bengal, obtains a Bengal Bank Post Bill for 400 rupees, at three days after sight, signed by the secretary, and so forth, in all due form,—the which Bill, with 33 rupees in cash, the Zemindar remits to his Mookhtar in Midnapore, with directions to discharge the government claim. The acting Collector, Mr. Houston, however, takes it into his head to refuse to receive a Bengal Bank Post Bill in payment of the government revenue, fines the Mookhtar five rupees for presuming to tender it in payment of revenue, and forthwith proceeds, to put up the Talook for sale for arrears of Jumma; The Talook is accordingly sold for the sum of 3,600 Rs. and the Zemindar has thus, through the scrupulous delicacy of Mr. Houston, in refusing to receive a Bengal Bank Post Bill into the government treasury, lost his property, without the shadow of a fault or the slightest pretence of laches or neglect in paying the Revenue attaching to the Zemindar. Now it appears to us that a Bank of Bengal Post Bill is, when indorsed, pretty much the same sort of thing as a Bank of Bengal note payable on demand. The credit of the Bank is, we suppose, as much pledged to the payment in the one instance, as in the other, and a Bank Post Bill duly endorsed, is in point of law as much a valuable security as a Bank note. There would, therefore, exist apparently no reasonable ground for the refusal on the part of the Collector to receive such an instrument in payment of revenue; and we are told that the custom in the Collector's office is to receive Bank Post Bills of the Bank of Bengal in payment of revenue, we are, moreover, told, although we have not seen it, that there is a circular Government order, emanating either from the Governor of Bengal, or from the Revenue Accountant, authorising the receipt of Bank Post Bills of the Bank of Bengal, in payment of revenue; and with reason, expediency, common sense, common justice, and a Circular Order to boot, which in point of authority is of course better than all the former conglomerated, and put in a bag together,—with all these moving persuasives for the receipt of the Post Bill in payment of revenue, it is difficult to understand how or why, the said Bank Bill came to be refused. The fact, however, is as we state it,—the Post Bill was refused, and the property is sold.

Let us now look at the consequences of this rash and ill-advised, and inconsiderate, proceeding on the part of Mr. Houston,—and we beg to be understood to speak “more in sorrow than in anger.” The Talook in question, was purchased about two years ago by the Zemindar who has just been deprived of it, for the sum of 16,000 rupees. It pays a Government jumma of 3387 rupees, of which he it observed, the small sum of 433 rupees, only was in arrear. In order to be re-admitted to the possession of this property, of which we suppose there can be no doubt, the Zemindar must lay the matter before the Commissioner at Cuttack, a considerable time must necessarily elapse, before he can obtain the decision of the Commissioner upon the point. In the meantime this is just the season for making the collections from the ryots. The ryots, now that the property is sold, will not pay to their old Zemindar,—they will or will not pay at all, as the case may be. The cultivation for the ensuing season will undergo great interruption, in consequence of the disputed ownership and unsettled title to the Talook. The new purchaser, will not make the necessary advances to the ryots to cultivate for the ensuing season, because he is not sure, that the sale by the acting Collector will not be upset by the Commissioner; and the ousted Zemindar will not of course make the advances, until he is sure of getting his property back. So that the Collections for the past year are evaded by the ryots on the plea that the Zemindar to whom they are due is no longer in legal possession, and the cultivation for the ensuing season will probably be put a stop to, because no one will make the advances; and so the lands are thrown out of cultivation and the ryots out of employ; the Zemindar is deprived of his rents, and the Government of its popularity, and all because the Acting Collector either does not understand his business, or understanding it, chooses to act with a degree of rashness and intemperance which is perfectly appalling.

The Government will, we presume, interfere, supposing the authorities at Cuttack uphold the act of the Collector of Midnapore; they may re-instate the Zemindar in the possession of his Talook; but they never can put him exactly in so good a position as that from which he has been driven by the rashness of the Collector. Some portion of his rents he will certainly lose; and some deterioration of his property, will of necessity ensue. There is yet one other inconvenience which, as it strikes us, is likely to ensue from this proceeding. The credit of the Bank of Bengal is likely to be affected by it, in the eyes of the whole of Mr. Houstoun's Cutchery, and all persons having cognizance of this transaction; for every body knows that a Bank Post Bill is a printed instrument, and signed by the Secretary, Mr. Udny, for the Trustees and proprietors of the Bank of Bengal, or in some such form, pledging the credit of the institution to the payment of the instrument. People will say, the credit of the Bank of Bengal will not be much hurt by this transaction. Possibly not much; but a little; and if the same spirit of rashness were to infect the nodules of half a dozen Collectors, and that similar refusals to receive or recognize this description of Bank paper were to occur, the result might be found very sufficiently inconvenient. We have now said the little that occurs to us on this matter, and we do hope, that this our candid expose of this proceeding, may serve to put gentlemen on their guard, and to induce them to adduce to the execution of their official duties, a greater degree of considerate forbearance, and a more wise and salutary caution. — Hurkaru, Sept. 15.

OPIUM SALES.

A meeting was held yesterday of the Chamber of Commerce to take into consideration the report of their committee on a communication from Government as to some proposed improvements in the mode in which the opium sales are conducted.

A letter from the Board to Government was read, the first paragraph of which excited no small surprise in many of the members of the Chamber, as it stated that the Board had never been able to obtain the co-operation of the merchants in any scheme of improvement until the present occasion. Many enquired when their co-operation had been asked, and when the Board had ever shewn the smallest disposition to abandon their hugger-mugger system till compelled by necessity.

The report of the committee recommended first, that whatever rules are laid down should be adhered to inflexibly, considering that uncertainty is far worse than a bad system.

The Board proposes that the depositors should be a fixed sum of 1000 rupees per lot, payable in promissory notes; the committee recommended that these should be payable at the Bank of Bengal, and that accepted cheques should be received in payment; all lots of which the deposits are not paid in cash on the 3d day to be resold on the 4th day, and no deposit to be accepted for forfeited lots on the day of sale.

The whole purchase to be made good in one month, approved Discount for cash proposed by the board objected to as necessary.

The Board propose to receive deposits only from purchasers named in the sale room. The committee "or their order," thinking that every man ought to be allowed to transfer his purchases freely.

The Board propose the following sales:

2500 ditto.....	February.
6000 chests.....	January.
5000 ditto.....	April.
2500 ditto.....	May.
3000 ditto or the remainder in...	June.

The committee recommended eight sales, one at the beginning of every month till August, the first 5000, and the others each 2000 chests, except the last which would contain all that might remain unsold.

This proposal occasioned a warm debate and a modified proposal for five sales only, the last to be in July, was carried by a majority of one. On the whole we think it matters little how the sales are distributed, provided the conditions are strictly adhered to, but if the ships coming from Europe are to be considered, July and August would be as suitable periods for sales as the preceding months. The Board of course look to an early realization of the revenue, but experience alone can shew whether their plan will sacrifice amount to time, or not. At all events we may congratulate the merchants on this appearance of a return to sound principles, and we fully concur in the recommendation of the Board that its members should be made personally responsible for every deviation from the sales once published as having been sanctioned by Government.—Englishman, Sep. 8.

STEAM TUG ASSOCIATION.

The Steam Tug Association had a third half year meeting to-day, the proceedings of which we are enabled to publish. It will be observed that a resolution has been adopted to double the capital in order to double the number of tug-vessels, which of course will be a great benefit to the shipping and commercial interests of the port. The Sugar Trade has already made an important addition to the tonnage required for our exports, and promises to increase very much in extent. At the same time the Government vessels serviceable for tugs are wearing out. There is consequently no reason to fear that four private Steamers will be too many for profitable employment, allowing the most idle time of the year for heavy repairs, refittings and alterations when not of an emergent nature. The profits of the Forbes during the half year have been so large as to yield a dividend at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, notwithstanding the heavy expense incurred in shifting the boilers of the Satakand, and the long period during which the latter vessel was consequently unemployed.—Calcutta Courier, September 18.

At the Third Half Yearly General Meeting of Proprietors of the Steam Tug Association, held at the Office of the Secretaries this day the 18th instant.

PRESENT.

J. A. Cragg, W. Bruce, Jas. Young, W. T. Fraser, A. H. Sim, J. Carr, N. H. Collins, M. M. Manuk, D. Tagore, W. Prinsep, L. DeSouza, L. A. Avietick, W. S. Smith, Rajchunder Mookerjee, Radanath Dutt, Esquires; Captains A. Thompson, and A. Cunningham.

Jas. Young, Esq., in the Chair.

Moved by M. M. Manuk, Esq., and seconded by W. Bruce, Esq.—

Resolved,—That the Accounts be passed and the Report be adopted.

Proposed by L. A. Avietick, Esq., and seconded by H. Tagore, Esq.

That a dividend of 45 Co.'s rs. per share be advertised for immediate payment.

Proposed by J. Carr, Esq., and seconded by Rajchunder Mookerjee—

Resolved,—That the appointment of Mr. Cunningham as Commander of the Forbes be confirmed; with the understanding that he make good his subscription for the shares he has taken.

Moved by J. A. Cragg, Esq., and seconded by L. DeSouza, Esq.

That taking into consideration the recommendation of the Committee for an increase of Capital as highly desirable, chiefly with a view to the reduction of the rates of daily hire for tugging, it is resolved,—that a proposition be circulated among the present Proprietors to double the capital of this Association, or say, to increase the amount of capital to four lakhs of Company's rupees instead of two lakhs sicca, receiving new Subscriptions of 1,000 Co's rupees per each share and setting off the fraction of 66-10-8 paid by present Proprietors who subscribed in sicca rupees, against any Subscription they may make under the new arrangement.

The present Proprietors have the first option to take an additional share for each share that they hold, and should the present Proprietors consent unanimously to the adoption of this measure.

It is further Resolved,—That the Secretaries proceed at once to publish the new Prospectus, inviting Subscriptions and otherwise for carrying this object into effect.

JAS. YOUNG, Chairman.

Report of the third half year's proceedings of the Steam Tug Association.

SEPTEMBER, 1837.

1. The result of another half year, enables us to shew the Proprietors, that, although we have not a sufficient sum remaining in hand to declare a dividend, the produce of our Tugging has been sufficiently profitable to warrant our earnest and strong recommendation to the Proprietors at once to increase their capital, and to secure to themselves the run of such employment, before any effective competition shall be started against them. The Company's largest boat, the Euterprize, will shortly be taken off the list against us, and we believe the Irrawaddy's hull is not in a state to remain long in her present full employment in competition with our Association. It is very desirable that the daily rate of hire should be decreased, but it will not answer for us to do so until we have more boats in play, for us in the present instance with only two vessels at our command, when one of them is laid up for repairs, the other with all her best earnings has to bear the current expenses of the establishment of both until the boat under repair can again be brought into active service, and thus the profits disappear, while with a greater number of boats a smaller establishment might be retained, and the loss upon the one out of use would be more easily covered by those which are running. This will be better shewn by the statement now laid before the meeting.

2. The Forbes has been fully employed thus—

Tugging on hire,.....	127 days.
Demurrage,.....	6 "
Idle and cleaning,.....	42 "
Repairing,.....	9 "

Total, 184 days.

while the Seetakoond, having been laid up for upwards of three months, has earned only Co.'s rupees, 6,500, her repairs bring Co.'s rupees, 15,507-8-8. The establishment for both boats is Co.'s rupees, 18,532-4: for two additional boats the establishment would not have been increased Co.'s rupees, 10,000 while their earnings might have been nearly on a par with those of the Forbes, for there has been no want of demand for Tugs indeed it would greatly increase if we were able to decrease the cost of daily hire, a point greatly to be desired.

3. The proprietors will have been partly prepared for the expenses incurred upon the Seetakoond, since they are aware that new boilers had been daily looked for at the period of the last meeting, and that Co.'s rupees, 10,000 had been reserved from the originally subscribed capital to meet their cost. They arrived in the Jupiter from Glasgow on the 16th April, and were valued upon for cost and charges by Messrs. Rickards, Little and Co. in the sum of Co.'s rupees, 15,622. It was fortunate that they then arrived, for it proved upon taking out the old boilers, that they could not have been worked many days longer, and had indeed frequently disappointed us by failures of different kinds since they had been turned out of hand by Mr. Currie.

4. The Seetakoond was at once laid up, and when the new boilers were placed in the room of the old ones, being scarcely more than half their size, it was found absolutely necessary to the effectiveness of the vessel as a tug, not only that the engines should be bodily raised, her paddles being too much immersed, but that they should likewise be moved further aft so as to bring the vessel more on an even keel. In doing this it was found that the engines had been originally so very ill and crookedly placed, that most of the brasses and casings had been worn irregularly away, and required entirely new doing, thus increasing the expense considerably, while it necessarily prolonged the term of her inactivity. Our Superintendent, Captain Boothby's, report, which is annexed, describes more minutely what was required to be done, but when it is remembered that the estimate formerly made of the expense for exchanging the new boilers for the old ones amounted to about Co.'s rupees 10,000, we think we have reason to congratulate the Proprietors upon the advantage of having a Superintendent au fait to the business who has in his analysis, attached to his report, of the expenses incurred upon the Seetakoond, shewn that the total expense of this heavy job has only amounted to Co.'s rupees, 13,174 3-7, besides the cost of a new funnel now in hand, but from which are to be deducted Co.'s rupees, 1,427 realized by the sale of old iron and brass. There is a previous item of repairs upon the steam vessel in March, incurred chiefly in patching up the ill-finished work of Mr. Currie.

5. The Seetakoond is now, however, in such prime order and her new boilers are so very effective, that we have reason to think she will work throughout the approaching shipping season in the most satisfactory manner.

6. We should mention that from the peculiar construction of the new boilers, we have found it an economy to burn a mixture of half English and half country coal, even at the high cost of the former, since she keeps up her steam with so much less quantity—being about 16 maunds per hour instead of 24 with the old boilers.

7. Upon completing the Seetakoond, and setting her upon full work about the latter end of August, we have thought it most advisable to overhaul the Forbes, so as to have her in perfect trim likewise for the approaching busy season, and we have found upon docking her that it was full time we did so, since a good deal of copper had been worn off her bows by her cables, and abast from the hawsers, and several weak places in her boilers required patching.

8. We are informed by our Superintendent, that he hopes to have her at work again in a month, the expense being estimated at something short of Co.'s rupees 4000.

9. Should we be able to keep both vessels in full play during the approaching season, we trust to have it in our power to shew sufficient surplus for a handsome dividend in March.

10. The expenses above alluded to, with the cost of coals and other contingencies, have entirely absorbed the reserved capital for boilers, and have also reduced considerably the sum laid aside at the last meeting as a fund for increasing our means of Tugging, the total expenditure having exceeded the earnings by Company's rupees 6,599-10-10 as per Schedule (on the table.) We should notice a column in that Schedule for the "purchase of stores." These were required for the establishment of our workshop on the Docking premises at Kidderpore, where, by having materials ready at a moment's call for small repairs, there is much saving both in time and expense. This item does not strictly apply to the past half year alone.

11. In compliance with the wishes of the Proprietors present at the last meeting, we addressed a letter on the 27th March to Messrs. W. Carr, W. Shand and Captain Henderson in London, which is now laid before the meeting; but we have not any notice of its receipt by the Steam Mail of July, which is unfortunate. Captain Henderson, however, in a letter to Dwarkanath Tagore, expresses a hope that his services may be rendered useful to this Association—so that doubtless he will set to work actively the moment he receives our letter; he states that the most effective vessels are exactly those which in our letter we have called to his attention.

12. Mr. W. Carr, in a letter of June, mentions having been on board the Duffus, a magnificent boat of 250 horse power, which Mr. Shand was about to negotiate with the Duffus Company for placing in this country, in connexion with our Association, but nothing had been brought to a point. In the mean time it will be well worth the attention of the Proprietors to subscribe at once a further sum of five hundred rupees per share for the purpose of increasing the stock; and if such is the wish of those now present, we will circulate the proposition for the consideration of every individual member, previous to calling a special meeting for determining upon the measure, which we are quite confident will be the means of greatly increasing the advantages to be derived from this investment of capital.

We are sorry to remark that the contingency referred to in the last report has not been entirely realized, a balance of about 700 rupees is still under recovery from Shaik Adum by our Attorney.

The accounts laid upon the table present the following balance.

At Credit of the Reserved Fund Co.'s
rupees	16,056 11 0
Less balance at debit of the Current
Account	6,599 10 10
About 4½ per cent. on the Capital Co.'s
rupees	9,457 0 2

We regret to have to report the death of Captain Pent of the Forbes; he has been succeeded by Mr. Cunningham, the Chief Officer, who has proved himself in every way equal to the charge; he has taken five shares in this Association and will increase his interest to ten shares as soon as his means will permit.

SAILORS' HOME.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BENGAL HURKARU.

Sir,—Will you give insertion to the accompanying list of subscribers to the Sailors' Home, from the commencement up to the 14th September inclusive, and also to the statement of receipts and expenditure in detail up to the same date? From the balance the public will see that our funds are at a low ebb owing to the heavy items of repairs and outfit of the establishment. We shall now only have to provide for the ordinary expense of the house, which, we believe, may be effected for the comparatively small sum of from 5,000 to 6,000 rupees per annum, (a sum which we are confident the public will readily supply. We would urge it on those friends to seamen, who have not yet aided the fund, or who may feel disposed to render further assistance, to lend us a helping hand now as the cold season is fast approaching, when we must be doubly vigilant in our efforts to save Jack from his enemies. We have much pleasure in stating, as we are confident you and the public will be glad to hear, that the institution is working admirably, and will continue to improve as we obtain experience, the best of all teachers. We only want time and the confidence and support of the public, and of the parties especially interested, to prove that neither an enervating climate or the power and virulence of our opponents can either damp our exertions or prevent success.

Yours sincerely,

T. BOAZ.

THE ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN.

A meeting was held yesterday, at ten o'clock, convened by the Sheriff, Thomas Holroyd, Esq., in compliance with a requisition, to consider the propriety of addressing Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, on her accession to the throne, and manifesting the loyalty and attachment of her Majesty's subjects in British India.

The Sheriff opened the proceedings : —

GENTLEMEN,—This is the first time that I have been called upon to preside, officially as Sheriff, at a Public Meeting of my fellow-citizens, and were I not supported by a consideration of the object for which it has been convened, as well as by a conviction that your proceedings this day will be characterized by the most cordial unanimity, I should feel too much embarrassment and discomposure to venture upon addressing you. In fact upon any ordinary occasions my inclinations would carry me no further than to read the requisition, but on an occasion of unexampled interest like the present, when we are assembled for the purpose of congratulating a youthful Queen on her accession to the throne of her ancestors, and manifesting our loyalty and attachment. I am impelled by a mingled feeling of pardonable pride and exaltation to indulge the privilege which will be conceded to all of you of avowing my individual devotion to her royal person. A beautiful and accomplished woman, thrown suddenly into circumstances of trial and difficulty, before maturity of years has given confidence to her judgment, is at all times an object of interest, but how intense becomes that interest when to her other claims upon our sympathy can be asserted the right of a Queen to our fidelity and best affections! Here, gentlemen, we have a sovereign, in whom youth, beauty, intelligence and moral excellence mingle their attractions, passing at the earliest moment that the laws of her country permit her to assume the diadem from the comparative seclusion, to which maternal solitude and her own passion for improvement had restricted her, to the Council Chamber of a mighty empire, where, though surrounded by men of the highest civil and military attainments, she has already exhibited a degree of good sense and self-possession far beyond her years. There is an old maxim, gentlemen which is no doubt familiar to most of you, that "where men reign, women govern," and that "where women reign men govern;" whether the truth of this aphorism be equal to its antiquity it is hardly worth while to enquire, since to all rules there is an exception, and I shall be much mistaken, gentlemen, if our most gracious Sovereign do not, ere many years elapse, furnish that exception in her own person, by becoming, no matter who her ministers may be, the real director of their most momentous deliberations. Educated as she has been in the expectation of filling the exalted station to which time has called her, it cannot be doubted that she will sustain the weight of empire with dignity and glory, and that under her fostering rule measures will be multiplied for the diffusion of knowledge, religious and moral, and for the spread and consolidation of social and political liberty and happiness. In the career of improvement, India too, under her auspices will, I hope, move on pari passu with the mother country, and among other means devised for ameliorating the condition of our native fellow subjects, we may live to see the day when our Sovereign's influence will be exerted in such a way as to lead to a more extended scheme of female education, when the philanthropist may enjoy the luxury of liberating the female mind from its living tomb and elevating it by cultivation to something like the level of the western world. But I will not long occupy your time, Gentlemen, by dwelling on anticipations of this nature, pleasing though they be. We are assembled here to offer homage to a Sovereign, who is at this time an object of intense interest to the whole civilized world, and right cordially and enthusiastically will it, I am sure, be rendered. Before I conclude allow me to call upon the good sense of this meeting to refrain from all political allusions of a character to disturb the harmony of the meeting. We ought all to be, and I dare say we all are, animated by one common impulse, to proffer fealty to a Queen who, whether her ministers be Whig or Tory, will, I am satisfied, govern both wisely and constitutionally—

"With a firm and skilful hand
May she uphold the laws, and keep them ever Above the proud man's violence and wilful
The poor man's reach."

I will now, gentlemen, for form's sake, read the requisition, after which I shall be happy to bespeak attention for any gentleman, who may desire to address the Meeting.

The Sheriff then read the requisition.

James Pattle, Esq., at the request of friends had undertaken a duty for the perfect performance of which every one around him was much more competent; but the eloquence of the Sheriff had rendered the duty comparatively light, and still easier had the task of addressing the meeting become by the nature of the subject which needed not the fascination of eloquence to command attention. (Cheers.) He was relieved too, by the impression that those whom he was then addressing were imbued with loyalty, and by the conviction that the patriotic purposes for which they were met, would engage attention to the exclusion of other subjects. He need not remind the meeting that the Queen had assumed the government of an empire which had never been surpassed in the number of its population or the extent of its wealth, almost at the moment when parliament had declared her competent to reign, and that she had demeaned herself in the most appropriate manner, showing a magnanimity of mind which could only proceed from a nobleness of disposition, promising a reign of happiness to the people, and glory for herself. (Cheers.) He thought also that her subjects were much indebted to the Queen's august mother who had secured to her a mind perfectly unbiased, and who had, with a feeling which could but be gratifying to every Englishman, travelled from Germany to England, that her daughter might be born on British soil. It was the misfortune of the meeting to be at a distance from their sovereign, but sure he was that the expression of their attachment would not in consequence be the less approved. He apologized to the meeting for the imperfect manner in which he proposed the resolution; his intention was but to give expression to the honest and warm feelings of his heart, and he regretted that his words did not correspond with the ardour of his feelings, were it otherwise his address would be more worthy of the attention of the meeting.

Mr. Pattle then proposed the first resolution : —

"Resolved that the accession of her Majesty to the throne must excite the best and most patriotic feelings, and on which the inhabitants of the Metropolis of British India ought to tender to her Majesty their heart felt congratulations, assuring their sovereign that distant as they are from the seat of empire, they yield to none of her subjects in loyalty to her government and attachment to her person."

Major-General Sir William Cagament seconded the resolution which was put and carried with acclamation.

Captain R. H. Cockerell, R. N., briefly proposed the second resolution :—

“ That a dutiful and loyal address from the inhabitants of Calcutta of all classes be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty congratulating her on her accession to the throne of the British Empire.”

The Resolution was seconded by M. Manuk, Esq., and carried amidst loud cheers.

Theodore Dickens, Esq., proposed for the adoption of the meeting an address which, he said, had been drawn up by a gentleman of talent and whose competency for the duty was undoubted (Mr. Rattray.) Politics would have deprived the address of half its grace and propriety, it had the afore been framed on a comprehensive plan, calculated to unite all men. He wished people, however, not to adopt it as a matter of course, but freely to express their opinions. Those who were conversant with the usages of public meetings, must be aware that it was the practice, and a most convenient one, to come prepared with addresses and resolutions drawn up and duly considered before hand—indeed it was absolutely necessary that somebody should undertake the invidious task. In the present instance, the duty of making these preparations had been undertaken by a committee of several gentlemen, and it had been their study to make the address combine the feelings of all and speak only the common sentiment of loyalty for their youthful Sovereign which pervaded every breast. All reference to political questions had therefore been carefully avoided; and he hoped the display of loyalty, which he trusted would now be exhibited by the native portion of the community joining in the address, would impress the Royal mind with a deeper attachment to this portion of an empire, which, including her colonial possessions, was the largest in the civilised world. Different opinions might exist as to the mode of administering the government, but he was satisfied that all must concur as to the general benefits of the union, and he trusted under the new reign to see improvement rapidly advance, with the development of the resources of this fine country, and that the natives would ere long have their full participation in the prosperity and glories of the British empire.

Mr. Dickens moved “ that the following address, signed by the High Sheriff of Calcutta on behalf of the inhabitants, be adopted :—

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

Most Gracious Sovereign,—We your Majesty's subjects of all classes, residents of the capital of British India, beg leave to tender to your Majesty our heartfelt congratulations on the occasion of your accession to the throne of your illustrious ancestors.

In the records of their private worth and public bearing, in times of warfare and in times of peace; and in the living example of the parent, who has been mercifully spared to guide your youthful footsteps with safety and honor to the exalted station which you occupy and adorn; we discern our guarantee that what we hail with all our best affections awakened, will prove to us, to our children, and to our country, a blessing and a pride.

Distant as we are from the object of our homage, that homage will necessarily follow, at a long interval, the welcomes of our more fortunate fellow subjects, assembled round you; but we doubt not your Majesty will graciously accept our tribute in the spirit in which it is proffered; and at the moment of such gracious acceptance, we would humbly invite a benignant sympathy towards the land wherein we address you. The vast extent of its varied population (comprehending eighty millions of your subjects, and forty millions of your allies and tributaries,) with the many and magnificent plans and projects, in operation, or in prospect towards their improvement; its indigenous treasures, and its infinite capabilities, and the increasing frequency of their beneficial development; and finally, its intrinsic value, and unacknowledged importance to the British Crown; are now worthy subjects of your regard. It is the land, which has enriched, by turns, the most civilized nations of the earth, and, though not cherished hitherto with the warm sympathy which it merits, has maintained its vigour and its resources, and shined, as it has long shone, the brightest jewel of your diadem.

The dominion, established in British India by the arms and wisdom of your ancestors, although it may not claim to be the most perfect of human institutions, has nevertheless brought prosperity and security, where anarchy and violence had reigned without control; and when we turn from the history of the past to look upon the present, we cannot but be deeply impressed with a grateful consciousness of the vast benefits which have accrued from the Union, through which we enjoy the blessings we acknowledge.

No season can be more appropriate to the expression of such sentiments, and the assertion of our attachment to the Crown and Constitution, than that of the accession of your Majesty to the seat of empire; and we nothing doubt—Heaven seconding our prayers—that the name of VICTORIA shall become associated in our hearts and in our annals, with all that is noble, great and dignified.

May the Almighty Disposer of all events, grant that your Majesty may long remain the chosen instrument of maintaining the honor and interests of the great Empire, which it has pleased Him to commit to your sovereignty; and of preserving to the nations, which He has entrusted to your rule, their safety, their freedom, their civil rights, and their religious liberties.

Calcutta, Sept. 29, 1837.

Dwarkanath Tagore, Esq., seconded the resolution. He alluded to the absence of the usual number of natives from the meeting, a circumstance which he said could only be attributed to the day being a Hindu holiday, for no one could deny that his countrymen entertained a lively sense of gratitude for the benefits that had been the result of British dominion. He referred to the state of India under Mahomedan rule, and though, he said, there are still grievances existing, life and property are now safe from viceregal authority, and justice, in Calcutta at least, is equally distributed amongst the people.

H. M. Parker, Esq., unexpectedly had a resolution put into his hands, but felt much pleasure in connecting himself with this occasion, and the more so when he saw a native gentleman come forward and acknowledge the great benefit derived by the country from British rule. He did not think her Majesty could receive a higher compliment :—

“ That the High Sheriff be requested to forward the address to Her Majesty in the most suitable manner.”

The resolution was seconded by Rustomjee Cowarjee, Esq., and carried on the suggestion of Mr. Parker, with NINE TIMES NINE.

Thanks were given by Mr. Pattle to the High Sheriff, and the meeting separated.—Englishman, Sept. 30.

EXAMINATION OF THE SCHOOL AT FORT GLOUCESTER.

We understand that the Second Annual Examination of the School at Fort Gloucester, under the superintendence of the General Assembly's Mission at Calcutta, was held on Tuesday the 19th instant. It was conducted in presence of the Reverend James Charles and Reverend William H. Meiklejohn, the Senior and Junior Ministers of St. Andrew's Church, the Reverend W. S. Mackay, of the Assembly's Mission, and Mr. Walker, Superintendent of the Works at Gloucester. The School is taught by Baboo Kedarnath Singh, a young man educated at the Assembly's Institution in Calcutta, and is supported partly from the Funds of the Mission, partly by the Proprietors of the Mills, and partly by the parents of the children who attend. Although it has not been in existence for much more than eighteen months, the pupils have made considerable progress in the different branches taught. Prizes were delivered to the most deserving in the different classes by the Reverend Mr. Charles, who, in complimenting them on the progress they had made during the short period they had been engaged in their studies, took occasion to impress upon them the necessity of continued industry and perseverance, and expressed a hope that their future examination would prove as creditable as the present, both to themselves and to their Teacher.—Calcutta Courier, Sept. 22.

HOOGLY COLLEGE.

We are happy to find that this noble institution is in a very prosperous state, both in regard to numbers and discipline. The number of scholars at present is about 1,000, and teachers, 19. The course of instruction embraces a knowledge of the Indian and English languages, history, science, &c. The library is well selected, and amounts to about 1,000 volumes of the best works of our western authors, besides a considerable number of the principal authors in the native languages. On inquiry as to the studies most popular amongst the alumni, we found that the vast proportion were pursuing the study of English and Bengalee, the following being something like the proportions. Sanskrit class, 16; English, Arabic and Persian, 200; English and Persian, 50; English and Bengalee, 600. In English, reading novels and some of the lighter works appeared the favourites, if we might judge from appearances. One great desideratum in an institution like this is a good set of scientific apparatus; this we did not see; popular lectures on the sciences would not only interest the minds of these young men, but instruct them in their incipient state much more effectively than abstract teachings. The cold season might be well embraced for this purpose. The whole establishment reflects the highest credit on the industry of Dr. Wise and his colleagues. This is a fine sphere for three or four intelligent and devoted missionaries. We believe the London Society has determined to send one whose special attention will be directed to these youth.—Friend of India, Sept. 14.

MEDICAL COLLEGE.

We had the good fortune to be present yesterday evening at a most interesting lecture upon the powers of Galvanism by Professor O'Shaughnessy at the Medical College, which was honored with the attendance of the Governor-General. Dr. O'Shaughnessy had been some time engaged, as we mentioned last week, in constructing a very powerful battery upon his improved principle, and having at length completed it, he kindly undertook to gratify his friends with an exhibition of its extraordinary powers. The concourse in the College theatre was larger than had been expected, the room being quite crowded, and the learned professor, in acknowledging the compliment to his labours, modestly expressed regret that he had it not in his power to render the exhibition more perfect. The battery, in fact, was not nearly at its full power, from an accident discovered too late; but what it did perform was nevertheless very surprising, and the brilliancy of the light emitted in the combustion of charcoal was as beautiful, as the arch of the flame when exhibited in vacuo was curious and new to the beholders. The loud sparks obtained on disconnecting the wires were a sufficient index of the great power of the engine, which, the lecturer stated, was capable of decomposing water so rapidly as to generate 500 cubic inches of gas in a minute.—And here he took occasion to notice two very curious facts which he had accidentally discovered, and which appear to have hitherto escaped attention in Europe, namely, that the decomposing power increased in a rapid ratio with the increased temperature of the water, being at 150d. of Fahr (we believe he said) about three times as great as at the temperature of 80d. and in the afternoon always greater than in the morning, which latter observation had suggested his experiments to ascertain this galvanic law. The other discovery is equally important, namely, that the galvanic force increases in a certain ratio with the periphery of the plates, and is not, as hitherto supposed, merely in arithmetical ratio dependant upon their superficial size. A flat bar was exhibited whose galvanic powers were stated to be as five to two compared with a square plate of the same number of square inches of superficies.

Dr. O'Shaughnessy's lecture embraced a rapid sketch of the science from the first discovery of galvanism by the wife of Galvani. But we have no time to extend our slight notice of his able and most interesting discourse, except, merely to notice a diagram he has prepared from his own experiments upon the powers of the new battery, shewing the ratio of increase and decrease by adding to the number of cups in a set. The increase of power is most rapid up to six, and goes on still rapidly up to nine, being greatest at twelve; after which it descends to fifteen, at which we believe the retrogression stops and the power is nearly stationary with any number of cups beyond that number.—Calcutta Courier, Sept. 14.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceeding of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's Apartments, 2d September 1837.

Letters from the following gentlemen were read :

1st. From J. Eaton, Esq., of the Madras establishment, requesting that his name might be withdrawn from the list of members.

2nd. From W. H. Macnaghten, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, stating that he was directed by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to forward for the information of the Society, a "Medical Memoir upon the plains of the Indus," drawn up by P. B. Lord, Esq., M. B.

3rd. From J. Jackson, Esq., forwarding a fine specimen of urinary calculus, which he had lately extracted. The patient (aged 19,) had suffered from symptoms of stone since he was two years of age, but when he was 8 years old the annoyance subsided, and he enjoyed excellent health and complete freedom from pain, till within the last two months. At that period he relinquished the sedentary employment of shoe-making in which he was brought up, and became a field labourer. The change of life was soon followed by a renewal of the old symptoms, he felt something suddenly give way within him, and all the annoyances of the complaint returned upon him with redoubled violence. The stone was easily extracted, and the patient quickly recovered.

The calculus presented evident marks of being composed of two substances deposited at distinct periods distant from each other, the original formation was smooth and was over the greater part of its surface covered with a quantity of newly crystallized matter.

4th. From W. A. Green, Esq., of Howrah, forwarding numerous specimens of calculi, which he had extracted, with an abstract of the result of the operation of 14 cases. One only died, the rest recovered.

Mr. Menzie's case of congenital small pox and Mr. Baikes' case of Malformation were then read and discussed.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

A General Meeting of this Society was held at the Town Hall, on Wednesday morning, the 13th September, 1837, at $\frac{1}{2}$ past 9 o'clock.

THE HON. SIR E. RYAN, President, in the Chair.

Dairie, Esq.; John Bell, Esq., and three or four Members whose names could not be ascertained.

The proceedings of last meeting were read and confirmed.

The following gentlemen proposed at last meeting, were duly elected Members of the Society, viz.:

F. P. Boller, Esq., C. S.; P. Barron, Esq.; F. T. Ferguson, Esq.; L. Roussac, Esq.; Thos. Maddock, Esq., C. S.; E. Bentall, Esq., C. S.; Owen John Elias, Esq.; Jas. Church, Esq.; E. Preston, Esq.

The following gentlemen were proposed.

J. A. F. Hawkins, Esq., C. S., proposed by Col. McLeod and seconded by D. F. McLeod, Esq.

W. D. Shaw, Esq., proposed by Dr. Jackson and seconded by Dr. Wallich.

G. C. Nansell, Esq., C. S., proposed by Dr. Wallich and seconded by the Secretary.

Baboo Joykissen Mookerjee, proposed by H. Walter, Esq., and seconded by the Secretary.

A. Gouger, Esq., proposed by C. K. Robison, Esq., seconded by the Secretary.

R. Montgomery, Esq., C. S., proposed by the Secretary and seconded by R. Walker, Esq.

Capt. S. H. Hannay, proposed by the Secretary and seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

G. R. Dennison, Esq., proposed by the Secretary and seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

Alex. Porteous, Esq., proposed by Dr. Hufnagle and seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

The following motions, of which notice was given at last meeting, were disposed of, viz.:

1st.—Mr. Storm's motion to give premiums and medals for cows and ewes.

After reading the Committee's minutes, it was resolved, that a premium of 250 rupees and the silver medal be awarded for the best bred cow imported from any part of the world.

2d.—That a premium of 100 rupees and the silver medal be awarded for the best woolled Merino or Saxony ewe imported within the period prescribed in the resolutions already passed for the encouragement of importing bulls and rams.

3d.—That these resolutions be added to those already published.

2d.—Dr. Jackson's motion to give a premium for a certain quantity of land cultivated with carrots, as fodder for cattle.

As some doubts were raised as to the necessity of holding out encouragement, carrots being cultivated largely in many parts of India for such purposes, the Secretary was ordered to hand this motion over to the cattle committee for further consideration.

3d.—Mr. Walter's motion to have the whole catalogue of premiums and medals offered by the Society, printed in Bengalee and Hindsee.

Resolved that it be adopted.

The Secretary had taken measures to have this done, and the copies will shortly be ready for distribution.

The following motions were read, and made over to the Secretary to be brought forward next month.

1st.—"Proposed by Dr. Wallich, seconded by G. A. Prinsep, Esq., that the Society's gold medal be offered to any Captain or other person who shall undertake the charge of and bring round from Bourbon, or any other place for the Society, the true Cochineal insect, or grana fina," (male and female), and who shall succeed in delivering a fair proportion of the insect in a living and healthy state; all expenses incurred to be defrayed by the Society.

2d.—"Proposed by E. Stirling, Esq., seconded by A. Colvin, Esq., that the gold medal shall be awarded to Capt. Sleeman, in consideration of his zealous exertions in bringing the Mauritius sugar cane to this country, and ultimately successfully establishing the permanent cultivation of that cane on the banks of the Nerbuddah."

The President now drew the attention of the Meeting to a correspondence that had taken place between Mr. William Griffith and the Secretary, consisting of 1st.—A letter from Mr. Griffith to the Secy., dated Aug. 24th, acknowledging the receipt of his election, as an ordinary member of the Society, and animadverting on the condition of the Society's Seed Nursery, situated in the H. C.'s Botanical Garden, which that gentleman considers "unworthy of the Society, or of the Botanic Gardens;" further giving it as his opinion, that the Committee have relied too much "on another quarter" and concludes his strictures by recommending Members to visit the Nursery and judge for themselves, suggesting at the same time that Mr. Piddington, be added to the present Nursery Committee, and that the management of the Nursery be left to Mr. Masters, or, that a separate parcel of ground be rented, where the operations of the Society might be conducted "without any clog to its movements."

2d.—The Secretary's reply to Mr. Griffith, dated 26th August, explaining the nature and objects of the Nursery, which appeared to him to have been entirely lost sight of, (if at all understood) by the gentleman, who had brought so grave a charge against a disinterested body; and hoping that his explanation would tend to correct the mistaken views adopted by Mr. Griffith; adding, however, that should they fail to do so, Mr. Bell would consider it his duty to second Mr. Griffith's proposal for the most public enquiry, and for the most unqualified opinion of Members at large.

3d.—Mr. Griffith's rejoinder, admitting only the misnomer "experimental Garden" for a seed Nursery, and adhering to his former opinion in all other points, requesting that this last letter might also be submitted.

The President having read all these Communications, stated, that a most grave and serious charge of neglect had been instituted against a Committee, by a gentleman whose scientific acquirements entitled his opinion to be treated with every respect by a Society to which he had been so recently elected a Member. That the Society had reposed implicit confidence in the judgment of that Committee, which consisted of Dr. Wallich, Mr. Storm and Mr. Bell, and that the truth of the reports framed, and signed by that Committee from time to time, since the establishment of the Nursery, having been impugned by a gentleman of Mr. Griffith's Botanical attainments; he (the President) felt that the only course to be adopted, which would effectually establish or refute the accuracy of implied neglect, and consequent mismanagement, was to nominate a Committee of independent and disinterested Members (disinterested in the question at issue) who would enquire into the charges brought forward by Mr. Griffith. The following gentlemen were accordingly named by the President as a "Committee of Enquiry," and having agreed to act, were requested to bring their report up at next General Meeting, complete in every point, viz.

W. Cracroft, Esq.; E. Stirling, Esq.; A. Colvin, Esq.; Dr. Anslie; D. Hare, Esq.; W. Gibbon, Esq.; W. C. Hurry, Esq., and Robert Watson, Esq.

The President hoped that no objection would be made to accept the report of such a Committee, and none being offered they were accordingly elected.

Professor O'Shaughnessy observed, that as Mr. Piddington had been named by Mr. Griffith, as a Member who would, in his opinion be an acquisition to the Committee now under imputation, he thought it would be gratifying and only an act of justice to Mr. Griffith, to give him the benefit of that gentleman's judgment in conjunction with those already appointed, and the Secretary was desired to solicit Mr. Piddington's attendance, when the Committee might resolve to meet and to visit the Nursery.

Dr. Hufnagle was also named, but excused himself, by saying that he could not as a Member of that Society, sit in judgment on a body of fellow-members, of whose disinterested zeal and motives, he was too fully satisfied.

Dr. Hufnagle was pressed by Mr. Colvin and other Members still to join, but the President objected, as Dr. H. had so far already delivered his opinion, and he wished a full and uncompromising enquiry to be made.

Read a letter from Capt. P. T. Cautley, Superintendent of the Doab Canal, dated 6th August, acknowledging the receipt of the Secretary's letter of the 10th July, and the Carolina Rice therein alluded to. Promises to send sample of Banmutta rice to compare with the former variety, as well as samples of each kind cultivated in the surrounding districts. Mentions his intention of sending down cuttings of the Otahete sugar cane for the use of the Society.

From Mr. Pontet, dated Bauglipore, 16th August, noticing the circumstance of grape vines growing most luxuriantly in that district in a wild state. States having distributed the cotton and grass seeds received from the Society to the hill-people, who cultivate cotton in very small quantities, and of the most inferior description.

From J. Davenport, Esq., Secretary Branch Society at Comilla, dated 20th August, acknowledging receipt of 3 vols. Society's transactions. Speaks favorably of the upland Georgia Cotton, and guinea grass.

From T. O. Crane, Esq., Secretary to the Singapore Society, dated Singapore 11th August, promising to furnish shortly a report of his exertions in the culture of cotton on the island, requesting that an efficient mule be procured and sent.

Note.—If such a person can be found the Secretary will be happy to send him, but one is a "rara avis" in Bengal.

From H. Clarke, Esq., dated Suhaswan, August 20th, intimating the establishment of a Branch Society, or rather a Botanical Garden at that station, and requesting a supply of seeds and plants, &c.

Mr. Clarke reports favorably on the growth of some cotton plants produced from Sea Island and upland Georgia seed received from this society.

From G. H. Smith, Esq., dated Munroorie, August 21st, acknowledging receipt of books, seeds, &c. Speaks favorably of the growth of three kinds of American cotton in his grounds at Delhi, and of the successful introduction of the Otahaiti sugar cane, of which there are now about 1,500 plants, the produce of 20 plants received a short time since from Colonel Colvin.

From W. H. McNaghten, Esq., Secretary to Government, dated 4th September, forwarding by desire of Government, additional circulars by Dr. Wright, of Madras, containing his further remarks on cotton.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 22nd August, presenting in the name of Dr. Wright, of Madras, another copy of his observations on cotton, also 2 cases of Mr. Inglelew's Treatise on the culture of the grape vine, red rose, strawberry, &c.

From Lieutenant Kirke, dated Deyrah, 29th August, speaking most favorably of his plantation of upland Georgia cotton, also the improvement visible on a plot of denon cane, cultivated after a new plan; stating that he has found the Tartarian wheat to grow most luxuriously in the Dhoon, that it is very prolific and makes excellent flour; and soliciting a supply of Egyptian cotton seeds.

From H. Walters, Esq., dated 12th September, 1837, presenting a specimen of cotton grown at Hooghly from American seed.

From Mr. Masters, dated 12th September, forwarding further supplies of cotton seeds produced in the Society's Nursery, viz. 13 seeds Upland Georgia, 6 seeds New Orleans, a packet of Sea Island, a ditto of Egyptian.

From R. Montgomery, Esq., dated Azimghur, 24th August, forwarding a highly interesting statement, shewing the quantity of land under sugar cultivation in that district, together with an estimate of the quantity of sugar manufactured during the last year.

Note.—If all public officers would contribute in this way, (and if they knew how much such statements are appreciated they doubtless would), what a fund of information would not the Society shortly possess!

From W. Stevenson, Esq., Secretary to the Society of Lucknow, dated 24th August, in reply to the Secretary's letter of the 3rd July, soliciting a supply of sugar cane. Intimates his inability to meet the wishes of the Society of India owing to a want of rain in that quarter which will prevent the execution of prior engagements to several parties, who had applied for cane.

From J. B. Jones, Esq., dated Bubecha, Jaunpore, 11th August, mentioning the loss of a quantity of Otahaiti sugar cane (obtained from the Western Provinces), by the ravages of the white ants, and soliciting a supply from the Society; stating that this description of cane has been found to answer well in the district of Azimghur, and that several nurseries have been formed in his neighborhood, for increasing the cultivation next year.

(Note.—No cane yet available from the Society's Stock.)

From J. W. Payter, Esq., dated Bogorah, 25th August, intimating his intention of cultivating, a large portion of his lands, both neezi and by ryots, with sugar cane (the soil being reckoned the best for that staple, provided he can be put in the way of obtaining supplies of plant cane, Otahaiti of course.

Suggesting for the opinion of the Society, the hire of a small vessel to be sent direct to the Island of Otahaiti, for a cargo of cane, cost of the undertaking to be defrayed by a number of subscribers to a certain number of shares, Mr. Payter offers to put down 1,000 Rs. for the purpose.

Some member fancied that the sudden transiiton of the cane from its original soil and climate to that of India would be an insuperable objection, but this opinion was opposed by others, and the feasibility of the scheme was referred to the sugar committee.

From W. Liddell, Esq., dated 10th August, (Secretary to the Agriculture and Horticultural Society of Madras), stating in reply to Mr. Bell's letter of the 23rd July, that the Madras Government have purchased and presented to that Society, 10 Merino rams at a cost of £13 or £14 each, with a view of improving the wool, and have further most laudably given orders for the purchase of 500 white ewes. Further, in reply to Mr. Bell's enquiry respecting the plough from an American model, Mr. Liddell informs the Society, that Government have also ordered the despatch for the use of this Society of ten ploughs, manufactured at Bombay.

Mr. Liddell hopes, that the Societies of Madras and Bengal will, as suggested by Mr. Bell, heartily co-operate, in respect to their endeavors to improve the wool trade.

Memo.—This is doing the thing properly, and if the Bengal Cattle Committee's first plan had been adopted, we should have been able to make the experiment in a proper manner.

From Mr. C. N. Villet, dated Cape Town, 8th June, advising shipment per Perfect of seven cases kitchen garden and flower seeds, for the use of the Society. Amounting in all to sicca rupees 1,020, which the Secretary was directed to pay.

From Mr. J. Hannay, dated Dinapore, 24th August, advising the despatch of three cases garden and flower seeds, for the use of the Society.

The Secretary stated, that only 25 boxes of kitchen garden and 25 boxes flower seeds had been sent, each box with no more than enough for one individual.

These seeds are excessively dear, and Mr. Hannay will hardly obtain further encouragement from this Society.

Resolved, that the Secretary do the best he can in the difficult matter of dividing such a wretched assortment.

From Dr. D. M. Moir, to the Secretary, dated Musselburgh, (near Edinbro'), 20th February, acknowledging receipt of the copies of the transactions of this Society, and stating that he has distributed them according to directions conveyed in Mr. Bell's letter of the 9th April, 1836. Mentions the circumstances of a quantity of flax seed having been sent out to India for trial by Mr. Hastie, the M. P. for Paisley.

From Mr. Veterinary Surgeon H. C. Hulse, to William Storm, Esq., dated 12th August, stating that a breeding establishment for horses would be of more service to the Society than the offer of premium for cattle and sheep.

Suggesting that a medal be awarded for the heaviest and fattest country sheep that can be produced. Referred to the cattle committee.

From His Excellency Sir Henry Fane, dated 22d August, expressing great doubt as to the arrival in a proper state, at Simlah, of his hop plants, lately received from England, owing to the delay that has taken place on the part of his Agents, in forwarding them.

From Captain Jenkins, of Gowhätti, dated 25th July, forwarding two pieces of cloth made from the area silk, and promising to forward some cocoons soon. Ordered to be made over to the silk Committee.

The Secretary mentioned that he had, in accordance with instructions from the Society, received from Messrs. Cantor and Co. 500 rupees, the sum placed at its disposal by Captain Jenkins, as a premium. Having obeyed the Society's order, he now wished to know if Captain Jenkins ought not to have the same rate of interest allowed, as the Society received on their large paper. Resolved accordingly.

From Dr. W. Montgomery, of Singapore, dated 15th August, presenting to the Society a model of a rice mill commonly used at Malacca.

From J. J. Dixwell, Esq., dated Boston, 25th April, enclosing a bill of lading for a barrel of American maize (the yellow dutten) shipped per Repulse, for the use of this Society.

From D. W. H. Speed, Esq., dated 12th September, presenting to the Society, 38 ears of maize, the produce of American and of country seed.

From Mr. Harris, dated 13th September, presenting a coconut from the Seychelles Island.

From C. K. Robison, Esq., dated 12th September, on the subject of having a new die for medals.

Ordered that the medal Committee be requested to report.

The thanks of the Meeting were ordered to be offered for the foregoing communications and presentations.

The Secretary brought to notice, that the next month's regular meeting day would fall just in the middle of the Doorgah Poojah Holidays, when most of the members would be out of town; and suggested that an earlier day should be fixed, as it was highly desirable, that the report of the "Committee of enquiry," should be brought up, and published without delay as the nursery committee's hands had been tied since the receipt of Mr. Griffith's letters, and its objects would be frustrated, by any delay.

Resolved, that the first Wednesday in October, be fixed for the next General Meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India.

Town Hall, 13th September, 1837.

Addendum.

Dr. Hufnagle presented some samples of twist and cloth made from American acclimated cotton, of very superior quality.

ASIATIC SOCIETY.

AUGUST 2.

TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF MR. COLEBROOKE.

Adverting to the edition of the Miscellaneous Essays of the late Mr. H. P. Colebrooke, announced among the presentations to the library this evening, Mr. J. T. Pearson called to the attention of the meeting that although it was impossible now to return thanks to the illustrious author for what might be called his dying bequest to literature, the Society might justly place on record some appropriate acknowledgment of its great obligations to this eminent orientalist, and some expression of its regret at the termination of his honorable and useful career. He thought it would be an excellent plan to follow the example of the institute at Paris, in its eulogistic memoirs on the death of eminent members—such as those pronounced by the Baron Cuvier on so many occasions.

The meeting concurring in Dr. Pearson's proposition, which was seconded by Mr. Hare, and the Vice-President Dr. Mill, having acceded to the request of the meeting to embody in their present resolution an abstract of the services rendered by Mr. Colebrooke to the Society and to Asiatic literature in general,—it was accordingly.

Resolved, unanimously, that the Asiatic Society cannot place on its shelves this last donation from Henry Thomas Colebrooke, so long one of its most distinguished members, without recording a tribute of affection for his memory, of admiration for his great talents, and regret for the loss sustained by oriental literature through his lamented death.

"Mr. Colebrooke was proposed as a member of this Society in the year 1792, and his first essay "on the duties of a faithful Hindu widow," was read in the last session of Sir William Jones' occupation of the chair, in April 1794. Though on an insulated subject only, which various circumstances however render deeply interesting, this short essay well exemplifies the manner in which he executes every subject of that nature that he undertakes: and is a happy prelude to that series of splendid contributions to the society, which in profundity of acquaintance with all subjects of Indian literature and science,—in the union of the most extensive erudition with the most chastened judgment, and an accurate scientific acquaintance with the several subjects which his essays collaterally embrace, are unsurpassed by those of any other contributor to our Researches,—or by any who, either before or since, have pursued the same unbeaten paths of literature.

His next essay was the "enumeration of Indian classes," or (as we commonly term them) castes—in the 5th volume of the Researches; an able and excellent elucidation of a subject of no common interest. And this, after some less important contributions, was followed by the essays on the Religious Ceremonies of the Hindus, and on the Sanskrit and Prakrit languages, which appear in that volume and in the 7th—essays which would be of themselves sufficient to place the author in the highest rank of oriental scholars,—and which must long continue to form the best text books of those who wish to investigate the depths of Indian literature and religion.

The translation of one of the more recent inscriptions on the Delhi lâl, which appears also in the 7th volume of the Researches, is chiefly interesting as being the commencement of the author's more extensive researches into monuments of the same kind in our later volumes: he was among the first to point out the great importance to the knowledge of ancient India of a pursuit, the enlargement of which is daily increasing our stock of historical information. The "account of certain Mahimayan sects" in the same volume contains some valuable particulars respecting the origin of the curious race so well known in the west of India under the name of Bahras; and proves that in the midst of his accurate study of the more secluded literature and monuments of the Hindus,—the author was versed also in the learned records of Western Asia.

The dissertation which bears, perhaps most of all, the stamp of the profound Sanskrit learning of the author, is that on the Vedas in our 8th volume; a work which, though necessarily leaving much undone that is not required towards furnishing a complete analytical index to those records of the ruler language, and oldest worship of the Hindus,—has found none to second, much less to complete, or to supersede the masterly outline of their contents which is here presented to the inquiring student. In this, as in the other essays of Mr. Colebrooke,—the reader feels that it is not a mere philologist or collector of ancient records that he is consulting,—but one whose critical sagacity weighs, well the value, the age, and the import of every authority that he alleges: and whose statements in consequence, may be received with the most entire respect and confidence.

The latter volumes of the Researches are adorned not only by the elaborate "Observations on the Jains" in which very respectable classical erudition is brought to aid profound Indian research,—and the learned and interesting Essay on Sanskrit and Prakrit poetry, but by the author's articles on Hindu astronomy. To this deeply interesting subject of inquiry none has so completely brought the qualification desiderated by Idler, the union of Sanskrit learning with competent astronomical science. The account of the Indian and Arabian divisions of the Zodiac in the 9th volume,—and the essay in the 12th on the notions of the Hindu mathematicians respecting the precession of the equinoxes and the motions of the planets,—are most valuable contributions to our knowledge on this subject. They are the best corrections to the extravagant notions of Indian antiquity which the preceding speculations of Bailly and others had deduced from imperfect notices of the Hindu observations, and also to the crude and fanciful speculations with which a writer on the opposite side, the late Mr. J. Bently, had unhappily adulterated some very valuable and interesting calculations.

Such, with some articles of less moment, but all deserving perusal, are the contributions of Mr. Colebrooke to the Researches of the Society, of which he was elected Vice-President on the 5th of October, 1803, and President on the 2nd of April 1806,—an office which he continued to fill until his departure to England in 1815. But it would be unpardonable to omit all mention of the works separately published by him while resident here: particularly the Sanskrit Grammar, with its very able critical preface,—the edition of the ancient Sanskrit vocabulary, the Amarâ Cûsha, to the interpretation of which much botanical knowledge is made to contribute;—the very erudite and ingenious work on the Algebra of the Hindus,—and the Digest of Hindu Law, a standing monument of the professional value of the writer, and of his skill at the same time as a jurist and an oriental scholar.

Neither would it be pardonable to omit all mention of what has been contributed by Mr. Colebrooke to the same cause since his return to England, where he acted zealously as the Society's agent until age and infirmities compelled him, in 1830, to relinquish the duties of the office to which they elected him. This period is signalized by the erection of the Royal Asiatic Society, to which, as their first President, Mr. Colebrooke, delivered his inaugural discourse in March 1823, and of whose transactions his articles may be regarded as the principal ornament. Of these the essays on the Philosophy of the Hindus in its five principal divisions is unquestionably the most important, relating as they do, to a subject which none who studies the history of the human mind can regard otherwise than with the greatest interest,—and written with an ability, a mingled profundity and clearness, which challenges comparison with the best of his preceding works. A perusal of the five essays—as they were successively published in the two first volumes of the R. A. S. Transactions, or as they are now republished with the best of his earlier essays in the selection now presented to our library,—will at once convince every discerning reader of their immeasurable superiority to any thing that had been before published on the same subject."—Calcutta Courier, Sept. 5.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, THE 6TH SEPTEMBER, 1837

The Hon'ble Sir Edward Ryan, president, in the chair.

Read a letter from Sir Charles D'Oyly, tendering his resignation as member of the society on account of his immediate departure from the country, but hoping, that his name might be continued as an honorary associate on the list of members to which it had belonged since the year 1814.

The rule does not seem to be generally known, that although members on quitting the country are exempted from contributions, they continue on the list, and in case of return to India recommence their subscription only from their date of arrival.

Committee.

Dr. Stewart, Secretary of the Statistical Committee reported the result of two applications to the Government of Bengal, one for the privilege of franking its correspondence, which was accorded as far as regarded the returns from public servants to the Secretary; the second for a specific grant of funds for the prosecution of its inquiries: this was refused under the explanation that a reference from the Society for a grant for general purposes was now on its way to the court, and that statistical inquiries might be regarded as included therein. The Committee also recommended that they should be empowered to associate with themselves any friends to statistical inquiry who might not be Members of the Society.

The Secretary thought with submission, that the Committee should have applied to the Society rather than to the Government direct, if they required pecuniary or other aid:—as a Committee their duty was to devise measures and collect information, reporting thereon; and the Society of course, on their nomination, contemplated meeting any expences they might recommend as advisable in the prosecution of their inquiries. With regard to postage he was happy that the privilege had been accorded, but the indulgence seemed hardly consistent with its uniform denial to the Society itself.

Sir Benjamin Malkin, as chairman of the Committee, admitted that it would have been more regular for the application to Government to have been made through the general body. The inadvertence arose solely from the idea of the Society having no funds to spare, and this was also the reason for seeking to incorporate associates with the Committee who might by separate subscription meet all charges independently of any call on the general fund. He therefore moved,

That it be permitted to enrol parties who are not Members of the Society as associates of the Statistical Committee.

After some discussion, in which the President instanced the parallel case of the Physical Committee and its corresponding members, Mr. Macnaghten moved an amendment, which was carried.

That the question be adjourned to next meeting, and in the mean time the opinion of the Committee of papers be requested.

Sir Edward Ryan, adverting to the approaching retirement of the Rev Dr. Mill to Europe, suggested to the Society the propriety of paying some compliment to this distinguished scholar expressive of their feeling on the occasion. He would not now expatiate on the Vice President's title to such a tribute, because if his proposition were adopted, this pleasing task would be more ably performed and more appropriately conveyed in the name of the Society at large; he therefore moved first:

That an address be presented to Dr. Mill, expressive of the loss which the Society will sustain by the departure of a member so eminently qualified by his profound knowledge of the languages of the east, to aid and assist in the objects and pursuits of the Society.

Mr. W. H. Macnaghten had great pleasure in seconding any proposition to do honor to Dr. Mill. In no member had greater erudition ever been witnessed nor had any converted profound learning to uses calculated more to benefit the country and to dignify the study of oriental learning. Addresses had been very rarely presented, but on such an occasion the practice would be more honored in the observance than in the breach.

The motion being carried nem. con. was followed by a proposition from the President.

That Mr. W. H. Macnaghten be requested to draw up the address, to be presented to Dr. Mill, at the next regular meeting, or at a special meeting should he be unable then to attend.

Sir B. Malkin, seconded this motion. Though his Indian acquaintance with Dr. Mill and his capability of appreciating his local studies was less than that of other members, he had enjoyed his friendship at more remote dates and at a greater distance than many. The wide scope of his friend's knowledge embraced the east and the west. It had been observed of him at college, that his knowledge was equally remarkable for area and for depth: certainly its depth had not diminished by his sojourn in India, while its area had wonderfully extended.

This motion being likewise carried, Sir Edward Ryan prefaced his third proposition by reading the following eloquent passage from Dr. Wilson's reply to the address presented to him on his departure in December, 1832. "If I can Judge of your sentiments by my own, I can fully appreciate the motives which induce you to seek to preserve memorials of those who have taken an active part in the labours of the Society. One of the most interesting decorations of the room in which we are accustomed to assemble is to me, to all, the portrait of our illustrious founder; and I am sure you will agree with me that the apartment would possess a still dearer interest were such decorations multiplied; did the countenance of Colebrooke, Wilford, Wilkins, and other distinguished members look down complacently upon the labours of their successors. I need not add, how irresistible are such influences upon the human mind, and how well calculated are such memorials to give wholesome stimulus to youthful energies. It is not from a merely selfish motive, therefore, that I accede to your request, but in the hope that even in this way I may contribute, however feebly, to the great ends of our institution; at the same time I am not insensible of the kindness which has prompted the proposal, and if I do feel vain it is that you should have thought me worthy of the honor of being perpetually, as far as any thing human is perpetual, present among you."

He concluded by proposing.

That to meet the wishes of his numerous friends anxious to subscribe for the preservation of a memorial of Dr. Mill in the Society's rooms, he be requested on his arrival in England to sit for his picture to some eminent artist.

The Secretary in seconding this proposition, said he had been called on at a late festive meeting to bear testimony to Dr. Mill's great talents and learning, and had felt some humiliation at his total incompetency to answer such a call, for indeed it would have been naught, but presumption in him to speak to merits so far beyond his criticism. Happily in these rooms no such testimony was required, for here all knew his learning and his value. He could not, however, omit to make public acknowledgment of the kindness and aid he had always received from Dr. Mill, in his capacity of Editor of the journal; to which Dr. Mill's contributions had been ever among the most valuable. A circumstance worthy of mention had enabled him to hear what the pundits thought of his attainments in Sanskrit, for Dr. Mill was so scrupulous of accuracy that he never put a page of his own composition to press until it had undergone the scrutiny of several natives of learning. On asking an opinion of one of the most learned of these, Kamalakanta, had begged to be allowed to express it in verse, and he now held in his hand what might really in some degree be regarded as a diploma of the Vice President's Sanskrit proficiency. "Where, said the pundit, among all the English who have studied our language, was there yet one who could compose a poem in the style and language of our most classical ages? Verily is Kalidasa come again among us."

Museum.

Read a letter from Dr. J. T. Pearson, stating that in consequence of his departure from Calcutta, he was compelled to resign his situation as Curator of the Society's museum.

The catalogue which he had undertaken to prepare of the objects of Natural History in the museum, was in a forward state; that of the birds was ready, and the remainder he hoped to complete on his way up the river to join his new station.

The secretary said that the aid the museum had now received from government pledged the society to maintain it in an efficient state, and some arrangement was immediately necessary. The committee of papers would be the proper organ to take charge, on the retirement of Dr. Pearson, and to recommend (if they judged proper) a successor. He had not himself made generally known the state of the question, but in the only quarter to which he had applied he had found that spirit in the reply which he himself always anticipated and rejoiced to see among his associates. One member, Dr. McClelland, had volunteered to act gratuitously as superintending curator during his stay at the presidency. Dr. Cantor too had in like manner, kindly undertaken to classify and arrange the large collection of snakes in the rooms below, now augmented by a valuable donation from Aga Kerbalai Muhammad.

He could not help mentioning some particulars regarding this donation. The Aga had purchased Dr. Pearson's private collection for 3,000 rupees, including a much more extensive selection of shells, insects, and other objects than the society possessed, mostly classified and named, and arranged in convenient cabinets. The society had spent more than double that sum in the two experimental years without (as it appeared to him) reaping equal advantage. Was it not then worthy of consideration whether in most cases it would not be preferable to purchase collections already formed, and only to keep up such an establishment as should suffice to preserve the objects with care, until the determination of the court were known in regard to the late memorial? If so he would propose that the Government grant of 2000 rupees monthly should be declined with proper acknowledgements, reserving the option of purchasing collections, which had been also liberally granted by government.

Should the majority, however consider that the present favor should not be declined, he thought that the best way of employing it would be in deputing a collector, by permission, to accompany the expedition under Captain Pemberton now on the point of proceeding to Bhotán, and to which no naturalist stands appointed, although Dr Griffith, the botanist, will doubtless give all the attention in his power, collaterally, to natural history.

The meeting seemed unanimous in opinion that the government grant should not be declined, and it was finally resolved that the committee of papers be requested to examine and report upon the best mode of maintaining the museum in an efficient state.

Tribute of the Pundits to the Rev. W. H. Mill, D D, &c by Kamalakanta Vidyakanka

Translation.

1. The honorable Company, generous, pursuing a course of integrity very dextrous, learned, compassionate, and exalted skilled in the velocities and motion of fire, air and water (the laws of the elements), never relaxing from their determination—deeply conversant in their own religion, with equity protecting their subjects and enjoying their trust,—moving forward to aid the aggrieved who come to them for help, may they long live the protectors of the world!

2. By their own mighty power to maintain the rule of Aryavarta and all India have they deputed thousands of men eminent either in commerce, in religion, in the administration of justice, or in war, who arriving with full knowledge of their respective grades, have performed and do perform their several duties with regularity.

3. Among these, the names of Jones, Colebrooke, Sutherland, Carey, Wilson, Macnaghten, and Mill, (have been conspicuous) for their acquirements in the Sanskrit language. Of how many highly instructive and entertaining books, by their individual talents in forming a complete analysis, have they reproduced the facsimiles in various other languages!

4. In the midst of these, prominent stands the name of Jones, the minister of justice, the cheerful, the very clever, justly endowed with the title of judge. Through the celebrity of his knowledge he has become the theme of conversation among the learned. Having pursued the shastras, by skill he translated into his native tongue the famous drama of the birth of India's king. He first arranged in alphabetical order for the benefit of Sanskrit students the Cośha (or dictionary of Amara Singh)

5. The name of Colebrooke has acquired an inheritance of renown by his "laws of inheritance." He translated the text books of civil and criminal justice. He first brought together and employed many pundits in printing and disseminating Sanskrit books at a cheap price in this country.

6. Carey introduced the puranas to the people of England in their native tongue, and translating the holy books of his own religion into Sanskrit, engaged systematically in their promulgation.

7. Wilson collected the literary stores of dramatic and other poetry, and made them known by translation as well as the dictionary, the systems of philosophy, and the puranas.

8. Menighten, celebrated in grammar, in legal opinions, having thoroughly examined the judicial authorities prevalent in different parts of the country, has arranged and published the results in English.

9. But who among all these has been capable of producing a continuous poem in the Sanskrit language save Mill?—He, indeed, in lines verse in which the best pundits can describe no faults. Of the works of prosody he is a master, so skilled in regular and irregular metre, in the correct and harmonious combinations of letters, that rumour proclaims Kalidasa is once more born to the world!

10. In the Vedānta the Sāṅkhya, the Patanjali and the Buddhist (schools of philosophy) deeply versed in the holy vedas, in the law, and astronomical shastras equally learned, such smoothly flowing verses can Mill alone indite. In the literature of *Babel and Persia, with all their various characters, a scholar—religious, mild, strict, affable, taking pleasure in conversation with all learned men—such is his mind!

11. The work written by the celebrated Kalidasa, the Kumara Sambhava, has this equally eminent poet reproduced in the self-same measure in his own language in a manner altogether new! What more need be said of him but that with due observance of regular and irregular metre, and of all the rules of the ancient authors, he has composed the Christa Gita to delight and instruct the minds of multitudes!—Journal of the Asiatic Society for August

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Sept. 1, 1837.

An inquest was held on the body of Connye Naupit, of Baumunbusty, who was admitted to the Calcutta Native Hospital last night, with several wounds on his person, and expired early this-morning. About a quarter past five o'clock, the Jury being sworn in, one Baidenauth Gowala of the same place, was ushered in charged with having inflicted the said wounds on the deceased. The relations of the deceased, namely his mother, half brother, and stepfather were called in; and the coroner said that one of them should remain in the Court during the course of the inquest to assist therein; and the mother offered to do so.

Dr. Bain, sworn.—I am the Police Surgeon. I have examined the body of the deceased now lying in Chand ney Hospital, which was pointed out to me by Bolaky Naib. There were four wounds upon the body; one over the left eye brow, measuring three quarters of an inch and a half in length; one superficial wound over the epigastric region, measuring seven inches, but which did not penetrate the abdomen; one on the left side of the chest, over the situation of the eighth and ninth ribs, penetrating the chest and abdomen, measuring three inches and a half in length. I opened the chest and abdomen, and found the eighth rib was completely divided, and a part of the ninth, to the extent of a quarter of an inch. The diaphragm was wounded to the extent of four inches and a half, and the transverse arch of the colon was found in the cavity of the left side of the chest, pressing upon the lung of the same side. The sigmoid flexure of the colon and mesentery were also wounded to the extent of half an inch, and a large quantity of the fluid contents of the bowels were found in the cavity of the left side of the chest. The bowels were injected, and in a state of slight inflammation. Stomach and other organs natural. There were some old adhesions of the pleura to both the lungs. I am of opinion that the deceased had died of the effects of the wound inflicted upon the left side of the chest. It was this wound that produced all the internal injuries which I have described. The wound appeared to have been produced by a sharp instrument, such as that now shewn to me.

The coroner and the jury then proceeded to the Native Hospital, to inspect the body of the deceased now lying there. At the Hospital was taken the evidence of Peter O'Brien, first assistant, Calcutta Native Hospital.—Connyeah, the deceased, was admitted to this Hospital at about half past seven o'clock last night. He had a wound on the left side, over the false ribs, measuring three inches and a half, penetrating the cavity of the abdomen, from which wound was protruding a large portion of the large intestine. He had three other slight wounds, one on the left eye-brow; one on the right fore-arm, above the wrist; and the third across the epigastric region. He expired about half-past five o'clock this morning. Deceased himself told me his name, and that he was a barber by profession. It was the body of the deceased that Dr. Bain examined to-day in this Hospital. The wounds must have been inflicted with a sharp cutting instrument.

The coroner then returned to Court; but it appearing that there were more witnesses than would be possible to examine to night, it being now near half past six; it was resolved to adjourn the proceedings till ten o'clock precisely to-morrow morning.

ADJOURNED INQUEST,—SEPTEMBER 2, 1837.

Proceedings resumed at about half after ten o'clock, instead of ten, in consequence of two of the jurymen being about half an hour too late.

Sonyes, sworn.—I am a widow and live at Bammunbustee. I knew Connye, the deceased; he was my nephew, son of my sister Gungo. I brought him up from a child, feeding him at my own expence. He was a barber by profession. Between twelve and one o'clock the day before yesterday, he asked me to apply cupping to his leg. I said as I was going out, I could not do it, and desired him to go to his mother for it. He replied, I must do it, but I again refused to comply. He then asked me for something to eat; I said I had nothing to give him. He then went out, and returned shortly after, with a quantity of rice and dol, which he handed to his concubine Mirchia, desiring her to cook the same. About three o'clock, he took his meal in his own room, and went out again. At five o'clock, he returned home, and asked me for some rice; I replied, as before, I had none to give him, because I was ill and could not go out, and because the moon would give me no further supplies, I being in his debt. He then commenced using opprobrious language to me, and struck me with his hand. On this, I begged him to leave the house. He reproved me by saying "you vile woman! you have means to feed your paramour, and yet you can't give me any thing to eat!" At this time, the prisoner told him to go away and leave his house immediately. Deceased said that he would not go that day, but the day following. Deceased threatened prisoner, by saying that if he talked much he would thrash him. Prisoner and deceased then closed together and began to wrestle with each other. This took place in the compound, and I interposed and begged deceased to leave prisoner. I fell at his feet and entreated him to do so. In struggling they both fell on the ground. I then observed that the bowels were protruding from deceased, and gave the alarm; when the Police came and secured prisoner and removed him, because deceased said that he had been wounded by him. I have nothing more to say. [Witness appearing to have concealed facts she was aware of, was reminded by the coroner that she was sworn, and therefore bound to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; that if she did not, the consequences would be very serious to her; and that the law punished such conduct severely.] I will tell the truth. When the quarrel began deceased and prisoner were near each other. No blows passed before they closed together. Deceased attempted to throw down prisoner and he vice versa. When on the ground, I heard deceased call prisoner names; he called him a "Sula," &c. I did not see any stick or knife in the hands of either party. (The knife shewn to witness) I know it, it belongs to me and prisoner. Prisoner is my gallant, with whom I have lived for 20 or 25 years. I don't recollect when I last saw this knife before the struggle. After the struggle, I saw it pulled out of the beley of the deceased, by the chokoodars.

In answer to a jurymen.—During the quarrel the only other person present, besides myself, was the concubine of the deceased. When the parties fell, prisoner was first on the ground, and then the deceased, and prisoner got on the top of him; it was then that I saw the wound. At this time prisoner's arms were in an embracing position.

The coroner here remarked, that as witness had been present during the whole transaction, she must have seen the wounds inflicted; and that if she thought that she was doing any good to prisoner by concealing what she saw, she was very much mistaken. She was again reminded of her obligation to tell the truth.

To tell the truth, prisoner brought the knife out, when he saw deceased beat me. Prisoner was standing with the knife in his waist cloth, while I begged deceased to leave the house. Deceased had no sort of weapon in his hand. The knife remained stuck in prisoner's waist cloth, during the conversation that I have already mentioned. On the deceased seizing hold of the prisoner, the latter took out the knife and stabbed the former with it. Prisoner was a conservancy chaprassy formerly but is out of employ at present.

Marchia, sworn.—I am a widow and knew the deceased. I lived with him as his mistress. I was present when the Doctor Sahab opened his body after his death, at the hospital. I know how he died. The day before yesterday, about midday, prisoner told the deceased to leave his house. Deceased said he would do it the next day. Prisoner said that if deceased did not leave the house immediately, he would stab him with a knife. Deceased said "what crime have I committed, that you will stab me;" and repeated that he would go away the day following. After that, deceased went out and returned home about candle-light. Prisoner was then cutting some straw. Prisoner on seeing deceased, bid him quit the house instantly; and said if he did not, he would strike him with the butter with which he was cutting the straw. Deceased replied, "If you strike me with the butter, I have hands to strike you in return." After this conversation, deceased went to the compound when prisoner said "sala! I will beat you to-day!" Deceased heard him say so. Prisoner then went inside his room, and returned with a knife, came up to deceased and called him "sala" again, and ran the knife into his belly. I saw blood running out, and called out "murder! murder!" On receiving the stab, deceased fell on the ground, and prisoner got on the top of him, resting on his knees. I went to the assistance of the deceased, to rescue him from the prisoner. I tried to get the knife out of prisoner's hand, and got my hand cut. On my crying out, the younger brother of the deceased came in; and on seeing what had happened he went and informed his mother of it, and came back; the mother came also. Two chokeedars came in almost at the same time; pulled out the knife from the belly of the deceased, while the handle of it was yet in the hands of the prisoner. The thana people then took the deceased to the hospital and the prisoner to the thana. Prisoner desired deceased to leave the house, because deceased used to earn money, and gave prisoner none. At the time the affair took place, I and the last witness were present. Deceased was a nephew to the last witness. She is the concubine of the prisoner. The cause assigned by the last witness of the assault, is false. A quarrel did take place between the last witness and the deceased, the former finding fault with the latter for not giving her any money. Deceased did not make use of any abusive expression to the last witness, nor did he strike her; that is a made up story. There had been no dispute between the parties before. The prisoner was tipsy; he was tipsy all day. Deceased was sober. I saw prisoner go into a liquor shop and drink there. Deceased did ask last witness to apply 'cupping' to his leg, which was swollen, but she refused to comply with the request.

In answer to a Jurymen.—"here is no other tenant in that compound.

(The knife shown to witness).—"This is the knife with which deceased was stabbed. It belonged to prisoner, and I had the use of it occasionally. Deceased was not in the habit of bringing his razors home. I did not see prisoner tipsy before that day.

Cross-examined by prisoner.—About three quarters of the blade of the knife had gone into the deceased's belly, and with the remainder of it my hand was cut. I saw prisoner give the deceased three other wounds, namely, on the forehead, arm, and breast.

Gungo, the mother, Chumron, the step-father, and Bundo, the brother of the deceased, having seen nothing material, their evidence was dispensed with.

Raheem Ooddeen, sworn.—I am a chokeedar belonging to the Baumunbustee thana. About candle-light, the day before yesterday, when I was at a tank, not far from the house of the parties, washing my lota there, I heard a noise that a murder had been committed; and ran in the direction the noise came from. On going into the house of the prisoner, I saw in the compound, the deceased lying on the ground, on his side, and prisoner quite close to him in an embracing posture, with his right hand on the side of deceased, and his fist clenched. I called out for assistance, and Oseem Ooddeen chokeedar came; and we both raised up the prisoner, when I observed that in his fist was the handle of a knife which had penetrated into the body of the deceased. We then wrenched the knife from the prisoner's hand. Our thanadar came and ordered the deceased to be taken to the Native Hospital, and the prisoner to the thanah.

Oseem Ooddeen chokeedar's evidence was to the same effect as that of the last witness.

The Coroner then summoned up the evidence and charged the Jury at a great length, explaining points of law bearing upon the case; which occupied him for a considerable length of time. The Jury after a little consideration gave their verdict of "WILFUL MURDER" against the prisoner.

Prisoner is to take his trial at the next Sessions of Oyer, and Terminer.—Hurkaru, September 5.

SEPTEMBER 18, 1837.

A Jury was impannelled by the Coroner to investigate into the cause of the death of a woman named Jutto, whose body was lying in a hut in Shampookur division with several incised wounds on it, since Saturday evening last. The Jury and the coroner, after the former was sworn in, proceeded to inspect the body; and on their return, which happened to be near dusk, the following proceedings took place. Buddenauth, the husband of the deceased, stood charged with inflicting the said wounds.

Robert Henry Bain, sworn.—He was the Police Surgeon. He examined the body of the deceased which was pointed out to him by Najceeb-oolah, thanadar of Shampookur. There were sixteen wounds upon it: one on the left temple, half an inch in length; another on the left side of the neck, an inch and a half in length, and half an inch in depth, which had laid open the large jugular vein of that side and had split the eat of the same side to the extent of a quarter of an inch. Immediately over the situation of the liver and stomach there were nine wounds varying in size from three inches and three quarters to an inch and a quarter. There was also a wound on the left fore arm, just below the elbow-joint, measuring one inch and a half, one on the right elbow, and another on the right fore-arm, each measuring an inch and a half. There were two wounds upon the back, one measuring two inches and the other one inch and a half. The hair of the head was saturated with blood and a great quantity of blood lay upon the floor. Witness opened the chest and abdomen, and found the cartilages of the eighth and ninth ribs were divided to the extent of an inch and a half. The lower extremity of the right lung was also wounded to the extent of an inch and a half. A small quantity of blood lay in the cavity of the chest. The right lobe of the liver was wounded in eight different places, each an inch and a half in length; four of these had passed through the liver. The anterior portion of the stomach, and its upper part, were also wounded in eight different places, and allowed the contents of the stomach to enter the cavity of the abdomen, and also to have exit at the external wounds. There was a considerable quantity of fluid and coagulated blood in the cavity of the abdomen. Witness was of opinion that the deceased died of the effect of the wounds inflicted upon her person; more especially the wound on the left side of the neck, and those situated over the region of the liver and stomach. No one of the wounds which he described could have been inflicted with a stick or brick or by any other means than a sharp cutting instrument. He thought each of them might have been inflicted by the instrument now produced. Some of the wounds were larger than the edge of the instrument, but the enlarged wounds could be made by a repetition of plunges.

The hour being now late, and there being too many witnesses to be conveniently examined in the course of the evening, the inquest was adjourned till to-morrow afternoon.

ADJOURNED INQUEST, — SEPTEMBER 19, 1837.

The gentlemen of the Jury being in attendance and the Coroner having taken his seat, the proceedings were resumed.

Sooranny sworn.—She was the wife of one Connor, a shoe-maker, and a neighbour of the prisoner; she knew both him and the deceased, as husband and wife. She was of the same caste with them but no relation. On Saturday afternoon last she heard a cry from the house of the prisoner, and on going to enquire what the matter was, she saw the prisoner beating the deceased with his hand. Neither the one nor the other, uttered a word by which witness could know the cause of the assault. Witness then hastened to the house of the father and mother of the deceased hard by, and on her informing them of what she saw, they came and asked prisoner why he was beating their daughter, but instead of giving any reply to the question, prisoner beat them with a stick. Witness saw the prisoner stab the deceased.

Khunjunny sworn.—She knew the deceased to be the wife of the prisoner, whose aunt she was. About two o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday last, she heard a noise proceeding from the house of the prisoner. She proceeded thither and saw the prisoner cutting the deceased with a badaree, an instrument used in cutting leather. Witness asked the prisoner why he was cutting the deceased, when he shoved her down. The deceased was lying on the ground while the prisoner was cutting her. The deceased was crying "murder! murder!" Both the parties were drunk. Witness did not know of any previous quarrel between them. About half an hour after she heard that the deceased had expired.

Nuffer sworn.—He was a shoe-maker. On Saturday last he recollected both the deceased and the prisoner were drunk, and saw the latter beat the former, first with his fist and then with a brick. They both fell. The prisoner then pulled out a Badaree and wounded the deceased with it. Witness got frightened and ran away from the spot. A chokeedar then arrived and took prisoner into custody.

Juggurnauth sworn.—He was the father of the deceased, and lived in Shampookur. The deceased was about 20 years of age, and was married at the age of 13 to the prisoner. She had four children, three of whom were dead and one living, and was aged about two years. They used to quarrel some times for mere trifles. Prisoner never complained of infidelity on the part of the deceased. On Saturday evening last, on hearing that the deceased was being beaten by the prisoner, he and his wife went to their house. Prisoner beat witness and his wife with a stick. Witness's wife cried out, on finding the deceased expire from the effects of the wounds inflicted upon her, by the prisoner. Shookur Mahomed Chokeedar then came and took prisoner into custody.

Sona, Madhoo, and a woman, named Pannahae, gave evidence serving only to confirm the statements of the foregoing witnesses: we have therefore thought proper to omit their testimonies.

Shookur Mahomed sworn.—He was a chokeedar belonging to the Shampookur thanah. About 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday last, he heard a noise in the direction of prisoner's house, and he went there to ascertain what the matter was. He saw deceased lying on the floor of the hut. He saw the deceased give a stab on the belly with the weapon produced in Court. Witness desired prisoner to throw down the weapon, which he did, when he took him into custody; he seized him by the hands and tied them with a cloth and took him to the thanah. The woman was dead before the prisoner was taken to the thanah. He secured the weapon afterwards, on his return to the place about half an hour afterwards: he found it amongst a quantity of the cuttings of leather in a corner of the hut. He was perfectly sure of the identity of the instrument, having seen it in the hands of the prisoner while he was stabbing the deceased, and there being no other like it in the place.

Neyjeeboollah, sworn.—He was the thanadar of the division. He pointed out the body of the deceased which Dr. Bain examined, and about which the Doctor gave his deposition here yesterday. Deceased was the wife of the prisoner.

The coroner then charged the jury, who, without retiring, gave their verdict of "WILFUL MURDER" against the prisoner.

Prisoner was committed to take his trial at the next criminal sessions. — Hurkaru, Sept. 21.

CORONER'S INQUEST AT THE CALCUTTA JAIL.

22d September 1837.

DEATH OF BHOVRUB POUTER.

(Before C. B. Greenlaw, Esq., coroner.)

The following are the names of the gentlemen who were impannelled on the inquest.

Richard Christian,	William Gallagher,
Ernest Gray,	Peter D'Silva,
George Gill,	Nicholas DaCruz,
James Goodall,	David J. Daniel,
Alexander Tulloh,	Astica C. Aviot,
Robert Cribbley,	William Walker,
Thomas Gardner,	Joseph Chas. Sage.

Mr. Gray was chosen as Foreman.

The Coroner called the attention of the Jurors to the oath he would administer to their foreman, he then swore the rest of the jury. The Coroner desired his assistants to inform three fellow prisoner's who were present, that the jury had assembled to enquire into the cause of the death of Bhoyrub Poulter, and if they, during the enquiry, could suggest any queries which might not appear to them to have been gone through, that they will do so, and also that if they can name any witnesses who may be able to shew that Bhoyrub came by his death by the administration of poison, or by violent means, that the Coroner would be glad to hear them.

Dr. Ralleigh, deposed.—I visited Bhoyrub, the deceased, in the Calcutta Jail Hospital at 5-30 p. m. yesterday, at which time I found him in a state of insensibility, and to all appearance suffering an attack of apoplexy, or under the extreme effect of poison: I bled him in the right arm and external jugular veins, and applied the stomach pump, but the deceased expired about six o'clock the same evening. On the following morning I examined the body, but although a careful inspection was made, I could discover no sufficient indications of the cause of death. The contents of the stomach have also been chemically tested, but no traces of poison have been distinguished. The brain was a little more turgid than healthy, but no marked indication of apoplexy appeared on a post mortem examination. The stomach exhibited no marks of derangement. Dr. Ralleigh concluded by saying, that he had been informed that the man had been doing work that day, and it being a very hot day, the cause of death may be owing to the cause of apoplexy very common on excessive hot days in Calcutta.

Edward Durtill Gleeson, deposed.—That he is keeper of the House of Correction. That the deceased was sentenced on the 15th instant, for fifteen days to imprisonment with hard labor by Mr. W. C. Blaquiere. The deceased was well then. First heard of the man's illness at 2 yesterday afternoon in the usual manner, that a native prisoner had been sent to the Calcutta Jail Hospital. The native doctor's authority is sufficient for the removal of a prisoner under indisposition. The man made no complaint of illness. Ascertained afterwards from the Jemadar and the fellow prisoners who are here now, that the prisoner was yesterday suddenly seized with very violent fever. A burkundaz and a peon supervise a certain range of the prison, to them the prisoners are at all times free to make any complaints whether of wants, or indisposition. The native officers see that the work is properly performed by the prisoners. They have no power to punish in any way. Never had a complaint against the deceased for refusing to work. It is usual, if a man is negligent in the performance of his labor, that the peon should report it to the Jemadar, who reports to me of the man's refusal to work, and I exercise a discretionary authority conferred on me by the magistrates. I ordered no punishment to be inflicted on the man yesterday, or at any other time.

Shurreetoolah, a peon of the House of Correction, was sworn.—

Mr. Sage, a juror, here objected to the witnesses being in the same room during the examination.

The Coroner replied that the three fellow prisoners should be in the same room to check, or to point to any thing that may appear incorrect to them, and as being fellow prisoners, it was not likely they would follow the evidence of their keepers. The evidence of the peon continued. Did not know the deceased by name, but knew the man that was taken ill yesterday. Was in charge of a range in the House of Correction. Had a fellow burkundaz yesterday on duty, named Habbabeeboda. A Prisoner complained at 3-30 p. m. yesterday of being ill, who was taken to the Calcutta Jail Hospital. The man complained of being apt of inability to work. The man made no complaint before the time mentioned. I reported the man's illness to the Jemadar, who sent for the native doctor, who directed the man's removal to the Hospital.

Less than a quarter of an hour transpired from the time the man complained to the time of his removal. Did not feel the man, but saw him go the tank and drink water from it. No other prisoner complained of illness yesterday. Was present when the native doctor took the man away. The man worked as well as usual previous to his illness; had no reason to complain of the man's labor, and in point of fact had no occasion to make any report against him.

Suburuth, native doctor of the House of correction, deposed.—

Does not know the name of the deceased. The coroner here observed how shameful it was that the doctor did not know the name of a patient removed from his boundary.

A peon reported the indisposition of the man to me at 3-30 p. m. yesterday. My duty is merely to see that the men are actually ill and to send them to the Hospital, the doctor of which place keeps a registry of names. On seeing the patient, I discovered him to be in high fever; I ordered his immediate removal to the Hospital and accompanied him thither. The man had some swelled marks on his back, over the shoulders, which marks appeared to have been inflicted with leather straps, but I saw no body beat the man. The man made no complaint of having been beaten. I asked no questions as to the cause of the marks, not having observed the marks in the first instance. The man first complained of fever. The peon who informed me of the man's illness is named Puriao.

Moheschunder Dass, another doctor attached to both the Calcutta jail and House of correction, deposed. The witness refused to be sworn by Gunga jul, and was sworn by another form, after which he deposed that the deceased was called Bhoyrub Poulter. Suburuth sent the man to me. Suburuth came two or three minutes after the man. Shurruetoolah brought the man to me (Shurruetoolah was here called and acknowledged having taken the sick prisoner to Moheschunder). When the man was brought he fell at the door of the hospital. Witness asked the cause of his falling. It was 15 minutes to 4 o'clock then. Shurruetoolah was standing by him when he fell, and witness asked the peon why he let the sick man fall? The peon answered, that the man fell several times on his way to the hospital. The man was insensible. When I first felt him, he had fever, and marks on his back; he never recovered his senses while in the hospital. When witness first saw the sick man, he said his name was Bhoyrub. About an hour after the man was brought to the hospital doctor Ralleigh saw him. Witness administered medicine previous to Doctor Ralleigh's coming and went immediately and reported the man's serious indisposition to the Doctor. The man's indisposition I considered serious and reported it to the Doctor in consequence. I report all cases of a serious nature.

It being so late as 15 minutes to 8 p. m. the inquest was adjourned to 4 p. m. the next day.

ADJOURNED INQUEST—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1837.

Gaur Dass, a convict, deposed. The deceased went six or seven times to the tank to drink water, and every time he went he was beat. (The instrument with which Bhoyrub was beat was here produced, it was a leather strap a cubit in length and a little more than an inch width.) Witness did not drink water that day. All new comers drink water, and several others drank water that day, and were not beat. This man was not flogged for drinking water, but for refusing to work. The man all along said he was ill, and therefore refused to work. If men refuse to work under mere excuses they are punished. A man's refusal to work is reported to the Superintendent, and after investigation, if the Superintendent thinks the man deserving of punishment, he is either sentenced to six, or twelve stripes, or is locked up in a solitary cell.

Ram Chand, a bricklayer by profession, and now a convict, deposed.—Know Bhoyrub Poulter as a fellow convict. Bhoyrub and witness were working at the same hand mill on the 21st instant. After working some time, he went to the tank for water; he went a second time, when the peon passed and not finding Bhoyrub at his work struck him three or four strokes with a strap. The peon walked on, and Bhoyrub returned to his work; but finding the peon away, Bhoyrub again went to a pot, and found no water in it. He then complained of thirst, and asked what he should do. Witness said that if Bhoyrub went, he would be punished. The man then found a pot of water on a beam, and drank off its contents. The peon returned and finding Bhoyrub again from his work, repeated the first punishment. It was then breakfast time, and the prisoners were sent to have their meals. Ten a. m. is the general hour for the first meal. After breakfast the prisoners returned to work. Bhoyrub then complained of inability to work. Witness said, "go and work, or you will be beat." Bhoyrub then went to the peon, it was just after he had breakfast, and said he was ill and unable to work. The peon struck him, and desired him to resume his work. Bhoyrub returned to work, and worked slowly. Bhoyrub then said he was ill with fever; the peon felt him, after which he told Bhoyrub it was an excuse and desired him to work, and struck him again. Does not know if the peon is a proficient in pulse feeling. Bhoyrub then laid himself down from inability, and the doctor was sent for. The doctor after examining him, sent him to the hospital.

Mr. Gleeson sent for witness yesterday morning, but the peons having threatened to beat witness to death if witness mentioned the truth, witness denied the truth. Mr. Gleeson did not warn witness against any consequences or to tell the truth. The peons beat the prisoners, keep them confined and prevent access to the Superintendent. Mr. Gleeson is not in the habit of coming over the prison ranges. Witness has been six days a prisoner and has not seen Mr. Gleeson often. Witness was sentenced several years ago, when pounding bricks was the labor.

Moburruck Allee, jemadar of the House of correction.—Mr. Gleeson sent for the last prisoner and enquired, if he and Bhoyrub did not work together on the 21st. The witness was then asked if any person had ill-treated Bhoyrub, and replied in the negative. The witness informed Mr. Gleeson, that the man had complained of fever at 3 p. m. and was sent to the Hospital after being seen by the Doctor. Mr. Gleeson also told the last witness, that he would have to attend the inquest, and that he should speak the truth without fear. Witness was present at the foregoing conversation, it transpired in the morning.

Mr. Gleeson here informed the jury, that from six to eight stripes are inflicted in ordinary cases; in former times the number of stripes were greater, but solitary cells are now constructed, and they are resorted to as a more effective punishment in cases in which gentle punishment would be thought insufficient. That no punishments are inflicted without Mr. Gleeson's cognizance, but that this man may have been struck as alleged.

The inquest closed here and the Coroner charged the jury to the following effect.

That the jury were bound to pronounce a verdict according to enquiry. They had assembled to investigate the cause of the death of Bhoyrub Poulter; if the evidence before them would be found sufficient for that purpose. That if the jury were disposed to be guided by the evidence of Dr. Raleigh, they could come immediately to a point as to a verdict. The coroner was satisfied that the Doctor's evidence was the best in the case. It gave a probable cause for the man's death, as the doctor had said that it was very probable the man may have died from a determination of blood to the head; but if the jury thought the evidence of the other witnesses preferable, their verdict should be different, in as much as it was proved, beyond a doubt, that the peon had flogged the man, without being authorised to do so, which want of authority rendered the peon's conduct an illegal infliction of punishment, for which he must answer; but observed the Coroner, by the evidence of the doctor it is clear that though the flogging was illegal, it was merely superficial, and that it could not have caused the death of Bhoyrub, which created a great doubt, to which doubt the peon was fully entitled. The jury were not to look to what may possibly have occurred, they were not to make up evidence. They were not to go beyond the evidence before them, and on which alone they should pronounce their verdict. The Coroner concluded by saying that if the enquiry had taken place at any other place, he would have felt satisfied with the evidence of Dr. Raleigh; but as the enquiry was connected with a jail, he felt it to be his duty to enter into as full an investigation as possible, to discover any error in the system of treatment, or any gross irregularity in the case of prisoners. He, however, felt satisfied that Mr. Gleeson was in no way cognizant of the conduct of the peon, as Mr. Gleeson sent for the fellow labourer and held an enquiry compatible with his duty, and had warned the witness Ramchand to speak the truth. The coroner after a few minor observations concluded.

They jury retired, or rather all save the jury, retired out of the jury room, and were kept out so long as an hour, when the door was opened and the foreman, Mr. Gray, said his mates had agreed and pronounced the following verdict "Died by the visitation of God; but that there is not sufficient evidence to shew the manner of the visitation." After which some of the jury were inclined to comment upon the conduct of the peon, which long commentary was nothing more than, that the peon was highly wrong in having done what he had no power to do, and that he should get an out and out setting down. —Hurkaru, Sept. 25.

The inquest on the body of Sreemutty, found in a well on her own premises, on the morning of Tuesday last, which commenced the day before yesterday, ended about six o'clock yesterday evening, but the verdict was adjourned till four o'clock this evening. Comul and Hycaunt were apprehended on suspicion of having murdered the deceased.

Dr. Bain, the Police Surgeon, examined the body of the deceased, and deposed to the following effect: The body of the deceased was pointed out to me by the Thanadar of Tuntoneah. There appeared three wounds, viz. one on the head, one on the middle of the forehead, rising perpendicular, and one over the eyelid, done with a pointed instrument. The chest and the sides were scratched or grazed. The chest, head, abdomen, and the eyes were full of blood. The cheek-bone was broke in three different places. Nine of the ribs on the right side were broken, and the same number on the left side, except the eighth. I am of opinion, that the death of the deceased must have been caused from the effect of pressure on the neck and the chest.

Sham Dass, a native Police Officer.—On Tuesday morning last, I was desired by Mr. McCann to proceed to the house of the deceased, to enquire into the circumstances of her death. I found there the Thanadar, the Naib, and the Chokasary of the Tuntoneah Thanah, with a great crowd of people. I saw Ramjoy, and said to him, "tell me the truth how this matter occurred?" He asked me what cast I was; I replied that I was a Hindoo. He then said, putting his hands together, "If you will save me, I will state the whole particulars to you." I said, "I can't promise you any thing, it rests with the authorities, they may save you if they like." I then took him to a keranchy for the purpose of bringing him to Mr. McCann. The Thanadar, Naib, and some Chokedars were with us. I then asked who were the parties that committed the murder, and desired him to be calm and collected, and state the whole of the particulars. I do not threaten or press you, but state all you know of the matter. He then said, that there were seven persons, five Mosulmans and two Hindoos; that he knew the names of the two Hindoos, but he did not know those of the Mosulmans. That one of the Mosulmans was a peon, wearing a badge, which was a round plated one; and that he would know the Mosulmans if he saw them. I then asked him the names of the Hindoos: he said, Comul and Bycaunt. I took him before Mr. McCann; after which I received orders to take Ramjoy with me to apprehend Comul and Bycaunt. Ramjoy described Bycaunt's house to me, and when I got near it, I left Ramjoy in the keranchy, and went towards Bycaunt's house. I asked a boy, where it was, and he pointing out a house to me, ran to it himself. I saw the boy speak to a man in the verandah, who immediately ran into the house, I suspected him to be Bycaunt, as I observed a change in the appearance of his face when spoken to by the boy. I ran after him and seized him. I then asked him what his name was. He said Bycaunt. I then took him away and put him into a keranchy with a chokeedar, and desired him to follow my keranchy. As he was passing the other keranchy, he saw Ramjoy and said to him, "Takoore, why have you had me taken into custody; why don't you have the chaprassy taken." Ramjoy made no reply, and nothing further transpired. We then proceeded to the house of Comul. When we arrived within a short distance of it, I went in with the naib and chokeedars. I saw a man sitting in the verandah, whom, from the description I had received from Ramjoy, I took to be Comul, and seized him. He said his name was Comul. I put Comul, into the keranchy where Ramjoy was, desiring the latter to get out of it, and a chokeedar to take charge of him and walk him along. When I took him into custody, he said, "Why do you seize me, what have I done, I have done nothing." I took them all to the thanuah of the division. Mr. McCann shortly after came and desired me to apprehend the chaprassy. I went with Ramjoy to the Military Board and revenue Board, but nothing resulted.

Ramjoy.—I am a servant to the deceased, and a Bramin. I have been in her service about a month and a half. My occupation was that of a priest to perform poojahs. One day I went to the house where Comul resides, and requested him to allow me to take flowers that grew there. He permitted me to do so, and I went to his house every morning for flowers. Comul being a Bramin also, I used to smoke with him now and then. I saw Bycaunt there, as also a chaprassy sometimes. The chaprassy had a separate hookah and he smoked also. About 20 or 25 days ago Comul said to me, "if you will favor me, we will take the property out of Shreemutty's house and give you a share of it." I said I will consider about it. I intended to inform chokeedars of it, but feared that I would get into trouble myself if I failed to prove, and therefore did not mention it to any body. Bycaunt was at Comul's when the proposal was made; he was at some distance, and I don't know whether he heard the conversation or not. On Monday evening last, when it was very cloudy and dark, I took lights upstairs and below, coming out of the house I met Comul and Bycaunt standing together outside the door. I asked them what they wanted; they said they wished to smoke. I desired them to come in, and they did so. I then filled a chilim and handed the hookah to them. At this time five Mosulmans came in; one of whom I knew to be the chaprassy I met at Comul's. I asked them who they were and what brought them there. Scarcely had I uttered these words, when Comul and Bycaunt knocked and held me down, one of them pressing on my breast severely and stopping my mouth. What passed while I was thus held down, I can't say, as I was insensible. After a considerable time I recovered myself and saw no body; then I called out, ma! ma! and receiving no reply, I was alarmed. I then went out of the house and proceeded to Goluck mistry, a blacksmith, and Ropchand a shopkeeper, who lived hard by; but my mind being still agitated, I don't recollect what conversation I had with them. I know that they went upstairs, as Comulor Bycaunt said, "hold the safe," take care that he does not get away, whether he lives or dies we are going stars. I got acquainted with Comul five or six days after I entered the service of deceased.

Goluck mistry.—I know Ramjoy Takoore, and knew the deceased. On Monday evening last, about half past eight o'clock, Ramjoy came to my shop and said, that he had gone out of his mistress's house locking the door up; that on his return he found the lock open, and on going in he found near the well a brass pot and some clothes; he then called out ma! ma! but no answer was given, and he was much alarmed. I said there was no cause for alarm, as his mistress might have gone to the privy. He replied, he could not help feeling alarmed. He seemed agitated at first. It was dark, and I could not see his face. He asked me if the deceased had any relations I told him that she had a brother-in-law at Burtallah.

The rest of the evidence being calculated to throw no further light upon the case, we have thought proper to omit it.

The prisoners both denied all knowledge of the affair; adding that they did not even know the witness Ramjoy. They did not hear of the murder till they were taken up by the Police.

The Jury having met at four o'clock this-day, gave their verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown.—Bengal Hurkara, Sept. 30.

SUPREME COURT.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1837.

(Before Sir Edward Ryan, Chief Justice, Knight, and Sir Benjamin Malin, Knight.)

The Judges, on taking their seats, and previous to the commencement of business, administered to each other the oath of allegiance, which was also taken by such of the Officers of the Court as were present.

The Advocate-General moved the Court—stating that he appeared on behalf of Captain Stanley, of H. M.

sloop Wolf, for his claims for the capture of certain Pirates agreeably to Sec. 1st, 6th Chap. the IV. chap. 49. The claims are grounded upon four particular cases, the first on the 24th March 1836, when Captain Stanley fell in with the Pirates, in which eighteen of them were killed.

The Judge remarked that he had had that case already before him and had granted the necessary certificate.

The Advocate-General stated that he had not attended the Court on the former occasion, and was consequently not aware of his circumstance.

The second case occurred on 13th April, 1836.

The third on 11th October, 1836.

The Advocate-General here remarked that the last case was well known to their Lordships.

The fourth case occurred on 30th April, 1837, when the Pirates were taken and carried to Singapore; eleven were ultimately taken.

James Archibald McDonald, Lieutenant of H. M. Sloop Wolf, deposed that he remembers having last year, in the month of March, been on board the Sloop of War Wolf, and having been despatched off the island of Pulo Tinge in chase of Pirates; thirteen Parical boats were met with, and were taken. There was a Chinese Junk passing on her way to Singapore, and these boats appeared to be lying in wait for the vessel. "When we first saw them, they were lying near the shore. H. M. Sloop Wolf was at that time at the distance of about five or six miles from them. We closed and shot over them, and they immediately fired at us, and pulled away at the same time. The nearest of the boats was within grape shot range. We had in our pinnace a twelve pounder cannonade, and in our cutter we had one gun. The pirates fired both from large and small guns." Witness has been a good deal in the neighbourhood of these islands for the last year and a half. He has during this time seen a great number of coasters and merchant vessels, but none armed similarly to the pirates. The majority of the pirates' vessels, at least twelve of them, had stockades and large guns. There were altogether eighteen vessels. The five first mentioned were afterwards joined by thirteen others, and "we were engaged from ten to five during the day chasing them. We were at one time 300 yards from them, which was the nearest distance we had approached. Our firing continued from half past ten in the forenoon till five in the afternoon, and round and grape were fired. The pirates pulled away, keeping close together and out-pulled us considerably; we were not more than half an hour within grape shot range of them, and had discharged about thirty rounds of grape and round shot."

The pirate boats contained, at the very least, six hundred men in all. We had fired musket shots also. Our gun boat had a six pounder in her, and we could distinctly observe, without the aid of the glass, the grape shots strike the pirates' boats. Witness cannot say whether any men were killed or wounded. Our boats crew observed one of the principal men fall and remarked the circumstance to the rest of the crew. Her Majesty's sloop Wolf was not in sight at the time; one of the sampans, or small boats, that had been attached to one of the prahus, was picked up by the sloop of War. On the Thirteenth of April, 1836, witness was off Pulo Tinge engaged against the pirates. He was despatched to H. M. sloop Wolf and left the pinnace, cutter, and prow about 2 o'clock and arrived at the next morning. Nine men were captured and brought to the ship: a week afterwards witness took the three Cochin Chinese from another island. Mr. James is the officer who had charge of the pirates (or looks after these men on board). Witness was present when the nine men were brought round, and tried in this port last year. Witness landed on the 30th April of this year at Pulo Tinge, 14 men were captured; six escaped at Singapore, and the remaining five were brought round to Calcutta, the other three were not identified. Witness was present at their trial at the last Sessions. These men had been captured in the jungles. Witness assisted in destroying their boats. There were eighteen in number, and some cloths of the Cochin Chinese, which they had been robbed of, were found in their boats. Eight out of 14 men were identified by a Cochin Chinaman, who was on board, and three others were identified at Singapore.

Alexander Glen, formerly Midshipman, and now a Mate of the H. M. sloop-of-war Wolf, deposed, that he was last year in H. M. Sloop Wolf, and employed in her boats off the island of Pulo Tinge. In the latter end of April, there was one boat captured by Mr. James, 2nd Lieut., at sea, about a mile from the shore; witness was on one of the boats and assisted the Wolf's cutter in capturing nine men on the high seas. They were brought round to this Port and tried at the last Sessions; witness attended at the trial.

Robert Jenkins, a Mate of H. M. sloop-of-war Wolf, deposed that he was employed about the beginning of October—, in the Wolf's cutter: the boat was armed with brass three pounders, muskets, &c. At about 11 o'clock in the morning on or about the 13th of October, we saw three prows under sail; we chased them, and they kept close to each other, till we lost sight of them in a fog; two hours afterwards we again closed with them, they pulled into the jungles between the trees, where there was about four feet water. We got within half of the boats when they were at the mouth of a creek, and we hailed them through an interpreter on board. They all landed on the beach carrying their boats up with them, and remained there until we fired." Witness does not understand their language, but through the medium of the interpreter made them understand his intentions. After repeatedly hailing we fired on them, as they were hauling the boats into the jungle, to prevent their escaping; we estimated the number to be about sixty men in all. One boat was a much larger one than the other two, and we principally fired at her; the smaller boats were hauled on the shore by the pirates, who retreated on our opening our fire. We landed afterwards and found that the large boat had also disappeared."

A certificate was granted of the capture of the nine men on the high seas by the Judges on the statement of Mr. Glen. The other three captures were disallowed on account of there appearing no evidence to shew that the pirates were taken on the high seas.

The Court adjourned at twenty minutes to 3 P. M., and will be re-opened on Tuesday next at 1 P. M., for the purpose of administering the oath of allegiance of Her Majesty to such Officers of the Court as had not already taken it.—Cal. Courier, Sept. 2.

INSOLVENT COURT.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 9.

The business in the Insolvent Court of Saturday was of little interest, a few native cases only coming before the court, and an application made by Mr. Leith on behalf of Mr. St. Leger Kearnan, a tidewater, receiving a salary of rupees two hundred per mensem, the full amount of which he applied to retain until he is promoted to a higher grade. The learned counsel urged that unconscionable servants in general have not to undergo the difficulties and incur the expenses which the class of servants termed tidewaiters undergo, for in the former they are on shore, and have only one establishment; on the other hand a tidewater must have a house and establishment of servants for his family on shore, and another on board of each ship as he may be posted to, it being the express orders of government that it is not incumbent on captains of ships to supply the tidewaiters with maintenance, diet or provision of any kind.

Mr. Justice Maikin ordered the application to stand over until next court day, with liberty to amend the affidavit by adding to it the amount of the additional expenses incurred by the insolvent in attending to his duties on board of ship, and while absent from his house in Calcutta.—Englishman Sept. 11.

SEPTEMBER 9. 1837.

(Before Sir B. Malkin, Knto.)

Rada Kanth Baswas was sworn to the truth of his schedule, and there being no opposing creditor, he was discharged.

Shake Choonee, a dealer in cattle, previous to being sworn, was opposed by Mr. C. G. Strettell, the Attorney of Shake Shaumees, the constituted Mooktar of Modarbux and Tulah Beebee, infants, the heirs and representatives of Shake Jungoo, deceased; who had instituted an action against this insolvent for 478 rupees in the Supreme Court, previous to this insolvent's application for the benefit of the insolvent act, and which action is still pending in that Court.

The right of Shake Shaumees to oppose the insolvent, was admitted by the Court, as the insolvent in his schedule had admitted him to be the Mooktar of Modarbux and Tulah Beebee, whose claims were inserted in his schedule.

This Insolvent, was strictly examined by Mr. Strettell. He deposed, that he had 10 cottahs of ground in Kurraah, jointly with Minnah Beva, which is mortgaged to a person named Emambux; and 2 biggahs and 15 cottahs of ground at Gurochok, jointly with a person named Arzan, and one hut on the ground where he lives at Chuckerbaure. These he said were inserted in his schedule. He had no sheep in the custody of Shake Salaroo nor any claims against him for 200 sheep sold to him, nor has he any claim against the Free School; in fact he has no claims due to him beyond what are inserted in his schedule. He was formerly a partner with Shake Salaroo and Haddee, butchers in the Teretta Bazar; but in December 1835, just previous to his taking out a writ of adjudication, their partnership was dissolved,—Salaroo and Haddee paid him a sum of money, for sheep which he had sold them, and took the concern into their hands which they are carrying on still. Deponent knows Tureebut sircar: Shake Haddee and Salaroo, had brought an action against him in the Petty Court for 64 rupees, in which, as this deponent was formerly their partner, he was, against his consent, made a party to the suit. When deponent heard this, he instructed his attorney, Mr. Ochme, to inform the Court that he had no interest in the suit. He has no claims on Tureebut sircar. He used to sell sheep to Salaroo and Haddee during his partnership, and they paid him his due on his dissolving his partnership. He did not inform his assignee of the suit brought against Tureebut sircar in his name—that suit is postponed.

Tureebut, sircar, deposed, that he was this Insolvent's sircar when he was in partnership with Salaroo and Haddee, and kept his money and accounts. In December 1835, when the partnership was dissolved, the Insolvent settled his accounts with deponent, and had a balance of 64 rupees to receive from him: this money is still unpaid. Deponent saw the insolvent in jail when insolvent advised him to confess judgment in favor of Shake Haddee in the suit against him in the Petty Court, and he would pay the money. Deponent refused to accept this advice and informed Mr. Alexander, the assignee of the insolvent, of this suit. The suit is postponed.

R. Z. Shircore, deposed, that he is an assistant in the office of Mr. J. W. Alexander, the Assignee to the insolvent Court. He was ordered by Mr. Alexander to attend on behalf of the Assignee to suspend the seat in the name of this insolvent and others against Tureebut sircar. The Assignee had received the power of this Court to present the insolvent in that Court, and the case was postponed in consequence till the decision of this Court regarding this insolvent is communicated to that Court. Tureebut, gave the information of the suit pending against him in the Petty Court, at the suit of this insolvent and others, to Mr. Alexander the Assignee.

The Judge said, that Mr. Strettell had not made out his case, and the insolvent was then sworn as to the correctness of his schedule, and discharged.

(Orthake Maher Ollah being called,

Mr. L. Clarke remarked, that formerly this Court had decided, that if an insolvent is discharged from custody previous to the hearing of his application, that application could not be heard; since then this Court had, in one instance, heard and discharged an applicant, who had been released from custody since he had made his application to the Court. He said that it was the intention of the creditors whose claim he represented to oppose the discharge of this insolvent; but he had refrained from so doing on the plea, that it was now too late for him to file his objection to the discharge of this insolvent; but he argued that if the Court had deviated from its former practice, and discharged insolvents, who had been released after filing their Schedule, he considered that it ought to afford the same justice to the creditors to come forward now and oppose the insolvent's discharge. The Judge in reply directed Mr. Strettell, the insolvent's Attorney, to amend the insolvent's application for his discharge as the 34 Section of the clause did not extend to a general discharge under these circumstances, and he at the same time, informed Mr. Clarke, as this assumed application would be a new one, Mr. Clarke's client would thereby have an opportunity afforded him to put in his opposition to the insolvent's discharge. The insolvent's case was then postponed to the next day of this Court's sitting.

Mr. Leith, made an application on behalf of C. S. L., Kearnan, an insolvent, who is a tidewater and gets a salary of 200 rupees per mensem, to be enfranchised from the payment of $\frac{1}{2}$ of his salary to the assignee, on the plea that he has a wife and a large family to support, and is obliged to keep up an establishment at home for the support of this family, and another on board the vessels on which he is employed, the Captains being prohibited by the Government regulations from maintaining the tidewaters on board the ships. The applicant said that he expected his salary to be increased and then he would be happy to pay the deduction awarded by the Court. In conclusion Mr. Leith said, that there was no opposition on the part of the assignee to the insolvent's requests.

The Judge said, that before he could pass any order on this application, he must have the particulars of the additional establishment, which the insolvent is obliged to entertain, filed in Court. In the interim, if the applicant apprehended that the assignee would press him for the payment of this amount, he may make another application to this Court to suspend the Court's order on this subject pending this application of the Insolvent, but this would entail additional costs, and if the applicant considered the assignee not to be hostile to him and favorably inclined, he can risk his not making the first application.

Mr. Leith replied, that he believed the assignee to be favorably inclined and declined making a special fresh application.

Mr. Strettell made application for the final discharge of Bearchund Mody, who had obtained the benefit of the insolvent act some years ago. He put in files of papers to show that the notice of this application had been for 6 months advertised in all the Calcutta papers, and notices served on all the creditors except two, who are resident at Benares; and their deputies, who are residing at the Burra Bazar here, have had notices served on them, of this application, and none of them have come forward to oppose the insolvent's final discharge. He said that there are no creditors in foreign countries, and therefore no notice of this application had been advertised in English papers in Europe.

The Judge postponed the decision on this application till next court day.

A dividend of 33 Co's. rs. 5 as. 4 pie per 100 Sa. Rs., was declared to be payable by the assignee on the private estate of G. Ballard, Esq., and of 7 Co's rs. per 100 Sa. Rs. in the private estate of J. A. Ayton, Esq.

Mr. Perry, the Police constable, was to be sworn in the messenger to this court to-day for the services of the notices of this court.—Hurkaru Sept. 11.

ALLIPORE COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

ALLIPORE, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1837.

COSIPORE GHAT CASE.

Mr. R. Dias, constituted agent for Rustonjee Cowasjee, appeared this day and filed a petition of appeal against the officiating magistrate's decision on Beeraswur Bhattacharjee's complaint against his, Mr. Dias's client, to the following effect.

That in the early part of August last, one Beeraswur Bhattacharjee, an inhabitant of Cosipore, lodged a complaint against Mr. Dias's client, alleging that several persons in the employ of Baboo Rustonjee had wantonly and feloniously assaulted and plundered certain women, and that Rustonjee had fenced off a ghat, thereby preventing certain inhabitants of Cosipore from the enjoyment of certain customs. That on the above complaint, the officiating magistrate ordered one Archibald Deyson, a Sergeant of Police, jointly with a certain darogah, to hold an enquiry on the spot, and to report as to the truth, or falsehood of the charges preferred against Mr. Dias's client and servants:

That Archibald Deyson is a man unpossessed of either a knowledge of the land, or of rights either by law or custom, and that the appointment grieved Mr. Dias's client much, as the appointment was in no way called for, there being no apprehension whatever of a breach of the peace; and that though Mr. Dias's client was possessed of vast landed property in the 24-Pargunnahs, he had never been known to be guilty of either oppression or violence to the poor, or been called upon to answer any charges whether of those, or any other criminal nature, but that on the contrary, Mr. Dias's client had done much to serve the poor as well as all other classes of persons. And that the appointment was also objectionable, it having been made barely on the assertion of Beeraswur Bhattacharjee, and without a reference to Mr. Dias's client.

That Mr. Dias's client was credibly informed and believed his information to be true, that he, Archibald Deyson, contrary to the Magistrate's orders, went first to the house of one Ram Rutten Rai, an inhabitant also of Cosipore, and the employer of Beeraswur Bhattacharjee, and after receiving certain instructions from Ram Rutten Rai, proceeded to the alleged ghat with eighteen or nineteen natives of low condition, and in no way respectable or worthy of belief, and retainers and dependents of Ram Rutten Rai; and that Deyson, without giving Mr. Dias's client any notice held his enquiry with the people described, and made his report and that the officiating Magistrate on that report passed summary order on Deyson and the darogah to open the alleged ghat. That on the 17th of August last Mr. Dias prayed by petition against the said order, that the Magistrate should re-hear the case and the evidence of good and credible men, but that the Magistrate refused to do so.

That Mr. Dias's client recently purchased a spot of alluvial land on the banks of the river at Cosipore, and that a part of the land so purchased is situated against a spot of land belonging to Ram Rutten Rai. That Ram Rutten made repeated offers to Mr. Dias's client to purchase the spot from him, but as Mr. Dias's client had purchased the land merely to prevent it being a nuisance, he refused to sell it to Ram Rutten, and had it fenced off to prevent its continuing as a convenience for Beeraswur's occasional visitors, and that Rustonjee had, at great pecuniary expense and trouble, had the spot cleared out, it having been a receptacle for filth at the turn of the tides.

In consequence of the cleanliness of the spot, Ram Rutten Rai found that Mr. Dias's client had much enhanced the value of his estate at Cosipore, and that he, Ram Rutten, wickedly and maliciously, through the instrumentality of his dependent Beeraswur Bhattacharjee, instituted the abovementioned false charge against his, Mr. Dias's, client.

That Mr. Dias therefore prayed that the Commissioner would order the officiating magistrate to summon good and respectable ryots from the adjoining estates of the four principal Zemindars of Cosipore, and that he should take their examinations on oath, as to the complaint of Beeraswur Bhattacharjee, and as to alleged ghat being in no way adapted to the purposes of either ablutions, or pojahs; or that the Commissioner should hold the enquiry and pass such orders as he may deem fit.

Mr. Pigou entirely disapproved of the officiating Magistrate's order, and therefore reversed it, thereby ridding Rustonjee of a great nuisance.—Hurkaru, Sept. 11.

NIZAMUT ADAWLUT.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1837.

Before J. R. Hutchinson, Esq.

KOMUL SAIVAN, versus MOONDOORODON, WASHERMAN.
CHARGE MURDER.

Referred to the Nizamut Adawlut by the Session Judge of Zillah 24-Pargunnahs. The prisoner was committed by the Magistrate of Zillah 24-Pargunnahs, charged with having murdered his master, Kartick, washerman, and robbed his house at Chitpoor, during the month of June last.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty. The particulars of this case are these.

The prosecutrix is the mother of Kartick, and resided with her son at Chitpoor. The prisoner had been employed as their assistant about six weeks previous to the commission of the crime laid to his charge. On Saturday the 24th of June last, the prosecutrix proceeded from Chitpoor to Chandernagore, with the intention of arranging the preliminaries preparatory to the marriage of her son, and she returned to Chitpoor on the 27th of that month. When she arrived opposite to her house she found the entrance door shut, and on demanding entrance, nobody responded to her call. This induced her to make enquiries regarding her son and the prisoner, from neighbours, who related the circumstances to her, which are hereafter detailed in evidence. This information not being satisfactory, the prisoner went back and opened the door of the dwelling, which she found to be empty; this alarmed her, and on searching the house, she discovered a jackall pulling out a corpse from the floor of the cookroom. This incident excited her fears, and she proceeded to the thanah, and gave the information of these facts to the Police authorities there. Some of them accompanied her to her house and had the dead body dug up, which, on inspection, was identified to be the corpse of Kartick. The prosecutrix immediately suspected the prisoner to be concerned in the perpetration of this homicide, and had him arrested on the 30th June last, at his house in the village of Chagdah, where, on searching the house, a smoothing iron, which had belonged to the deceased, and several bundles of clothes in a state of defecation, were discovered. These clothes were afterwards, at Chitpoor, recognized by several persons to have been their wearing apparel, which they had given to the deceased to wash for them. It was further proved in evidence, that the prisoner, during the absence of the prosecutrix from Chitpoor, had been seen by many residents of that village, carrying away clothes from the house of the prosecutrix, and when questioned some of them by, about Kartick not having returned them their clothes, he replied, that Kartick had been detained by Baboo Ladlymohon Tagore, within his house and as soon as he would be released, he would give them their clothes. This closed the evidence against him, in addition to which was the prisoner's confession, made at the time he was apprehended. In it he admitted that he was present when this murder was committed, his account of its perpetration is thus:

Hari, washerman, and Hari, bagdi, residents of Chagdah, had often urged the prisoner to rob his master. Whilst the prosecutrix was at Glandernagore, these two individuals, accompanied by Teencourie, came one evening to Kartick's house, and informed him that they had been discharged by their employers and were proceeding to their homes, and they requested Kartick to permit them to sleep that night within his house. This request was granted by Kartick, and these three persons slept in a verandah where the deceased used to iron the clothes, and there was a boiler there for steaming them. The prisoner and Kartick slept in an inner apartment. Late at night the prisoner got up and smoked, and then laid down again to sleep. Whilst thus lying, he perceived these three visitors enter the room where he and Kartick slept, and Hari, bagdi, seized Kartick by the throat and attempted to strangle him. Kartick then groined and emitted a sound, gu, gu, and the blood gushed out of his mouth. The other two accomplices then suffocated him with sheets and pillows, and crammed clothes into his mouth to stifle his cries. They then wrapped the corpse in a sheet and carpet, got a spade and dug a hole on the ground, raked for laying out the clothes and buried the body in that hole and covered it.

The next morning they left the deceased's house accompanied by the prisoner and stopped at the gurnel of Mudden Mohon Thakoor, where the prisoner brought the clothes to them. They then advised the prisoner to proceed with the clothes in Toquee manjy's boat to Chagdah, and that they would go there by land and meet him. They added that as the prisoner was a washerman by profession he could do this without being suspected. The prisoner adopted this advice and he further borrowed 3 rupees on the pledge of some of these clothes, from Toquee manjy, with which money he redeemed a silver chain, which he had pledged with Gooroochurn mistree. Neamat, the chokeydar of this village, and a songstress, who had resided with a person named Bhyroo, and had been turned out from thence by the advice of the deceased, had likewise instigated the prisoner to do this deed. Whatever might have transpired between this songstress and Neamat, the prisoner does not know. He added that on the night of the murder the chokeydar of the division, when the crime was committed, passed by the prosecutrix's house 5 or 7 times, but he made no noise; but when Hari Bagdi had seized the deceased by the throat and caused him to groan, the chokeydar then shouted; subsequently he came and saw the corpse laid in the hole, but said nothing. A few days previous there was a fight amongst the chokeydars, but the songstress was not acquainted with it,

Before the Magistrate, the prisoner adhered to these confessions, and added, that the chokeydar held back the prisoner from assisting the deceased whilst the murder was committed, and Bhyroo, the songstress, and Toquee manjy, were all present and aided in the commission of the murder, which was committed in revenge for an intrigue, which the deceased had with the songstress's sister Mohonee.

This ended the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner denied all knowledge and participation in the murder before the Session Judge.

Moulvy Fozila Rubbee, the Mahomedan Law Officer of the Session Court, in his futwah, declared the prisoner to be guilty of the crime laid to his charge on the strong circumstantial evidence given in this case, and by the prisoner's own recorded confessions, and declared him liable to discretionary punishment by akhoobut.

The Sessions Judge coincided with this futwah so far as to consider the prisoner guilty of having been an accessory to the commission of this murder, but he did not think it probable that the prisoner, who is a very young man, about 18 years of age and of a slight frame of body, could commit the crime without the assistance of one or more persons, as the deceased was a hale, healthy man and about 30 years old. But the Judge added that he was sorry to find that there were no extenuating circumstances connected with this case to induce him to recommend the prisoner to the mercy of the Nizamut Court, on the contrary he considered that the prisoner should be punished capitally to deter others from the perpetration of similar heinous crimes.

When the body was disinterred it was in too putrid a state to hold an investigation on it. It was then forwarded to the General Hospital, where it was likewise found to be in too decomposed a state to enable the medical practitioners there to examine the injuries that might have been received, and ascertain the cause of the demise of Kartick.

The case was taken up on the 22d of September 1837, by the Judges of the Nizamut, the Mahomedan law officers of which Court barred kisas, and Mr. J. R. Hutchinson, the Officiating Judge, coincided in this decision and sentenced the prisoner to imprisonment for life in the Alipoor Jail.

No. 68.

To the Commissioner of Revenue for the division of—

Sir,—A difference of practice having been found to exist, notwithstanding previous orders on the subject, as to the mode of effecting sales

* Under Section, 33, of estates under butwarra, I am Regulation XIX. of 1814, desired by the Sudder Board of Revenue to request, that you will instruct your subordinates, that the whole estate with its entire jumma, must be advertised in one lot, whether all the sharers be in balance, or only a portion of them; but should any of the sharers have paid, or previous to the sale pay up, his or their proportion of the balance due, (advertence being had to the provision of Clause 2, Section 34, Regulation XIX, of 1814) his or their share or shares must be exempted from sale by proclamation at the time, and place of sale, and by written order in the lotbundee and sale proceedings, and only the share or shares still in balance, sold in one lot without specification of separate jumma, and the purchasers of the share or shares sold, will succeed to the exact place, interests, and right of the late sharer or sharers in default, the entire estate remaining in balance as before the sale.

14th August.

The commissioner of Bauleah having requested under date the 23rd ultimo, the opinion of the Board "as to who is the authority to decide suits for resumption of land, held under grants for less than 100 beegahs situated in permanently assessed estates, of which Government has become the zemindar by purchase," the Board caused a reference to be made on the subject to Government, in which it was stated as follows :

"Government recently determined, that cases coming under Section 30, Regulation II., of 1819, should be decided by the ordinary revenue authorities. The cases referred to are those in which the holder of a permanently settled estate, claims to resume rent free tenures of less than 100 beegahs, which are included within the limits of his estate, and it follows from this construction of the law, that when Government as proprietor of a permanently settled estate asserts a similar claim, the right should in like manner be determined by the ordinary collectors, and not by the special deputy collector.

"It is possible, however, that the Government may think fit, that some change should be made in the law in this respect in the forthcoming comprehensive enactment on the subject of rent free tenures, and the Board have therefore directed me to call the attention of Government to the case."

The following dated 1st instant, is the reply :

"I am directed by the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, with its enclosure, and to inform you in reply, that in all cases of the nature alluded to by you, the Government is to be dealt with, as any other zemindar; and suits under Section 30, Regulation II. of 1819, should be decided by the collector of revenue.

No. 70.

To the Commissioner of Revenue for the Division of—

Sir,—The Sudder Board of Revenue have desired me to issue the following instructions for the guidance of special deputy collectors as there is reason to believe that uniformity of practice does not prevail on the points adverted to.

2d. On declaring any lands liable to assessment, the special deputy collector will himself cause the notice, prescribed by the orders of government, dated the 22d, February 1831 to be served on the parties in possession intimating to them that the lands will be assessed at the end of six months, unless it should intermediately be ordered otherwise by the special commissioner.

3rd. The special deputy collector will at the same time transmit a copy of his decree to the commissioner of the division, in order that he may issue the necessary orders to the proper officer for the assessment of the lands and the collection of the government dues at the end of six months from the date of the decree, provided the special commissioner shall not see fit to stay the assessment on the party in possession furnishing security.

4th The Board further direct me to request that you will call the particular attention of the special deputy collectors to the rule prescribed by section 16, Regulation II., 1819, relative to the identification of documents filed in the support of rent free claims.

No. 71.

To the Commissioner of Revenue for the Division of—

Sir,—I am directed by the Sudder Board of Revenue to communicate the following explanation, which is considered necessary in regard to the clauses underlined of the passage quoted in the margin* from their circular instructions of the 2d January last, No. 1, paragraph 8.

2d. The concluding clause was introduced into those circular instructions, without due advertence to the connection in which it stands to the measurement of lands claimed as rent free.

3rd. The measurement, whether of lands claimed to be held free of assessment, or of the estates upon which they abut, when necessary to the just determination of the laktiraj claim, is not intended to be prohibited. Such a proceeding, in order to assert the rights of the state to lands claimed to be held free of assessment, is not

at variance with any of the rights or privileges conferred on the zemindar by the perpetual settlement; nor can it be seriously objectionable to any proprietor of honest intentions. The disinclination of any zemindar whose object is to screen the fraudulent conduct of a neighbour or his own, is not worthy of consideration.

4th. It is the duty, and should be the purpose of those parties to whom a fixed tenure is guaranteed by the permanent settlement, to further every endeavor to assert the just claims of the government, from which they derive their possession and their security, and to bring under contribution to the service of the state those lands which have hitherto obtained an authorized exemption, under illegal or invalid titles. Nor should they less readily give their aid, and submit, as the state requires it, to a temporary inconvenience as the consequence of a measurement may be the permanent recognition of duly registered, and valid titles, which circumstances may, for a time, lead the officers of government entrusted with the powers of resumption, to question.

5th. The above remarks refer entirely to the course of proceeding to be adopted in regard to lands claimed to be held free of assessment. Under the orders of government dated the 2d May last, No. 586, circulated by the Board on the 16th of May, the special deputy collectors were directed to defer investigations regarding alleged tauseer lands until they shall have disposed of all the lakhiraj cases on their respective files, except in special cases to be previously reported for the sanction of the Board.

CIRCULARS.

No. 66.—This circular is a continuation of the Board's Circular dated the 28th October 1836. It is a communication from Mr. Mangles, promulgated by Mr. Secretary Trevelyan to all the Revenue Commissioners, informing them that the orders of the Right Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal, dated the 20th September 1836, relate exclusively to cases coming under the cognizance of the officers employed in investigating the titles of lands claimed to be held free of assessment, in which tenures may appear to have been appropriated to purposes connected with education, and that his Lordship wishes the Board to consider the purport of those orders to be extended to all cases whether the grant be upheld or resumed, in which the professed object of the alienation from the public Revenue was to provide means for purposes of general utility, or benevolence of whatever description.

SPECIAL DEPUTY COLLECTORS.

No. 67.—It is a correspondence between Government and the Board in which His Lordship concurs with the Board, which appears from Mr. Walter's second minute of the 13th instant to be unanimous on the subject, that it is not expedient that they should promulgate for the guidance of the special Deputy Collectors, in their capacity of public prosecutors, an authoritative digest and construction of the Resumption Laws:—the more so, because these officers are in no wise subject to the direction or control of the Board in the exercise of their judicial functions.

At the same time His Lordship is of opinion that the Board might not only unobjectionably, but with great advantage, lay down for the instruction of the special Deputy Collectors, general rules and principles of procedure, calculated to ensure uniformity of practice, and all possible consideration for the parties contesting the claims of Government consistent with the assertion of the unquestionable rights of the state; as well as to obviate any misconceptions, if such are likely to obtain in regard either to the view of Government, or to the rights guaranteed to the zemindars by the Government.

The Governor has already expressed his sentiments with respect to the obligation of the Board to afford the benefit of their extensive information and experience to the officers employed in the enforcement of the resumption laws, with regard to the towseer and alluvion cases in particular, especially the former, and he thinks it highly desirable that the special Deputy Collectors should be encouraged to seek the Counsel of the Board upon all points of doubt and difficulty; such Counsel, indeed, the Board in their capacity of superintendents of legal affairs, are bound to render to all officers conducting suits in which the public interests are involved.

The Board have agreed to abide by the instructions of Government as above stated, and the Government in reply state, that the intentions of the Board in regard to furnishing instructions to the Commissioners and Special Deputy Collectors on all matters of practice and procedure connected with the resumption operations in progress, and in their capacity of superintendents and remembrancers of legal affairs, their opinions to the latter officers, on any points of legal difficulty which may be referred to them, are entirely satisfactory to his Lordship.

No. 68.—Is on a difference of practice having been found to exist notwithstanding previous orders on the subject as to the mode of effecting rules of estates* under Butwara. Mr. Secretary Trevelyan, under the orders of the Board, has requested all the Commissioners of Revenue to instruct their subordinates that the whole estate with its entire Jumma must be advertized in one lot, whether all the shares be in balance or only a portion of them; but should any of the share's have pail, or previous to the sale pay up, his or their proportion of the balance due, (advantage being had to the provisions of clause 11. section 34. Regulation XIX. of 1814), his or their share or shares must be exempted from sale by proclamation at the time and place of sale, and by written order in the lothundee and sale proceedings, and only the share or shares, still in balance, sold in one lot without specification of separate Jumma and the purchaser of the share, or shares sold, will succeed to the exact place, interests, and rights of the late share or shares in default, the entire estate remaining ijmaltee as before the sale.

No. 69.—Is a correspondence between the Board and Government regarding a letter from the Commissioner of Bauleah, requesting the opinion of the Board, as to who is the authority to decide suits for Resumption of lands held under grants for less than 100 boegahs, situated in permanently assessed estates, of which Government has become the zemindar by purchase.

The Board observed that the Government recently determined, that cases coming under Section 30, Regulation II., of 1819, should be decided by the ordinary Revenue authorities. The cases referred to, are those in which the holder of a permanently settled estate claims to resume rent free tenures of less than 100 boegahs which are included within the limits of his estate, and it follows from this construction of the law that when Government as proprietor of a permanently settled estate asserts a similar claim, the right should in like manner be determined by the ordinary collector and not by the Special Deputy Collector. The Board went on to observe that it was possible, however, that the Government may think fit that some change should be made in the law in this respect, in the forthcoming comprehensive enactment on the subject of rent free tenures, and the Board therefore called the attention of Government to the case.

The Government have informed the Board through Mr. Officiating Deputy Secretary T. C. Scott, that in all cases of the nature alluded to by the Board, the Government is to be dealt with as any other zemindar, and suits under Section 30, Regulation II., of 1819, should be decided by the Collector of Revenue.—Hurkaru, September 13.

Sir,—I am directed to inform you, that the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal, has been pleased to determine that ten annas per beegah of land in cultivation be fixed, as the basis on which the remuneration of the Government pleaders in the Special Commissioner's Courts, shall in future be calculated in conformity with the rule prescribed by Government Orders, dated the 21st August, 1828.

2d. You will be pleased to instruct the Collectors in your division to pay immediate attention to the requisitions of the special commissioners for payment of fees granted under these orders.

3rd. The Board further desire, that any arrears which may be still due to these pleaders, notwithstanding their circular orders issued on the 28th March and 2nd of May last, directing their immediate payment, be at once calculated at the above rate, and the amount remitted to the special commissioners for delivery to the pleaders to whom it is due.

CIRCULARS.

UNIFORMITY IN CERTAIN POINTS OF PRACTICE.

No. 70. Mr. Secretary Trevelyan, at the desire of the Board, has issued this circular among the Revenue Commissioners for the guidance of special Deputy Collectors, as there is reason to believe that uniformity of practice does not prevail on the points adverted to.

On declaring any lands liable to assessment, the special Deputy Collector will himself cause the notice prescribed by the orders of Government, dated the 22d February 1831, to be served on the parties in possession, intimating to them that the lands will be assessed at the end of six months unless it should immediately be ordered otherwise by the special Commissioner.

The special Deputy Collector will at the same time transmit a copy of his decree to the Commissioner of the division in order that he may issue the necessary orders to the proper officer for the assessment of the lands and the collection of the Government dues at the end of six months from the date of the decree, provided the special Commissioner shall not see fit to stay the assessment on the party in possession furnishing security.

The Board have further directed, that the Commissioners will call the particular attention of the special Deputy Collectors to the rule prescribed by Section 16 Reg. II. 1819, relative to the identification of documents filed in support of rent free claims.

FRAUDS IN THE MEASUREMENT OF RENT FREE LANDS.

No. 71. This circular is an explanation which is considered necessary to the clauses underlined* from the circular instructions of the 2d January last No. 1. The concluding clause was introduced into those circular instructions without due advertence to the connection it stands to the measurement of land claimed as rent free.

The measurement whether of lands claimed to be held free of assessment of the estates upon which they abut, when necessary to the just determination of the lakhiraj claim is not intended to be prohibited. Such a proceeding in order to assert the rights of the state to lands claimed to be held free of assessment, is not at variance with any of the rights or privileges conferred on the zemindar by the perpetual settlement; nor can it be seriously objectionable to any proprietor of honest intentions. The disinclination of any zemindar whose object is to screen the fraudulent conduct of a neighbour, or his own, is not worthy of consideration.

It is the duty, and should be the purpose, of those parties to whom a fixed tenure is guaranteed by the permanent settlement, to further every endeavour to assert the first claims of the Government from which they derive their possession and their security, and to bring under contribution to the service of the state those lands which have hitherto obtained an authorised exemption under illegal or invalid titles. Nor should they less readily give their aid, and submit, as the state requires, to a temporary inconvenience as the consequence of a measurement may be permanent recognition of duly registered and valid titles, which circumstances may, for a time, lead the officers of Government entrusted with the powers of resumption, to question.

Mr. Trevelyan concludes by observing, that the above remarks refer entirely to the course of proceeding to be adopted in regard to lands claimed to be held free of assessment, under the orders of Government, dated the 2d May last, No. 586, circulated by the Board on the 16th May, the special Deputy Collectors were directed to defer investigations regarding alleged towfeer lands until they shall have disposed of all the lakhiraj cases on their respective files, excepting special cases to be previously reported for the sanction of the Board.

REMUNERATION OF GOVERNMENT PLEADERS.

No. 72.—This circular informs the Commissioners that the Right Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal has determined that ten annas per beegah of land in cultivation be fixed as the basis on which the remuneration of the Government pleaders in the Special Commissioner's Courts shall in future be calculated, in conformity with the rule prescribed by Government orders dated the 21st August 1828.

The Commissioners have been desired to instruct the Collectors in their respective divisions to pay immediate attention to the requisitions of the Special Commissioners for payment of fees granted under those orders.

* This circular never having been published, we give the particular part of the instructions alluded to below.—Reporter.

"On this account you are requested especially to place the Deputy Collectors on their guard against the frauds which will assuredly be attempted, and in many instances probably with success if they do not ascertain the existence and extent of lands claimed as rent free, previously to investigating the validity of the tenure. At the early stages of the proceeding, the parties in possession will be generally ready to point out their lands and a definition of boundaries, and in cases where they are defective, actual measurement should be resorted to, whenever such a measure can be adapted without infringement of any of the rights and privileges conferred on the zemindars or proprietors of permanently assessed Estates by the permanent settlement and not otherwise.

The Board further desire that any arrears which may be still due to these pleaders, notwithstanding their circular orders, issued on the 28th March and 2d May last, directing their immediate payment, be at once calculated at the above rate, and the amount remitted to the Special Commissioners for delivery to the pleaders to whom it is due.

SUMMARY SUITS UNDER SECTION XVIII. REGULATION VIII. 1819.

No. 73.—Mr. Commissioner Henry Ricketts, of Cuttack, on the 26th of May last, addressed the Board stating, that on the 17th August, 1837, the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut ruled that a zemindar is not at liberty under Section XVIII. Regulation VIII. 1829, to attach the tenure of an intermediate holder i. e. oust him, without having previously instituted a summary suit against him under Section XV. Regulation VII. of 1799. "The declaration * that it is illegal to such except under stated circumstances, necessarily implies a remedy in case of the contravention of such rule," an intermediate holder therefore, who may be disturbed in possession, on application to the Judge, may obtain an order for restoration until the process prescribed shall have been observed.

On the 7th March 1828, the Court ruled that a resident cultivator could not be disturbed till an arrear had been adjudged to be due, and if ousted in contravention of that rule, should be restored to possession by the Judge on Summary application.

On the 15th November 1833, it was ruled by the Court that all such cases of illegal ejectment, not attended with violence so as to bring the case within the cognizance of the magistrate, should be preferred to the Collector under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1831.

Mr Ricketts says, that under these constructions, Collectors are bound to receive all complaints of illegal ejectment brought forward by all classes of intermediate holders and ryots, but such is not the general practice, neither is it known that such complaints can be admitted by a Collector.

Mr Ricketts therefore proposed, with the Board's permission, to direct the permission of the Collectors in his division to the existing Laws as construed by the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and instructing them to open a register of these cases, and keep them separate from suits for arrears instituted under Regulation VIII of 1831. Mr Ricketts also requested to be informed, whether appeals from the decisions of Collectors in such cases should be received.

The Board have requested Mr Ricketts to direct the attention of his subordinates to the existing laws as construed by the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in the manner proposed by him, instructing them to open a Register of the cases preferred under section XVIII Regulation VIII of 1819 and to keep them separate from suits instituted under Regulation VIII of 1831.

Mr Secretary Travelyan concludes by saying, that according to the spirit of the Court's construction, cases of the above nature are appealable to the Commissioner under the limitations prescribed for appeals against summary decisions in Section IV Regulation VIII 1831.

The Board have instructed all the other Revenue Commissioners accordingly.

PRACTICE OF HOLDING ESTATES UNDER FICTITIOUS NAMES

No. 74: By this circular the Board call on all the Revenue Commissioners to notice a letter from the Officiating Secretary to the Indian Law Commission, regarding the practice of holding Estates under fictitious names, and that the Commissioners will call upon each of the Collectors subordinate to them to furnish an immediate answer, in as few words as possible, on each of the points stated at the conclusion of that letter; and that after the commissioners receive replies, they will submit those replies to the Board with their sentiments, and any additional information which it may be in their power to furnish.*

CONSULTATION, —FRIDAY, AUGUST 22, 1837.

DELINQUENCIES OF THE TIPPERAH COLLECTOR'S SHERISHTADAR.

Mr. Commissioner Dampier, of Chittagong, on the 29th of July last, submitted copies of certain correspondence that had transpired between him and Mr. acting collector W. J. H. Money, of Tipperah, relative to certain instances of misconduct and corruption on the part of Keshenchunder Roy, Sherishtadar.

Mr. Dampier says that it appears from Mr. Money's report relative to the postponement of the one anna share of Pergunnah Buldakhal, that the Sherishtadar stated officially to him that the arrears had been paid up (when such was not the case) and consequently the sale was not proceeded with. Mr. Dampier goes on to say, that he does not consider Mr. Money as free from blame in taking the assertion of the Sherishtadar for granted, without having adopted every measure, either then, or at the close of the day, to see if the arrears had really been paid up. Mr. Dampier considers that Mr. Money was bound to have ascertained either by a reference to the chulluan, or the treasure's books at the time of the payment, or the non payment of so large a sum into his treasury, and that his omission to do so was a neglect of his duty. This, however, does not free the Sherishtadar from having wilfully deceived his superior officer by asserting a payment to have been made; and from the evidence in this case, and that taken with regard to the two shares of Hoomnabad, but Mr. Dampier has no doubt but that a system of corruption has, for a considerable period, been in use amongst the Tehsee omiah and the Sheristadar of the Tipperah collectorship.

There is no direct proof of corruption in the case of Buldakhal, but, taking all the cases stated by the Tehsee Mohurrirs, and the evidence produced with regard to the Hoomnabad proprietors, there can be no doubt, but that the Sherishtadar, in this instance deceived Mr. Money wilfully, and that he did so for the consideration of 10 per cent. on the arrears, which it is stated was the amount levied by him from all defaulters, the sales of whose properties he, by direct, or indirect means, procured to be postponed. Mr. Dampier cannot consider that he was, as stated by himself, misinformed by the Tehsee Mohurrirs. His influence (observes Mr. Dampier) in the office is far too extensive for them to attempt such a thing, if his talent and aptitude for business did not render a deceit of that kind hopeless.

Besides, says Mr. Dampier, the Sherishtadar must have discovered the deception, which, as he would have the authorities believe, was practised on him by the Mohurrirs on the ensuing day, and if he had acted in this case with uprightness, he would have brought the conduct of the omiah to the notice of the acting Collector, and not allowed such mal-practices to have remained concealed. Mr. Dampier conceived the Sherishtadar's conduct in this instance to render him totally undeserving of future trust, and therefore directed his immediate dismissal.

* For the letter of the Indian Law Commission referred to in the above circular, see the Hurkar of the 13th instant, in which we have given a complete abstract of it, in a report of proceedings held by the Zillah Judge of Allipore on the 20th August last. —Reporter.

Mr. Dampier availed himself of the opportunity of stating to the Board that he is generally and extremely well satisfied with Mr. Money's official conduct, and that he is convinced the laxity which he has noticed, is not at all customary with him, but was in this instance, the result of a press of business, and of the hurry which attends sales of numerous estates.

Mr. Dampier continues, that in the cases respecting the two shares of Hoomnabad, the acts of corruption are clearly and positively sworn to by the agents for the zemindars, who are extremely respectable persons in the district, and who state with precision why and when the demands were made, the manner in which the sums were made up, and the places in which they were paid. It is absolutely necessary, says Mr. Dampier, that these cases should be prosecuted criminally, and although it is extremely difficult to prove corruption, yet Mr. Dampier trusts, that if money procures (as Mr. Dampier had directed) the evidence of the sharers of Hoomnabad, there will be sufficient to obtain the conviction of the Sherishtadar.

Mr. Dampier regretted much that Mr. Money had been so incautious as to hold out any hopes of pardon to the Mohurris Muddun Mohun Chukerbuttee and Greet Dhor Doss. Their statement of the influence exercised by the Sherishtadar in the office, and the means he adopted to secure himself in his corrupt practices, is (says Mr. Dampier) tolerably correct, but of course the credibility of their evidence will be much affected by the fact that it was elicited by a promise of pardon, still (observes Mr. Dampier) the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge (if the case goes to his Court) may take their evidence into consideration particularly, supported as it is, by direct evidence given by other parties.

From several examinations which have been sent to Mr. Dampier by Mr. Allen, the Magistrate, taken before him in his enquiry relative to the conduct of Kissenchunder in Buldakhal, in which acts of corruption were sworn to, other than those regarding that Pergunnah, and from the evidence submitted to Mr. Dampier by Mr. Money, Mr. Dampier is obliged to state his conviction, that up to Mr. Money's arrival in the district the Sherishtadar was considered to hold all the power and authority of the collectorate in his hands, and that the European officer was looked upon as nothing; the consequences are beginning to be apparent in the Hoomnabad cases on which Mr. Money has now reported, and will be more fully developed when the result of Mr. Allen's enquiries in Buldakhal are submitted to the Board. That officer has not been able yet to complete those enquiries, for as he has proceeded in the investigation, it has become a question, not from whom did Kissenchunder extort money? but from whom did he not extort money? and Mr. Dampier has been compelled to request Mr. Allen to confine his enquiries to some of the most important cases, and report on them, for they were extending themselves, as evidence was taken, beyond all limit.

Mr. Dampier regretted bringing to the notice of the Board such disreputable conduct on the part of an officer noble and intelligent as Kissenchunder Roy. Mr. Dampier says that he knows him to be possessed of more talent, aptitude for business and information than the majority of our native public servants. Mr. Dampier knows that Kissenchunder has acquired a thorough knowledge of Revenue duties, and all the details of a Collector's office, and he might under proper control, have been a most valuable and efficient public servant, and eventually have risen to the superior offices now held by natives of this country. By the inefficiency, facility of disposition and want of energy in those placed over him, he has had in his hands all the duties and the authority of the Collectorate without any responsibility. Of course applications to him for favors accompanied by douceurs, soon became common, and Kissenchunder was unable to resist the temptation which offered him the means of obtaining with celerity considerable wealth; but the European Officers are almost as much to be blamed as Kissenchunder; (says Mr. Dampier) for, it is owing to their neglect, or inefficient discharge of business and dependence on him, that the state of affairs in the Collectorate has reached to such a state.

Mr. Secretary Trevelyan, under the direction of the Board, has informed Mr. Dampier that the Board entirely approve of his having dismissed Kissenchunder Roy and instituted a criminal prosecution against him. The Board have desired the Commissioner to report the result of the trial in order that, should he be convicted, the Board may take into consideration the propriety of recommending to Government that he should be Gazetted as unworthy of serving Government in future.

The case against the Treasurer (Mr. Trevelyan observed) appears less strong than that against the Sherishtadar, but the Board hope that the circumstances which will be elicited in the trial, will shew that the Commissioner acted judiciously in ordering him to be included in the criminal prosecution.

The Board are of opinion that the whole of the Treasury Tomjee and Tehseel Mohurris, (who all must have been cognizant, if not participants in the mal-practices of the Sherishtadar) should be dismissed, not perhaps at once, which might be productive of inconvenience to the current duties of the office, but gradually as opportunity may offer for filling their places with properly qualified successors. The Commissioner has been directed to take measures accordingly, in communication with the Acting Collector.

In order to prevent the recurrence of similar fraud, the Board have requested the Commissioner to instruct the Collectors in his division not to content themselves with a verbal report of the payment of balances of estates about to be exposed to sale, but to require the Treasurer in every such case to submit a written report signed by himself and countersigned by the sherishtadar, and at the close of each day's sale, the report, or reports so submitted, should be embodied in one Roobocarry proceeding of the officer holding the sale, as constituting the grounds on which he acted in not selling the estates, in portions of estates the balances of which had been reported paid up. Mr. Trevelyan goes on observing, that it is not likely native officers would permit such complete evidence against themselves as such documents would afford, while if exacting these reports did not deter them it would convict them.

Should the Commissioner, however, be aware of a preferable course of proceeding, or entertain any objection to the above orders, he has been requested to submit at large the suggestions he may have to offer for the consideration of the Board, previously to carrying into effect the precautionary directions stated above. — Hurkuru, September 20.

PRESIDENCY, TUESDAY, THE 19TH SEPTEMBER, 1837.

Present, — James Pattie, Henry Walters, Charles Tucker, and F. J. Halliday, Esqrs., Members, and C. E. Trevelyan, Esq., additional Secretary.

This was an unusually heavy Board day, as so many as four and twenty cases were proposed for discussion, among which a report on a case of conspiracy among some of the clerks of the office was brought before the Board by the Secretary.

Mr. Trevelyan informed the Members, that he had appointed Mr. Rayson to the situation of examiner in the room of Mr. Fordyce.

Senior Member. What's become of Mr. Fordyce?

Secretary. He was dismissed by me.

Senior Member. By you! without the sanction of the Board?

Secretary. Yes, Sir, I dismissed him as Secretary of the office, in consequence of his having brought some charges against another subordinate officer, which he failed to prove, and in consequence of his having been of a very untractable disposition.

Senior Member. This is an innovation, that should not be allowed, and Mr. Trevelyan, it has always been the rule here, that no officers shall be dismissed or promoted without the sanction of the Members.

Secretary. The papers were first sent to you, Sir, and Mr. Fordyce's dismissal has the sanction of two Members.

Senior Member. I never saw the papers, and I say again that this is an innovation.

Secretary. I take the opportunity of bringing before the Board a question in a great measure connected with me as Secretary of this office. I believe I am held responsible for the conduct of my subordinates, and it is a general rule in the offices of the Secretaries to Government, that the Secretaries shall have the control and superintendence of the office and of the subordinates.

Mr. Tucker. I think it very proper, and will put a proposition to that effect before the Board.

Mr. Walter. I agree with you, Tucker.

Senior Member. The salary of a Secretary to Government is twice as much in amount as that of the Secretary of the Board, and I believe, Sir, that grades are distinguished by emolument.

Mr. Tucker. Do not let us be all day about this business; put a regular proposition before the Board, and let it be discussed.

Mr. Walter to the Senior Member. If you will only read the whole of the papers, you will agree with us, as to the right of the Secretary. I am entirely of Tucker's opinion.

Secretary. I spoke to Mangles particularly on this subject, and he said, that while he was Secretary of the Board, the Members never interfered with his office arrangements, and I believe it was not the case while Mr. Halliday was Secretary.

Senior Member. Mangles may have said so, Mr. Trevelyan, but you must be informed that he had that control only by sufferance.

Secretary. Mangles did not lead me to conclude any thing of the kind.

After a deal of conversation between the Senior Member and the Secretary and the other Members, during which Messrs. Walters and Tucker strenuously supported the Secretary, and after frequent suggestions from Mr. Tucker, that the Board had much to discuss besides the present frivolous matter, the Secretary, according to desire, read his report.

This report is extremely long, and as we have not much time to spare we will give as brief an abstract of the facts therein related, as possible.

In consequence of the Examiner's department being in heavy arrears, Mr. J. D. M. Sinais was entertained as an officiating assistant, and on the completion of his duties, Mr. Sinais gave a farewell tiffin to his office mates, among whom was Mr. Speed. At the end of the tiffin several popular toasts were given, after which the health of the Senior Member was drank with loud cheers, the healths of the other Members and the Secretary were next drank, and then those of the Registrar, uncovenanted assistants, &c., &c., and after thanks were unanimously expressed to Mr. Sinais with libations of the best Chateau Margeaux and Lafitte, the guests dispersed, each to his respective department. Mr. Speed had to pass Mr. Fordyce's room, in which he heard his name rather disrespectfully used by a Mr. Lowrie, a sectioner. Mr. Speed told Mr. Lowrie to desist, and concluded by informing him, that he was too low a blackguard for Mr. Speed to notice. Another young sectioner of the name of the Tucker then came in Mr. Speed's way and got a box on the ear for some bad habits Tucker had been previously displaying in the office.

At the "going home" time that day, Mr. Speed was surprised to find his conveyance stopped, and on looking out, was assailed by Mr. Lowrie, the latter challenging the former to single combat, not with lance, or spear, but with the more convenient instrument a pair of fists. Mr. Speed declined accepting of the gauntlet for such a conspicuous tournament, but informed Mr. Lowrie that he would bring his conduct to the notice of the Secretary. Mr. Lowrie vexed at the reply, set to, and assailed Mr. Speed in language commonly used by persons unaccustomed to small swords and cold lead.

On the following day the whole affair was brought up, and Mr. Lowrie was dismissed from office by the Secretary, that gentleman viewing the matter as one deserving of immediate punishment. Mr. Lowrie appealed to the Members, and pending the enquiry, a conspiracy was formed against Mr. G. H. Poole, the Registrar, by Mr. Lowrie's party.

On taking charge of the office, Mr. Halliday discovered great irregularities, and confusion in several of the departments, much to the obstruction of business, and very much against the interests of parties connected in suits under the superintendence of the Board. Mr. Halliday saw no other method of eradicating the evil, than by the introduction of a general reform, in which serious matter he was ably assisted by Mr. G. H. Poole, that officer having distinguished himself for industry and integrity above many of the subordinate hands. The consequence was, that the more efficient clerks were promoted, and persons of good information and education were introduced, and the less efficient were appointed to situations suited to their respective capabilities. These reforms gave rise to a spirit of discontent which gradually assumed a rather important feature, and though things had day by day mellowed, a fitting opportunity never offered for a display of the opposition to reform. Mr. Lowrie's case was availed of, and Mr. Fordyce laid nineteen charges against Mr. Poole, the whole of which clearly determined themselves into nothing more, nor less, than that Mr. Poole had been at the head of the reform, and that he should therefore be forthwith dismissed from office.

Mr. Fordyce's charges were, in the usual form, handed round to the members: by the senior member, the writer was held to have been under the influence of strong mental aberration while he wrote them, and by Messrs. Tucker and Walters and also by the senior member, it was thought necessary to investigate into the truth of several alleged acts of corruption alluded to by Mr. Fordyce against Mr. Poole, though Mr. Walters gave it as his opinion, that if Mr. Lowrie's case had not come up, the present charges would never have been preferred, and that it was clear that Mr. Poole's official merits were turned into foibles by Mr. Fordyce. The Secretary in accordance with the suggestions of the members, held a formal enquiry at the office, the result of which was as follows:

The respective parties having been solemnly warned by the Secretary, that the future prospects of both Messrs. Poole and Fordyce depended on the result of the examination that was about to take place, and having warned the witnesses of the important necessity of adhering strictly to the truth, the investigation proceeded.

Mr. Poole declined being furnished with a list of the witnesses against him, but trusted, that as several persons would be called of notoriously questionable veracity, their evidence would be cautiously received. Mr. Fordyce wished several immaterial witnesses to be first examined, but the Secretary objected to that course of proceeding, and directed Mr. Fordyce to name his evidence on the principal charges. Those of corruption fell to the ground at once, and appeared to have originated in nothing more than a desperate effort on the part of the opposition, as the parties alleged to have bribed Mr. Poole, broadly denied having had any pecuniary transactions with him; and two persons of the name of Martyr, father and son, the former a pensioner, and the latter a discharged sectioner, spoke of having heard certain things from certain persons, which persons altogether denied the assertions; and Mr. Tottie, also a clerk in the Board, said that he had heard some thing, and on being questioned as to his informant, answered with a "non mi ricordo." The general characters of the two Martyrs were then enquired into, and their referee, Mr. Taylor, gave them in plain terms a very bad character for veracity.

One charge was at the commencement of the enquiry withdrawn by Mr. Fordyce, that of Mr. Poole having received certain sums of money from suitors as fees for granting authenticated copies of papers, and with having divided his profits with a native writer. It is a rule of the office that copies of papers shall be paid for at the rate of one rupee eight annas for every 750 words, eight annas of which is allowed to the Registrar for his trouble in examining papers, and the rupee to the writer.

The charges having one and all of them been disproved, and it appearing that this was an attempt to destroy the reputation of a deserving officer, whose feelings were unnecessarily severely aggrieved, and Mr. Fordyce having always conducted himself with discontent and having shewn an unhappy and impracticable disposition. Besides which it also appeared that Mr. Fordyce was looked to by a certain class of the scribes as the Lawyer of the office, and all discharged clerks being always with him for advice; the Secretary gave it as his opinion that such a person should not be allowed to continue in the office, and therefore ordered his discharge.

Senior Member.—Are the examinations of witnesses attested?

Secretary.—No, they were taken by me in my own hand writing.

Mr. Walters.—We cannot wish for more. They are all written by the Secretary.

The Senior Member also took an objection to the fee for copies of papers, and after a little conversation it was proved by Mr. Halliday, that the fee had been settled after much consideration, and after a reference to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut by the Board.

The Senior Member then suggested that Mr. Fordyce should be called before the Board and informed of his discharge, and asked if he had any thing further to urge.

Mr. Tucker objected, and proposed, that as the Secretary is the organ of the Board, the sentiments of the Board should be communicated through the Secretary, and if the party wished to appeal, the Board would listen to it, if it came through the proper channel.

Mr. Walters supported Mr. Tucker, and we believe it was ultimately allowed that the Secretary of the Board will in future be the Secretary of it in every respect.

The Secretary then read his report on Lowrie's appeal. The Secretary said that he was at first disinclined to enter into the case it being one only of the usage of bad language. The Secretary knew that persons of that class were in the habit of expressing their opinions and sentiments in language that would be considered coarse among those in a higher grade of life?

Senior Member.—Yes, several of them are in the habit of beating their wives, over which conduct the Board have no control.

The Secretary went on to say that Mr. Speed had acknowledged having struck Tucker, and that Tucker, it was clear, did not feel himself aggrieved, or he would have immediately complained. However to put a stop to such conduct in the office, he had fined Mr. Speed a hundred rupees.

The Senior Member was of opinion that the Board could not take cognizance of Mr. Lowrie's conduct out of the office.

Mr. Tucker sided with the senior member entirely in regard to offences out of the office, committed after office hours. That in Lowrie's case Mr. Speed had been the aggressor, and if Mr. Lowrie had resented Mr. Speed's abuse of him in the office, the Board would have immediately blamed him for it; but that as Mr. Lowrie belonged to Mr. Fordyce's party, Mr. Tucker would not consent to his returning to the office, setting which aside, Mr. Lowrie was only an acting sectioner, and as his principal had returned, his services were no longer in requisition.

Mr. Walters agreeing with the other Members, it was ultimately settled, that not to affect Mr. Lowrie's future prospects, an order should be recorded, that as Mr. Lowrie's principal had returned, he is no longer required. This order cancels the order of dismissal.

The Secretary also said, during the proceedings, that Mr. Sinais had conducted the duties of acting examiner with efficiency, and very much to the satisfaction of the Secretary; that but for the tiffin, which had caused so much trouble and annoyance, Mr. Sinais would have been appointed in Mr. Fordyce's room.

No. 324.

To Secretary to the Government, Revenue Department.

Sir,—In continuation of my letter No. 281 of 6th instant, I am directed by the Sudder Board of Revenue to submit for the consideration and orders of the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal the accompanying letter and its enclosures from the commissioner of Jessore, relative to the accounts of the collectorate of the 24-pergunnahs.

2. His Lordship is already aware that serious frauds have been committed by the native officers of the collectorate, and the Board regret to say that the papers now submitted will shew further malversations, and that there is a strong reason to apprehend their malpractices have been committed to a much greater extent than was at first supposed and has yet been discovered.

3. It will be observed that the collector proposes in the 7th par. of his letter, to have the accounts examined from the year 1820 to 26 inclusive, and this length of time the Board are of opinion will be sufficient for the present.

4. With reference to the next proposition, the employment of an extra native establishment, the Board are decidedly of opinion that such aid will be indispensable.

5. The chief point for his Lordship's consideration, is the mode in which, and the officers by whom the enquiry shall be conducted. All the members of the Board are of opinion that a strict investigation should take place, but as they differ in opinion as to the mode of effecting it, I am desired to submit the substance of their minutes for His Lordship's consideration.

6. The senior member is of opinion that the employment of Ramdhun Ghose, (as proposed in the 2d para. of Mr. Pigou's letter) would not at all attain the end in view, and being an inefficient measure, would most probably give the inculpated native officers an opportunity to obtain exemption from conviction and exposure. It is the more important, the senior member observes, that a searching enquiry should be made into the accounts of the 24 pergunnahs' collectorship, as the same abuses have been reported to exist in the collectorships of Midnapoor, Rajshahie and Sylhet (and assuredly they exist more or less in every collectorate) whilst effectual measures for future reform can only be adequately devised, when the extent, nature and scheme of the existing frauds shall have been thoroughly sifted and ascertained. He observes that the satisfactory accomplishment of a duty of this nature demands the services of a very capable public officer exclusively devoted to the object, and cannot properly be executed by the officiating collector, together with due attention to the very arduous duties of his office. He therefore proposes the appointment of an experienced and able revenue officer, for instance Mr. Raikes or Mr. J. C. Scott, to undertake the duty, which, he states, with the aid of intelligent native officers, appointed for the purpose, may be fulfilled in a month or six weeks.

7. The senior member is of opinion that the most effectual plan to prevent future frauds would be to substitute, in all collector's offices, English for native accounts, as the latter, in his opinion, are defective both in form and principle, and from being cumbrous and voluminous, cannot be checked and superintended by the European controlling authorities, thereby affording most inviting opportunities for the successful practice of dishonesty by the native officers. He suggests that a committee be appointed, consisting of three covenanted revenue officers and two native gentlemen, who should examine and report upon the present system, and devise a simple plan of English accounts to supersede those in use at present.

8. The temporary member proposes to depute Mr. McClintock, from the revenue accountant's office and give him the services of Mr. Francis, the candidate for the collectorship of Calcutta, or of an uncovenanted assistant from the accountant's office, and also those of Ramdhun Ghose. He is of opinion also that the commissioner and collector should be ex-officio members of this committee, and that in conducting the investigation they should commence with the year A. D. 1830. He adds that Mr. McClintock should draw up a plan for the future arrangement of the accounts in all collector's offices, in doing which he would have the advice of Mr. Dorin, the accountant Revenue Department. He concludes by recommending for sanction the extra establishment proposed by Mr. Erskine, so as to insure the quick dispatch of the business.

9. The officiating member remarks that the collector has not satisfactorily explained how the frauds have been committed, and he is of opinion that they never could have been perpetrated, without being speedily detected, unless the European head of the office grossly neglected his duty. He observes that the fictitious entries now discovered are all in the interest accounts of the individual estate alluded to, but the abstract interest account is made out daily on the gross balance due from the district at large and the mere entry in the Seeah or Khutecanee would not benefit the party unless the amount so entered be included in the abstract interest account, and it could not be entered therein, and not brought to credit in the treasury account without immediate detection in the revenue accountant's office. He would wish to see the accounts kept in English (although he sees nothing objectionable in the present form) merely to render them more easily available to the European head of the office. Whoever conducts this enquiry should, in his opinion, be conversant with the native mode of keeping accounts, and should have nothing else to do being allowed also the services of native accountants. It would be impossible, observes Mr. Tucker, for the acting collector to attend to his own regular duties in addition to this work. One or other, probably both, would be neglected, and disappointment would be the result.

10. Having now stated the individual opinions and plans of all the members of the board, I am desired to solicit His Lordship's early instructions as to what course should be adopted in conducting this important enquiry.

I am, &c.

C. E. TREVELYAN, Addl. Secretary.

No. 989.

To C. E. TREVELYAN, Esq.

Officiating Additional Secretary to the
Sudder Board of Revenue.

Sir,—I am directed by the Right Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 4th instant, with its enclosures relative to the accounts of the collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs, and to communicate as follows, in reply.

2. His Lordship has already communicated to the Board his desire that they should undertake to place the collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs "in such a state of order, and to introduce such fixed rules of procedure, and such a system both of accounts and general business, as may render it a model upon which the other collectorates throughout the country may hereafter be organized." The frauds alleged to have been discovered in the accounts (though the Governor concurs with the officiating member in thinking that the mode of perpetration has not been satisfactorily explained) afford an additional reason for commencing at once and earnestly upon the work of reform.

3. At the same time, His Lordship does not anticipate any advantage, commensurate with the valuable time and labour which it will cost, from going back into the accounts through a long series of past years, with a view either to convict obscure native officers of fraud or to make out claims on the score of short payments of interest against individual zemindars. The great value and scarceness of competent European Agency, render it imperative on the Government to employ it to the best account; and whilst the existing exigencies of the public service render it impossible either to relieve Mr. Erskine altogether from the current duties of his office, or to assign the investigation of the accounts of the collectorate to a separate functionary. His Lordship is clearly of opinion, that the interests of Government will be best conserved by making the prevention of future fraud the primary object of the local authorities, and by carrying the investigation no further back than may be indispensably necessary to the full understanding of the manner in which fresh frauds have been committed, and to the punishment of offenders among the superior members of the omrah,—if such there be.

4. The necessary investigations under the above address, or must unavoidably be conducted by Mr. Erskine, who, His Lordship remarks, has not expressed any doubts as to his being able to carry it to a satisfactory issue, nor has asked for special assistance, other than of an additional native establishment. He is authorized to make over, at his discretion, any part of his current duties to Mr. Snell, and to entertain whatever temporary establishment, including Ramdhun Ghose, [of whom he appears to entertain a high opinion,] the Board may think requisite, for a period not exceeding three months. Should they be required for a longer term, the exigency must be reported.

5. As regards the general subject touched upon in your letter under reply, the Governor is inclined to concur generally in the opinion expressed by Mr. Pattle in its 7th par. and he is therefore pleased to appoint the officers whose names are entered on the margin a committee for the purpose of considering the defects of the present mode of keeping collectorate accounts, as they may be exhibited upon the inquiry ordered above, with a view to their simplification and improvement, and the question whether these accounts ought to be kept in future in the Bengallee, as at present, or in the English, language. In forming their opinion upon the latter point, the committee will not fail to advert to the important consideration of expence.

6. The committee will, of course, make the accounts of the 24 Pergunnahs the ground work of their enquiries.

7. His Lordship requests that Mr. Tucker, who has had great practical experience as a collector, and who is understood to be thoroughly conversant with the system of revenue accounts, and Mr. Halliday, who is known to have given much attention to the subject, and to have intended to submit a plan of reform, will afford the committee all the aid and counsel which their arduous regular duties will permit.

8. The Governor will only add his hope, that it may be formed practicable, consistently with safety, to reduce the number and bulk of the accounts kept in the collectorates, and express his persuasion that the nearer approximation is made to the mode in which accounts are kept by private merchants, bankers, and others, who have often the most extensive and complicated transactions to exhibit on their books, the greater will be the simplicity and the security attained.

9. The inclosures of your letter are herewith returned, copies having been kept for record.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

ROSS D. MANGLES,
Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal,
Fort William, the 11th July, 1837.

No. 133.

To J. A. DORIN, Esq., T. C. SCOTT, Esq., The Hon'ble J. C. ERSKINE, Committee for investigating into the accounts of the collectorate of the 24 Pergunnahs and C. TUCKER, Esq., and F. J. HALLIDAY, Esq.

Gentlemen,—I am directed to transmit a copy of a letter from Mr. Secretary Mangles, dated the 11th instant, No 989, on the subject of the enquiry you have been ordered to conduct into the present mode of keeping the collectorate accounts.

2d. The correspondence, in which these originated, is also sent in original* and you are requested to return it after perusal.

3rd. You will observe that the Board is very decidedly of opinion that the collectorate accounts should be kept in the English characters and figures, wherever sufficiently qualified and sufficiently cheap agency is available for this purpose.

4th The following facts seem to indicate that a sufficient number of persons qualified to keep accounts in this manner, may now be procured at low rates of pay in the neighbourhood of Calcutta, and that an adequate supply will not long be wanting in other parts of the country. In consequence of an advertisement having been issued to the effect that section writers were required at this office at a rate of pay much below that which now prevails, upwards of 200 persons attended at the office within three days and wrote specimens of their hand writing, and after that numerous other applications were received and will continue to be so. The hand writing of most of these persons was very creditable—that of upwards of 60 of them very good, and it was evident from their certificates and from the account they gave of their education, that a large proportion of them were quite as competent to discharge the ordinary duties of an accountant as those of a copyist. The other fact to which I am directed to advert, is that upwards of 5,000 boys are now receiving their education in different parts of the country under the Government education committee, much the greater part of whom are taught the English mode of keeping accounts, and the number so educated must soon be very much augmented. This is independent of those who are educated at institutions supported by private individuals and by societies, the number of which is not small, and is continually increasing.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 30th ult., No. 914, on the subject of the disuse of the Persian language in the Revenue Department, and to inform you that the Board has perused with sincere gratification this exposition of His Lordship's comprehensive and enlightened views on a subject of infinite importance to the future prospects of the country.

2nd The whole of your letter under acknowledgment has been lithographed, and sent to the officers subordinate to the board with a circular letter, of which the accompanying is a copy.

3rd In one respect only, the Board beg to suggest that an exception ought in proper time to be made to the general rule which His Lordship has laid down regarding the limits within which the English and Bengallee languages are respectively to be used in the transaction of revenue business. It is in their opinion an object of very great importance, that all the accounts and figured statements generally of every collectorate should be kept in the manner most readily intelligible to the collector, and nothing would so much conduce to this advantage as their being kept wholly in English. This change would be attended with no difficulties, requiring little more than the substitution of English letters and figures for native letters and figures in denoting names of estates and sums of money, and so far as the natives system of accounts differs from the English, the advantage is undoubtedly very much on the side of the latter. The Board trust that his Lordship will take early measures for instituting an enquiry into the system of accounts now in use in the collectors' offices. The necessity for such a scrutiny has been rendered evident by recent discoveries of malpractices in the office of the collector of the 24-Pergunnahs and those of other collectors, and when such an enquiry shall be set on foot, the improvement now suggested may be taken into consideration with the rest of the subject.

4th. The Board entirely concur with his Lordship in opinion as to the advantages which might be expected from the promulgation of authoritative rules of practice for the transaction of business in collector's offices, both as regards the establishment of uniformity, and the supplying at once to new incumbents much of that practical knowledge which they now have to acquire by degrees, often not without injury to the interests both of the Government and the people. The Board will immediately apply themselves to the preparation of such a manual, which may, when approved, be printed and circulated for the remarks of the local officers previously to its final adoption. The English forms as revised by the committee appointed for that purpose, will in effect form an appendix to this manual, and the Board have already taken measures to revise all the ordinary Native revenue papers, (puttahs, rubookarees, security bonds, sale advertisements, bairanmahs, &c. &c.) and to establish as far as practicable for the whole presidency only one form of each, to be expressed in the vernacular language of each province.

5. The completion of these changes, however, will be a work of time, while the appointment of a trustworthy person to be the head of the native office of the collector of the 24-Pergunnahs, is urgently required. The Board therefore trust that his Lordship will sanction the immediate appointment, experimentally, of such an officer on a salary of 100 rupees a month for the reasons mentioned in my former letters on this subject.

Officiating Additional Secretary to the
Sudder Board of Revenue

Sir—I am directed by the right honorable the Governor of Bengal, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 11th instant, relative to the use of the vernacular and English languages in the offices of the collectors of revenue, and to refer the Board in reply to your 3d para. to my letter of the 11th idem, upon the subject of the accounts of the collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs and appointing a committee to consider and report upon the best manner of keeping such accounts generally.

2. His Lordship is glad to find that the Board concur with him "as to the advantages that might be expected from the promulgation of authoritative rules of practice, for the transaction of business in collectors' offices," and will await their submission of the manual, which they propose to draw up for the general guidance of that class of officer.

3d. In the mean while, the governor is pleased, at the repeated and earnest recommendation of the Board, to sanction the immediate appointment, experimentally, of a sherishtadar, on a salary of Rs. 100 per mensem, to the collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs, but he considers it to be of the utmost importance, that all possible endeavours should be made upon this, as on every similar occasion, to provide the means of increasing the salary of the responsible native officer at the head of an importance establishment by effecting such improvements in the transaction of business, and especially, by so simplifying it as to admit of a reduction in the number of subordinate hands employed, or their payment at the rate of merely mechanical labourers.

No. 1141.

To the Secretary to the Sudder Board of Revenue, Fort-William.

Sir,—On the 17th August 1827, the Court of Sudder Mia. Revenue. Dewanny Adawlut ruled that a zemindar is not at liberty under section 18, regulation VIII. of 1819, to attach the tenure of an intermediate holder, i. e. oust him, without having previously instituted a summary suit against him under section 15 regulation VII. of 1819.† “The declaration that it is illegal to oust” except under stated circumstances necessarily implies “a remedy in case of the contravention of such rule;” an intermediate holder, therefore, who may be disturbed in possession, on application to the judge, may obtain an order for restoration until the process prescribed shall have been observed.

2d. On the 7th March 1828, in the same spirit the court ruled that a resident cultivator could not be disturbed till an arrear had been adjudged to be due, and if ruled in contravention of that rule, should be restored to possession by the judge on summary application.

3d. On the 15th of November 1833, it was ruled by the court that all such cases of illegal ejectment, not attended with violence so as to bring the case within the cognizance of the magistrate, should be preferred to the collector under the provisions of regulation VIII. of 1831.

4th Under these constructions, therefore, collectors are bound to receive all complaints of illegal ejectment brought forward by all classes of intermediate holders and ryots, but such is not the general practice, neither is it known that such complaints can be admitted by a collector.

5th. I purpose with the Board's permission directing the attention of the collectors in this division to the existing laws as construed by the court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and instructing them to open a register of these cases and keep them separate from suits for arrears instituted under regulation VIII of 1831.

6th. I request to be informed whether appeals from the decisions of collectors in such cases should be received.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA.

THE CROPS.—The appearance of the crops in the vicinity of Calcutta, and to the eastward, is represented to be more promising than was expected from the late setting in, and scarcity, of the rains; but the most desponding reports have been received from other quarters, were total failures seem inevitable. The tanks, generally, are not more than two-thirds full of water, and the populace, cannot but suffer severely next hot season from want of a sufficiency of water. The most recent accounts of the crops are more favorable than the previous ones were, the showers of rain that have since fallen having been of considerable benefit to them; but still the out-turn of the season, is expected to be rather under average.

THE PICE.—During the month, in consequence of the short time the government pice-venders attend their shops, the batta charged by the other shroffs on changing a rupee, has again increased to three and a half pice. The half-and-half measure of Government respecting the pice works so very ill, despite the boast of a certain secretary, that it would be better for them to abolish the shops at once, and cease to be pice-venders. The farce of affording relief to the poor through the means of the Government change shops, is carried on, for the benefit of the Government shroffs alone; who attend at their posts for a portion of the prescribed period, and giving the half-and-half change to a few individuals, send the rest away, with a request to come the next day for change. Really the administration of Lord Auckland, bids fair to be notorious for its imbecility and humbug.

ACCIDENTS ON THE RIVER.—Several accidents have occurred on the river during the month from the upsetting of boats, and several lives have fallen sacrifices in consequence.

MURDERS.—A murder was committed on the 16th September, in Shamooker. A chumar, in a fit of jealousy, stabbed his wife to death, and wounded his father and mother-in-law. The Coroner's inquest held on the body of the murdered woman, has passed a verdict of wilful murder against the chumar, who is to be tried next sessions.

A Hindoo woman, aged about fifty years, who lived in Tuntoneah, was murdered on the night of the 25th September. The body of the deceased was found in a well on her own premises, and a Coroner's inquest held on it, has returned a verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown.

On the night of the 31st of August, Kunny, a man of the barber caste, residing at Samunbust, was stabbed in the abdomen by Buddinath Goalah, and expired this morning at the Native Hospital, to which place he had been removed during the night.

EMBEZZLEMENT.—A roobacary has lately been received by the Police authorities at Calcutta, from the Magistrate of Zillah Sarun, stating that one Ramdhun Mookerjee had, on the 10th of August last, absconded with a lun-dee for 8,000 rupees on his being ordered by the magistrate to get it exchanged.

WAR WITH BURMAH.—It is said that there is every probability of a war with the Burmese. The ultimatum of the Supreme Government has been forwarded to the British Resident, Colonel Burney, for the information of the King. The Governor-General's departure for the Mofussil, will be postponed, until the result of this despatch is known.

STEAM NAVIGATION.—The proposal for promoting a well digested plan for the establishment of steam communication with England, has already attracted so much attention, and excited so warm an interest, that in the very short space of time between its publication on the evening of the 16th September, it has obtained the subscriptions of upwards of 100 firms, and individuals, taking collectively to the amount of upwards of 815 shares.

Mr. Waghorn's plan for rendering the present steamers immediately efficient for keeping up the steam communication between Suez and Bombay, has been adopted. The Hugh Lindsay is to be employed in the Red Sea only, and the Atalanta and Berenice in taking alternate packets from Mocha to Bombay, and two more steamers are to be sent out. This arrangement is not to be interfered with by the Parliamentary Committee appointed to report upon the question of a comprehensive plan of communication with other ports of India.

KING WILLIAM THE FOURTH.—Pursuant to appointment, obsequies were on the 3d September celebrated at the Armenian Church, in commemoration of the demise of our most gracious King William IV., of happy and glorious memory.

THE LATE KING AND THE QUERN.—Minute guns, corresponding with the age of his deceased Majesty, King William the Fourth, were on the 31st of August, fired from the ramparts of Fort William.

Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, was the same evening, at five o'clock, proclaimed Queen of Great Britain, &c. in the usual form.

GOVERNOR GENERAL.—The Governor-General contemplates leaving Calcutta about the 15th of November, if no news from England or Ava induces him to alter his intentions.

THE OPIUM BONUS.—It is stated that the Chamber of Commerce of Bombay, has remonstrated with the supreme Government against the partiality of the opium bonus, and that a strong petition has been got up for the return of the pass duty.

THE OPIUM SALE.—A re-sale of opium, consisting of Mr. Cohen's forfeited lots and the uncleared portion of the quantity assigned to the French Government, took place on the 15th of September. The quantity put up was 637 chests of Patna and 163 chests of Benares, together 800 chests, and though deposits or promissory notes to the amount of 1,000 rupees per lot were taken in the room of every buyer at the time of registering his purchase, the sale went off at prices fully equal to those of the day in the bazar, and higher considerably than the present aspect of the China market warrants the expectation of realizing there. The first lot of Patna was knocked down to the rich kootee of Luchmechund Radakissen at 1,185 rupees, which was the highest price of the sale, the next lot being sold at 1,140 and the 6th lot at 1,130, the minimum; the average of the Patna Opium was rupees 1,149 per chest, while the Benares averaged rupees 1,088-1-7, ranging from 1895 to 1095 rupees per chest.

SHIPWRECK.—The Highland Chief was wrecked on the 27th instant on the Long-Sand off Saugor Point. Her crew and officers were saved.

CIVIL ORDER OF MERIT.—In connexion with the recent measure for increasing the salaries of a portion of the native judges, the Government has had under its consideration the expediency of establishing a Civil Order of merit similar to the Military Order lately sanctioned for the army. It is not intended to confine the bestowal of the distinctions of the order to the servants of the Government. Natives of respectability generally are to be eligible to the honours, and it is supposed that this will be a means not only of gratifying their feelings of ambition but of attaching them to our rule.

MILITARY ORPHAN SOCIETY.—A quorum of subscribers was obtained on the 5th of September, at a meeting held in the Town Hall, for the election of a Manager of the Orphan Society, in the room of Lieutenant Abercrombie. The election accordingly took place, and the choice fell upon Captain Roxburgh, the Assistant Military Auditor General, and in case of his declining to serve, Dr. Craigie was nominated in his stead.

THE BANK OF INDIA.—Mr. Holt Mackenzie and Mr. Deans Campbell are reported to be still intent upon getting up the Bank of India, and the Glasgow people are said to be warm supporters of the scheme.

CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITY FUND.—The Court of Directors' sanction has been received to the Rules of the Civil Service annuity Fund, which were submitted from Bengal for their approval; which sanction is, however, limited for the present to the three years' experiment they refer to. Mr. W. B. Bayley, Mr. H. Newnham, Mr. P. E. Paton and Mr. A. Campbell are admitted to the benefit of these rules.

MR. CHARLES BECHER.—The Court of Directors has liberally awarded 5,000 rupees to Mr. Charles Becher for the invention and introduction of the quadruple basons in the Company's silk filatures, whereby much saving in fuel has been effected.

GOVERNMENT ADVANCES ON BILLS.—A notice has been issued by Government, that "the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, are authorized to receive tenders for advances on bills drawn on London and Liverpool, at the rate of two shillings for the Company's rupee, until further orders. Tenders at the rate of 2s 1d., the acceptance of which may not have been notified to the parties, will be admitted at the reduced rate."

THE LAKH.—The lakh turned up to the ticket No. 2018, the property of Messrs. E. B. and John Gleeson, the former the keeper of the House of Correction and the latter an assistant in the Judge Advocate General's office.

THE GLOUCESTER WORKS.—The proprietors of the Gloucester Works, by the last accounts, are stated to have been in treaty to sell them to a Joint Stock Company in England, for eight lakhs of rupees!

MR. C. R. MARTIN.—The special Commission for the investigation of the charges preferred against Mr. C. R. Martin, Judge of Hughli, was opened on the 4th instant, by Mr. W. W. Bird, the special commissioner. Mr. M. A. Bignell appeared as prosecutor on behalf of Government and filed seven charges against the Judge. Mr. W. P. Grant and Mr. Hedger appeared as the Council and Attorney for Mr. Martin, and after putting on record a general and complete denial of the whole charges, requested that the further proceedings might be postponed for a day or two, in order that they might be prepared for the defence. It was finally arranged, that the sitting of the Court should be postponed until the 6th instant, when Mr. Rignell brought forward the charge of Mr. Martin's having exercised a harsh and oppressive abuse of authority towards Sreenauth Bannerjee, the Moonsiff of Nalab Serai, with intent to compel him to resign his appointment.

THE BISHOP.—The Lord Bishop of Calcutta left the presidency on the 4th instant, and proceeded in the Thames, steamer, accompanied by Major General Brown, to the Upper Provinces.

CAPT. STANLEY.—The Chamber of Commerce, on the 5th instant, gave a dinner to Capt. Stanley and the officers of the Wolf, in acknowledgment of their services in the Straits.

NOTES ON THE MEDICAL TOPOGRAPHY OF CALCUTTA.—Dr. Martin's "Notes on the Medical Topography of Calcutta," are just published, having been printed by order of Government, and forming a pamphlet of considerable bulk, which contains a map of Calcutta as it was in 1757, and a map of the Soonderbuns as far as Backergunge.

ATTORNEYS FEE IN THE INSOLVENT COURT.—It is said that some important alterations have been recently made in the table of fees chargeable by the attorneys who practise in the Insolvent Court. Henceforth the scale of fees will be similar to that allowed in the Insolvent Courts in England, with this difference, however, that for every shilling allowed there, one rupee will be receivable here.

RIVER POLICE.—The Chief Magistrate has been instructed to appoint two European officers at the head of the River Police each on a salary of 200 rupees, and to increase the pay of the Police chuprassees to twice its present amount. These officers are to be furnished with fast rowing boats so that they may be able to overtake the light dingies of the natives, particularly those of the bombattias. The Magistrate of Hooghly and the 24-Pergunnahs are to invest the officers with the powers of Darogahs in their respective zillahs, in order that their services may be perfectly efficient. They will also see that the ferry boats do not take in a greater number of people than they are safely capable of carrying.

BABOO ROSOMOY DUTT.—The Baboo Rosomoy Dutt has been appointed to act as a Commissioner of the Petty Court in the room of Mr. Brielzcke, who has obtained leave to proceed to the Cape. The Baboo has received from Lord Auckland a very flattering letter accompanying the appointment.

GEOLOGICAL DISCOVERY.—Another very curious geological discovery has been made by the boring experiment in the fort. Specimens of coal were brought up by the boring auger from a depth of 302 feet. The coal is of a quality superior to that of Burdwan and equal to the best specimens from Sylhet. It was described as not forming part of a stratum, but having the appearance of stream coal found in rolled independent pieces, indicative of the proximity of a bed of the mineral.

A STRIKE AMONGST THE COOLIES.—In consequence of the Police having issued orders to their peons to bring the coolies who ply for hire, to the office of the Superintendent of Police, with a view to have their numbers registered and a badge given to each of them, there has been a general strike amongst this class of labourers. The strike amongst these labourers has greatly embarrassed and put a temporary stop to the business of this city, particularly in a commercial point of view, several gentlemen have complained of the inconvenience which they are experiencing in their business by this unadvisable measure.

A LEOPARD.—The animal that has for some time past been carrying off children, and wounding adults, in Shampokur, proves at last to be a large leopard. The hunters are out after the brute, and the underwood, which is very thick in the neighbourhood of Shampokur, is being cut down by the police.

SAUGOR ISLAND COMMITTEE.—This association is extinct. Until 1833 there were hopes of getting an eventual dividend from the property to the extent of some hundred rupees per share, or an income corresponding with that value, on the termination of the existing leases in 1839. But the disastrous May gale of that year ruined all the settlements upon the island and depopulated the estates; and though exertions have since been made with some success to repopulate the villages it once exhibited in a high state of prosperity, and the lessees have since made some profit by the manufacture of salt, the sad experience they have had, will indispose them to lay out any more money in clearing away jungle, or to offer terms for the renewal of their leases such as would yield the Shareholders either income or dividend worth their looking after. Moreover, all the uncultured lands will soon revert to Government by default, and the others will become chargeable with a Government rent of four annas per biggah, which, if demanded, will absorb the whole net income of the best estates, making allowance for loss of crops and repair of bunds and other damages incident to inundations.

ROBBERY.—On the 22nd instant, the regimental canteen in the fort, was broken open and rifled of two thousand rupees. One thousand rupees of the money were subsequently found behind a tree in the fort; but the robbers remain undetected.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION.—Mr. Edward Gleeson, the praise-worthy Superintendent of the House of Correction, has been exerting himself strenuously to make the labor of the convicts as beneficial to the public as possible. He has recently established a bakery in the House, where he has bread baked of a superior quality to any procurable elsewhere, which is made of flour prepared by the prisoners.

ABDOOL RAZAK, THE DEPUTY COLLECTOR.—Abdool Razak, the Native Deputy Collector, who was discovered to have embezzled large sums of money collected by him on account of Government, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Moorshedabad, and sentenced to four years' imprisonment.

THE ROADS.—In consequence of some freak which seems to have seized the Superintendent of Roads, the highways of the city of palaces are left in a most shameful condition: large pieces of brickbats and stones are scattered loosely over them, and the vehicles of equestrians, are left to perform the office, hitherto accomplished by the roller, of laying these smoothly, much to the detriment of wheels and springs, and to the endangerment of the necks and limbs of the leiges. We wish some competent authority would teach this functionary his duty.

RULE FOR DRIVING.—It is stated that a rather novel application was made by a certain gentleman to the Chief Magistrate, on the 23rd ultimo, to establish a fixed rule for driving through the streets of Calcutta, and to make the same as public as possible, through the medium of the newspapers; as the applicant was impressed with the conviction, that many of our good citizens are of opinion, that to keep to their right hand is proper, instead of the left, which custom has from time immemorial been established as the right rule of driving, and which mistake has been the cause of many accidents. The applicant proposed the rule to be left unaltered, the keeping to the left appearing so reasonable, and it having grown into a habit with many which they could not easily be able to forsake. The Chief Magistrate has circulated the letter to his brother magistrates for their respective opinions, as to the necessity of interfering in the matter.

PUNISHMENT OF TUSHEER.—Two natives, who had been found guilty of perjury, were thus punished on the 23rd of September:—

Imprimis, they had one side of their heads, whiskers, mustaches and beards shaved; they were then clothed in kuffees made of sackcloth, and their heads were decorated with fantastically painted paper foolscaps, in lieu of turbans, and strings of shoes were suspended from their necks in the place of their headstrings; their faces were daubed on one side with blacking, and on the other with chunam. They were then taken out of the Alypoor jail and mounted on jackasses in lieu of steeds, with their faces towards the tails of the patient animals, whilst two sweepers, who acted as squires to the knights errant, every now and then flourished immense coconut shred brooms over these worthies, and a common crier preceded them, with a tom-tom, beating on it the Rogus's March, and detailing to the numerous spectators the exploits of these two notable characters, which had been the cause of this procession and tumasha. The males alternately hissed or applauded as their whig directed them, and the females smiled and giggled. The procession commenced its perambulation from the Alypoor jail, went over Alypoor bridge towards Kidderpore, and thence over Kidderpore bridge through Kidderpore to the Alypoor Court, and thence back again to the Alypoor jail. It was numerous and attended. When the party arrived opposite the Alypoor pill, these notables were dismounted, stripped of their daraphernalia, washed and ushered into the jail to undergo the other portion of their sentence,—four years imprisonment,—and, the tumasha being over, the spectators retired highly pleased with the ludicrous spectacle.

CAPTURE OF DORA BISBOYE.—A letter from Ganjam, dated 20th ultimo, announces the capture of Dora Bisboye in the zemindary of Angolia, in Cuttack, beyond the Mishnuddy. "I have not heard by whom," says the writer, "nor any thing whatever of the circumstances of capture." He was well known in that zemindary, whither he had gone on the part of the late rajah of Goomsoor to concert an attack upon Bond.

ESCAPE OF THREE CHILDREN FROM ONE OF THE TIPPOO'S MAHOLS.—The Kidderpore darogah sent up three girls, two of age between twelve and fourteen years and the other of about seven or eight years of age, stating that they were straying about the streets at Kidderpore and on being questioned as to where they had come from, replied that they were in their infancy sold to Nawub Zelaalooddeen of Russapuglah, and that they latterly were very severely treated, and in consequence of the great hardships they were subjected to, were obliged to escape. Claims have been laid to the children: the youngest of the three is claimed by the widow of a peon belonging to the twenty-four Pergunnahs Court; she, it appears, informed the Magistrate of her daughter having been kidnapped in August 1834; but the claims for the other children are of a very questionable nature.

WATER SPOUT.—The unusual phenomenon of a water spout on the Salt Water Lake, was observed on the 28th ultimo at 5 P. M.

BALL TO CELEBRATE THE ACCESSION OF THE QUEEN TO THE THRONE.—The accession of Queen Victoria to the throne, is to be celebrated with a fancy dress ball and supper. Thirty-two stewards have been named, commencing with the highest in rank in society, and including every class, both Armenian and Natives.

THE FRIGATE ARTEMISE.—The French frigate Artemise, will remain at Kedgerie during her stay in this river, her draft of water being too great to allow of her coming up to Calcutta. The frigate has had a great many men sick with cholera since she entered the river, five of whom have died. The disease, however, does not appear to have broken out with much virulence, the proportion of deaths hitherto being very small and the anxiety it occasioned at first has very much abated.

NEW PILOT.—The removal of the pilot station has again been brought before Government in a letter from the Master Attendant, who is of opinion that the cruising of pilot brigs off False Point, will be of great advantage to vessels making the Sandheads. Captain Harrington makes the proposition provided a large sized floating light is moored off the Point.

FIXED TABLE OF VALUATIONS.—A fixed table of valuations for passing goods at the Custom House, upon which subject the Board of Customs and Chamber of Commerce have been in communication for many months past, has received the approbation of Government. One article is overvalued considerably with reference to the ordinary wholesale price, betelnut, which is rated at 5 rs. 8 annas per maund, its present value, which is most unusually high, the price at which betelnut from the Straits is ordinarily sold by the importer being under 4 rs. per maund.

THE ARIEL.—A new clipper for the opium trade, called the Ariel, built on the lines of a French privateer Les huit Amis, was launched on the 4th instant from the Kidderpore yard, of 368 tons burthen—five tons larger than the Water Witch, which she closely resembles except in having a round stern.

MOFUSSIL.

HATRAS.—The appearance of drought from the setting in of westerly winds was recently so decided, that Adami spread every where, and grain fell to 19 and 20 seers of 80 totals each per rupee. The Kotwal, however, with a courage truly praiseworthy, seized a number of the grain merchants and after a course of persuasion well known to native functionaries, fixed the rate at not less than 22 seers. A very satisfactory shower fell immediately after and business has again commenced—grain selling at 23 seers for the rupee. Confidence is again restored, no fears being entertained for the rubee crops, the khureef crops even may not be an entire failure. The Tuhseeldar likewise has not been backward in adding his weight to the general distress—he has placed his veto on the culturing of the miserable indigo fields until security is found for the whole of the khureef revenue.

COEL.—A burst of thunder, peculiarly loud and sharp in its report, recently broke in the neighbourhood of Coel, and two prisoners on the road were killed by the lightning. A few pice in the hand of one of the poor wretches, were flattened to twice their superficial size, presenting somewhat the appearance of melted metal dropped into water.

A vacancy has taken place in the judicial establishment of this district by the resignation of the Principal Sudder Amcen, who, if report be true, has thrown up his respectable appointment in a pet. Robberies are becoming very prevalent in consequence of the great drought, and the anticipation of famine. The zemindars have forcibly possessed themselves of a considerable number of grain pits, while their assamese collect for the purpose of robbing the bunneahs and other town's people, who have anything to lose.

KHASOUNGE.—Recently the dacoits assembled at Khasgunge, to the number of 200 or so, with the intention of making a foray on the town and particularly the shroff's coffers. They were anticipated by the police who went to welcome them outside, when a fight took place in which the thanadar was killed and his death revenged in the wounds of four or five of the robbers, who in the end took to flight, leaving glorious victory to the police, and a few of their number to answer for their misdeeds.

NUSSEERABAD.—The rain has lately been abundant, and the fearful prospect of famine has entirely disappeared. There is a large quantity of grain in store in the provinces and no fears are entertained for the rubee crop. The latest price current was, wheat, 20½ per rupee; ottah, 20 a 21; bajrah, 28; mukha, 35; chunna, 25; barley, 34. With the abundance these prices shew, a little management on the part of Government would easily direct a quantity of grain to other less-favoured districts.

BEANJEHANPOON.—The rebellion in this district has been somewhat suppressed by the capture of nearly seven hundred of the parties engaged in it. At one period it raged with great violence. Four villages were seen in flames at the same time, and thirteen dead and wounded were found in another. In one Purgunnah several of the police officers were wounded. The Magistrate had returned to the civil station. From a fact which transpired, that the rioters were not of the poorer classes, it would appear that some other motive than hunger drove them to their violent proceedings. What this was does not clearly appear, though the immediate object of it, was plunder.

There are upwards of a thousand prisoners on trial for their part in the insurrections throughout the district. Heavy rain fell for several hours on the 5th ultimo, and has quite altered the aspect of the country. The khureef crops, such as cotton, joor and bajra were sown, in despair, and to the astonishment of all, have proved the most favourable ever known. The luxuriance of the cotton crops is perfectly wonderful. All this change has been effected in the space of ten or fifteen days. The lands for the rubber crops, too, are beautifully prepared, and on the whole, there is now little doubt of a gradual return of peace and plenty. The crops which have suffered are the rice and sugar cane; the former is totally destroyed; the latter one half.

FUTTEGHUR.—Famine prevails in Futteghur, to a very great degree. The population are thereby driven to the perpetration of constant robberies, and able bodied men are offering their services for a moderate allowance of food only.

From the continued drought in this district, the natives seem progressing towards a state of anarchy. Five boats coming from Anoopshuhur laden with grain, were stopped on the river and robbed. The grain pits at Chuppramow have been broken into and the contents appropriated by the robbers. The distinction betwixt meum and the tuum is gradually becoming more and more undefined in the minds of the natives, and the strong arm of government will soon be required not to settle and fix prices as some untrading or despotically inclined people would have, but to protect the bunyas and shroffs.

DELHI.—Rumours say that the plague has again appeared to the westward.

Letters from the Hills do not give favorable accounts of Sir Henry Fane's state of health.

The following is a list of dacoities recently perpetrated.

At Ferozepore, in the purgunnah Subul, one inhabitant of the village and thirty dacoits were killed.

At the village of Tathee, Purgunnah Surwan, a buncah's house was attacked; seventeen men and two women dacoits were killed.

At the village Sorha, Purgunnah Chundowsee, thirty men killed, fifteen dacoits, fifteen villagers; and at Burooe, Purgunnah Sunbul, an attack was made on the house of a blacksmith; seven dacoits were killed and one of the villagers wounded.

At the village of Dadowl, Purgunnah Chundowsee, twenty dacoits were killed.

At Durnore, in the Zillah of Bijnore, two hundred dacoits, under the pretence of belonging to a wedding party, entered the village and plundered. Several persons were killed and wounded.

Near Kadir Gunj, in the Zillah of Saswan, the inhabitants of a village assembled, opened the granary of a merchant, and were about to remove the grain, when Meer Wazzer Ali, the Thanadar, accompanied by the Police, arrived and endeavoured to prevent them. The Thanadar and two of the Police were wounded and the grain taken away. The Thanadar is very dangerously wounded.

The Corps of Local Horse at Bareilly had been called out, on the requisition of the Magistrate, to assist the Police in preventing crime, and on one occasion a young Civilian was wounded when leading a small party against a body of dacoits, but the wound is not considered a dangerous one.

Daily tumultuous meetings and outrages occur in different parts of the Dooab, Rohilkund, and Oude, and the dread of famine is, doubtless, the inciting cause.

AGRA.—The Agra Ukkbar of the 30th ultimo, has the following:—

The rumours so long abroad of the resignation of Sir Charles Metcalfe and his retirement from public employ, have at length been confirmed, and he will resign the service of the Company on the conclusion of this year.

A few slight showers have fallen since the 26th, which have given a little freshness to the stunted crops. Without more, however, the khureef crop must be lost.

Emigrants from Bundelkund are flocking in daily, in the most wretched condition.

Mr. Plowden, Deputy Magistrate of Ally Ghur, succeeds Mr. Blunt, as Collector of Customs at Agra.

Captain A. Wilson is on his way to the Presidency, to officiate as Assistant Adjutant General of Artillery, in consequence of Captain Lawrenson's transfer to a troop of Horse Artillery.

DELHI.—Accounts from the palace report that the disorder of His Majesty the King of Delhi, had increased to an alarming degree on the 16th ultimo, but that he has since experienced some mitigation of his complaint. No less than sixteen native practitioners are said to have consulted upon the royal malady.

An instance of the cruel and barbarous sacrifice of Suttee has occurred in the Marwar Territory where an unfortunate girl no more than sixteen years of age became the victim of a benighted and diabolical superstition.

AGRA.—The state of the weather, which is hot and dry, is becoming a subject of serious interest with all classes. The extreme drought has already affected considerable injury in the total destruction of the sugar-cane crop, and the partial ruination of those of cotton and indigo. Grain continues to rise in price.

At the half-yearly Bank meeting held on the 11th August, a dividend of 12 per cent per annum was declared.

CALCUTTA.—The following is an extract of a letter from Calcutta, dated 22d August. "For one month and three days previous to last evening we had not had a single shower of rain—last evening we had a very slight one. Famine is gradually spreading over the whole face of the country, and is now as severe as it was in 1833. The poor people around us are selling their children for mere trifles, in order to save them from starvation, and are themselves emigrating in large bodies towards Saugor, where grain is much cheaper than it is here, being there sold at thirty-seers for a rupee, while here only fourteen and a half are obtained. Of course it is impossible for laborers, earning only three rupees a month, to be able to purchase a sufficient quantity to keep them from famishing. The factories and fields are all deserted, the surreef crop has totally failed, and fever rages among the people.

MYNPOORE.—A band of dacoits was recently apprehended by the Magistrate, who, on receiving intimation of the robbers having assembled in a garden near the town, to concert measures for an attack, immediately assembled his chupprasses and burkundauzes, and proceeded to arrest them. After a close search one of the party was observed, and after receiving two slight sabre cuts on his head was secured. The whole were gradually uncovered, until none but the leader remained, a stalwart fellow with a long double handled sword, with which he threatened to cut his way through the party. Discretion, however, cautioned him to give himself up, and thus, by the activity of the Magistrate, robbery, and perhaps murder, were prevented.

MINZAPPOOR.—A Court of Inquiry will assemble immediately for the purpose of investigating some matters in which a gallant Field Officer, of courts-martial and courts-of-requests celebrity is implicated. Rain has fallen almost every day since the 19th of August. It came too late to do any good to the koontee indigo plant, but the new plant and the khureef crops are thriving admirably under the vegetating influence of alternate sunshine and rain.

CAWNPUR.—Cholera has broken out both in the city and cantonments and is producing numerous casualties among the European soldiery.

SAUGOR.—A general court-martial will, it is expected, shortly be convened for the trial of an artillery man, who with one discharge of a fowling piece, killed one woman the wife of a comrade, and severely shattered the arm of another. Sickness has been prevalent, and deaths frequent both in the city and sudder bazaar.

MORADABAD.—No rain has yet fallen that would do good to the paddy crop, but the hovering clouds and easterly winds hold out a hope of the latter rain being plentiful. The khureef is quite green and promises a good harvest.

In Rampoor the cholera is said to have made considerable ravages, and still continues with equal violence.

Mr. Okeden, whose return from Shahjehanpoor the people have hailed with feelings of joy and gratitude, has displayed a practical benevolence in providing the poor of the town with food at the rate of ten rupees a day. The humane doctor also intends forwarding a proposition for the sanction of Government, that the surplus funds of the dispensary be converted to a similar purpose.

SAHARUNPORE.—The shock of an earthquake was felt about 3 p. m. at Saharunpoor, on the 16th August. It was very severely felt.

AMRER.—The whole of the plague cordons have at length been entirely broken up. Heavy rain fell throughout this district recently, and agricultural prospects are consequently improving.

JUNBULPOOR. A great quantity of rain has fallen within the last few days, the rice and other crops are in consequence safe, the bunded lands and tanks being quite full. Grain, however, keeps up its price.

BAREILLY.—The state of the Bareilly district is most deplorable. Several hundreds of prisoners are under trial for robbery, and numbers have been killed in their conflicts with the villagers. The grain crops have totally failed, and wheat is selling under fifteen seers per rupee: there is no real scarcity of grain, but *buniah*s have established a monopoly, and have the market entirely at their command.

ANAGULPORE.—The scarcity of food is not so much felt in Bhagulpoor amongst the lower classes of natives as in Tirhoot; but the mortality is very great and has been for months. The disease seems to be spasmodic cholera, and carries off the sufferer in a few hours, leaving the fingers and toes contracted. Some villages have been absolutely deserted, and the dead left scattered about unburied, chiefly by the side of tanks or wells. Those who escape have to contend with another disorder, namely, that of the circulating medium, fourteen annas being all that is allowed in the bazar for that anomalous coin called a Company's rupee.

NATIVE STATES.

AMRUTPORE.—Rain has fallen here in such quantity as to reduce the price of wheat to 30 seers per rupee. His Highness has just returned from Deeg, whither he had gone up to pray.

The Rajah has just completed a map of his territories, an instance, that knowledge is advancing with native Governments, though it may be very slowly. The heat and drought are as intense here as throughout the country.

LUCKNOW.—His Majesty the new King of Oude, has issued his gracious proclamation, henceforward forbidding his Hindoo subjects from profaning the ears of the faithful by the sound of their conches. So the Hindoo festival of Ashtumes or the birth of Kunnya was celebrated in morning.

The cholera is raging so dreadfully at Lucknow, that no less than from 700 to 1,002 men are carried off daily. In some families they are attacked, and at most all swept away within 24 hours, and there are whole neighbourhoods in a state of awful dread as to the consequences of this great and frightful visitation. Cry of the subjects of this unfortunate kingdom. His present Majesty takes an airing almost every evening, and takes a stroll in very many different directions, purposely with the view of seeing if all his orders, which he passes in court, have been obeyed, and to check any abuse which may come to his knowledge.

An order has been tom-tomed in the city, that all holders of grain above 100 rupees' worth are either to forfeit one dumree in the rupee or be compelled to sell 10 seers of otta in the city for a rupee. In captonment it is now 10 Lucknow seers, and not procurable. The Padsha Begum and Moona Jan, are to be confined in Chunar for their lives. A short time since their sentence was read to them, and they appeared quite composed and resigned.

His Majesty with the sanction and approbation of the Supreme Government of India, has been pleased to re-nominate Nawab Hukeem Mehndee Ali Khan, Bahadur, Vizier and Naib of Oude. The Hukeem's local experience, his general knowledge of the country, and the true character of the different chuckedars, fully qualify him for a proper and creditable discharge of the Ministerial duties.

GWALLIOR.—An heir^{ess} has just been born to the Raj which, like other great States, will probably yet be under female government.

CAUNBOO.—By letters received from Caunbool, it appears that Sirdar Dost Mahomed Khan had sent a deputation to the Chief of Bokhara, requesting a loan of from five to six lakhs of rupees for the purpose of making preparations to take the field against Runjeet Sing's army in a suitable manner; but the request was not complied with.

JURROOR.—The Thakoor of a large zemindree of this district, by name Mekh Singh, has been furnishing matter for a crim. con. which will be decided by fire and sword, instead of by the civilized fashion of swearing and lying. The charms of a Brahmin's wife inflamed the Thakoor, and he seized her. This violence the Brahmin has represented as sinful to such a degree against Providence, that the Thakoor's people and himself will die off from day to day. This the people don't like, so the affair will be decided by an appeal to arms: a few on both sides have already fallen.

DEERA KHYBUR.—It is stated that an Afghan named Misery Khan, having informed the Nauzens of Peshawur, that Khybur was guarded by no more than two hundred men, they immediately proceeded with a large detachment of troops, to avail themselves of so favorable an opportunity to make themselves masters of the place. On their approach, the guards at Khybur, from the smallness of their number, thinking themselves unequal to cope with the enemy, retreated. The Seikhs pursued them, and killed some and wounded others; they robbed the people of their property also. While things had arrived at this stage, the succors in the service of the chief of Caunbool, stationed at Dahta, were informed of what was going on; and they proceeded to the assistance of the run-away guards. Now the tables were turned against the Seikhs who were so very much frightened that their lost no mite in flying back to Peshawur.

MOLTAN.—By letters received from trading people at Moltan, it appears, that from the good management of the Government affairs by Dewan Sawun Mull, the Nauzen of that place, the people are much satisfied; every body following his respective calling with comfort and safety. Cultivation of lands is so much increased that there is not a hiswa to be found lying waste. Since the setting in of the rains the price of grain is considerably lowered.

LAHORE.—A shooka was despatched to Dost Mahomed Khan, informing him that the ancient good understanding between the Lahore State and that of Cabul might be restored, if the latter country would acknowledge its dependence by transmitting the usual gifts of horses and Persian blades, and appoint its Vakeel to reside at the Court of Lahore, for the purpose of receiving occasional admonition from the Maharaja; but that if these amicable proposals were rejected, that Sultan Mahommud should at the close of the rainy season take active measures for reducing the country. New from Cabul reports that Dost Mahommud Khan was suffering from a severe cold, and that his two sons, Mahommud Akber Khan and Mahommud Afzul Khan, had commenced a mortal quarrel which had caused great inquiet to their father.

Mr. Court was informed that he would receive the command of Hurree Sing's regiment upon its arrival at Lahore.

HERAT.—An individual writes from Herat, that Shah Kamram, the ruler of that place, having of late contracted the habit of indulging himself in the use of things of an intoxicating nature, much neglect has found its way into the state affairs; so much so that the people have had cause to be greatly dissatisfied. A number of the wealthy inhabitants have quitted his highness's territories and settled themselves in those of the neighbouring chiefs: some who have not been able to do this, in consequence of their having landed possessions, are only praying for the death of the Shah, and for the succession of Mirza Jahangeer to the throne.

MADRAS:

THE HEBE.—The schooner Hebe, in which Colonel Monteith, Chief Engineer, embarked to proceed to the Paumbam Pass, encountered very severe weather after leaving Madras, with strong southerly winds. She sailed on the 27th ultimo, and on the three following days remained in sight of the Palaveram Hill; on the fourth the gale drove her out into the centre of the Bay, and she only made the land again with great difficulty. The schooner has received injury—bowsprit sprung, jib boom carried away, and rigging very much strained. About 30 miles East of Madras they saw a mast about a foot in diameter, standing upright in the water; about 8 feet of it were out of the sea and the wood seemed good and new, but the high sea and the night closing in prevented their sending a boat to examine it closely.

A NEW MASULLAH BOAT.—An accommodation masullah boat of a new construction has been lately built and launched under the direction of the Master Attendant. She is considerably longer than the old boats, with eight oars on one side and seven on the other, and carries her beam in midships. In consequence of the surf being moderate of late there has not been a fair opportunity of trying her comparative capabilities, but it is supposed she will pull quicker than the old muster, in consequence of her additional oars.

BREAKWATER.—The Madras Government has received a despatch from the Court of Directors on the subject of the Break-water, and the court has viewed the matter in a liberal way—expressing its readiness to take upon itself the construction of a Break-water, provided its feasibility can be made clear and making the cost a matter of no consideration. The Government has been directed to procure a full report on the subject and has referred it to the Break-water Committee.

MAIL COACH COMPANY.—The Mail Coach Company on the 1st instant sent in its tender for conveying the mails between Madras and Bangalore. It has engaged to perform the distance in 34 hours, transporting 180 lbs. weight daily, for the sum of 2,000 rupees, per mensem. The present monthly expenses amount to 564 rupees, the runners carrying 18 lbs. weight daily, and 50 lbs. thrice a week.

MR. GARROW.—Mr. Garrow, Chief Judge of the Provincial Court in the Southern Division, is appointed a general expurgator of all useless and obsolete records in public offices, in the discharge of which duty he will act in conjunction with their heads.

INSURRECTION IN CANARA.—A commission, composed of Major Vigouraux, C. B., and C. R. Cotton, Esq., of the Revenue Board, is appointed to enquire into the causes and origin of the late insurrection in Canara.

THE SIR EDWARD PAGET.—The Sir Edward Paget, which left the Roads about 1 A. M. on the 16th instant, returned to the Port on Sunday morning, having been almost entirely dismasted in a squall some sixty miles to the Southward. One boy was blown overboard and drowned.

BOMBAY.

THE BERENICE.—The Steamer Berenice, was forced to return to Bombay on the 25th ultimo, in consequence of having no fresh water on board the forty tons taken in having been, through some defect in the pipe, safely deposited by the careful officers in the hold of the vessel instead of the tanks.

CAPTAIN SINCLAIR.—Captain Sinclair, of the Artillery, understanding that the President of the Elphinstone College Council was opposed to the nomination to the Secretaryship of an individual with whom he had not previously had an opportunity of forming a personal acquaintance, has withdrawn his application to succeed Lieutenant Pope.

PUNISHMENT TO THE RINGLEADERS OF THE RIOT AT DHEWNDY.—On the 24th of August, the Judges of the Sudder Adawlut pronounced sentence on the remaining six individuals whose case has been remitted by the Session Judge at Tanah as the Ringleaders in the late riots at Dhewndy. A difference of opinion having existed between all members of the Court, it was necessary to call in the Chief Judge, the Hon'ble Mr. Farish, by whom after consultation with the rest of the Bench, it was decided that each prisoner should undergo an imprisonment, for one year, in irons, and pay a fine of rupees 3,000; in default of which, an additional imprisonment of two years. Each of the persons thus sentenced will also at the expiration of his punishment be called upon to enter into recognizances, himself and securities, to the amount of rupees 10,000, for his future good behaviour.

CAPTURE OF THUGGS.—It is reported that about fifty or sixty Mussulman Thuggs, having a Patel at their head, have been caught by the officer in charge of the Thuggee department; in a village near Dharwar, and are now in the course of being tried. It is also said that some of the companions of the above Thuggs took to their heels at the time they were caught.

THE CHOLERA.—It is said that the cholera has made its way to Kulludghee, a garrison town about eighty miles east of Belgaum.

TRANSIT DUTIES.—It is stated that the transit duties in Bombay are directed to be abolished from this day, and that the new scale of customs consequent on this change come into operation simultaneously.

A FURIOUS GALE AT SURAT.—The city of Surat has again been visited by an awful calamity. On the 27th of August a furious gale sprang up, and the river Tapi continued to rise rapidly until the waters had swollen to a height of nine feet beyond the mark, of any former inundation. About twenty human lives have been lost and a great number of horses, cows and other cattle have been swept away by the river.

THE LATE PRIME MINISTER OF THE GUICOWAR.—Venkaram, the late Prime Minister of His Highness the Guicowar, has at last left Baroda, and proceeded to Aurangabad, with the intention of repairing ultimately to Bengal to appeal to the Supreme Government against the decision given in his case by the local authorities. It is said that disgusted with the treatment which he has received from the British Government, he is desirous of placing himself where their jurisdiction will not extend to him as a private individual.

THE BERENICE.—The Berenice has been a second time constrained to return to Bombay, after being seventeen days at sea and having compassed half the distance to Mocha, in consequence of having broken her main shaft and burnt her boiler. The injury is irreparable in India and an indent has been sent to England for a shaft in consequence.

BURMAH.

Authentic accounts from Akyab, to the 8th instant, intimate, that sickness still prevailed to a great extent at Kyouk Phyoo. In consequence of the death of Assistant Surgeon Sibbald, that station being entirely without medical assistance, the two medical gentlemen who accompanied the acting commandant of the local corps, to Akyab had been directed to proceed immediately to Kyouk Phyoo. Rumours of war had become rife; it was reported that the Burmese having brought their internal disputes to a settlement, intended to make a descent upon Arracan, after the rains. The acting commandant according to orders already published, had received instructions from Government to raise 400 men, thus doubling the strength of the local corps, and have them all ready by the cold weather in fighting trim. The battalion were, in consequence, out morning and evening at drill.

The new Woongyee, Lu-nyo, left Rangoon for Toung-oo on the 2nd July. The service on which he has been sent by the new king of Ava, is now stated to be the examination of all the country between Lower Pegu and Toung-oo and the taking an account of the number of armed men which can be assembled whenever necessary. He is then to establish himself at Toung-oo and, assemble and discipline, with the aid of 800 or 100 men, whom he has brought with him from Ava, all the stout men and rogues he can find there, and the district of Toungoo has always been famous for bold and lawless adventures. He is to block up the road leading from Maulmain towards Ava, and put a stop to the encroaching and flourishing trade which has of late years sprung up between Maulmain and the Burmese and Shan Provinces, via Toung-oo; and lastly, he is to keep an eye on both Rangoon and Maulmain. If the English desire war and advance from Rangoon, he is to act on the flank of the advancing force and threaten Maulmain.

One of the four prisoners who lately escaped from Maulmain has been delivered up to Mr. Blundel, the Commissioner, who arrived at Rangoon on the 15th of July and had an audience of the local authorities the next day.

PENANG.

Penang papers to the 12th of August have been received during the month, but their contents are not very interesting. The Black Jack, schooner, has been sent with letters from the Resident Councillor to the Rajah of Quedah, requesting his assistance to recover Mrs. Bresley and her attendants. The small pox had been raging in Penang, and Mr. Harris, an apothecary, had at length succeeded in obtaining good vaccine virus, which he was disseminating. A schism had taken place among the Roman Catholics; a portion of whom had been excluded from divine service by the priest, in consequence of having sent their children to a Protestant school to be educated!!

SINGAPORE.

Singapore journals to the 10th of August have been received during the week. The rajahs of Sulengore and Lingiu were on a visit to Singapore, and the pirates had again been committing depredations in the Straits, having captured a Borneo-trader. The Steamer Diana had made an unsuccessful cruise after them.

SUMMATRA.

The pressure of Europe news has prevented our paying much attention to the Singapore papers we received two days ago. The following Batavia news of the 13th of July, is from a correspondent of the Singapore Free Press:

The Dutch troops before Bonjal were taking active measures to reduce that fort—and the preparations that were going forward seemed to indicate that a great and final effort would soon be made. General CLAARENS had been superseded in the command of these forces by another officer, Major General COCHINS, who was understood to have blamed the proceedings of his predecessor in the former attack upon the fort of Bonjal—and he is reported to have commenced operations with his miners with the intention of blowing up the enemy's works.

"The Dutch steamer, Willem de Erst, which left Sourabaya on the 26th April last for Amboyna, had struck on the Lucepara Shoal, close to the Turtle Islands, and about 120 miles distant from her port of destination, after being eleven days out. She had on board the Governor of the Moluccas and his family with 150 troops for these islands. Being an old vessel she soon became a wreck, and all on board were compelled to seek safety on the shoal, on which however they were up to their knees in water when the tide rose to its highest. There were three boats belonging to the vessel, all of which were sent away by the Commander, with as many people on board as they could take.—one to go to Amboyna, another to Macassar, and a third, it is supposed, to Bouton. The two former made their voyage in safety—and the colonial ship Eric, as also a government schooner, were immediately despatched to bring away those who had been left on the shoal; but no further tidings as to their fate had reached Batavia. When the last of the three boats put away, those who of necessity remained on the shoal were engaged in making a raft, and there appeared cause to apprehend some misfortune having befallen them, as the few materials that had been left them could, it is said, scarcely have sufficed for the construction of a raft fit to transport such a number of people—when the distance of the only spot which they could expect to make was considered. The general opinion at Batavia appeared to be that the Commander of the vessel before he sent away the boats, should in the first place have made use of them in conveying all those intended to be left behind to the nearest Turtle Island, instead of leaving them exposed on a shoal which was flooded all over at high water. Our correspondent remarks that this accident would not in all likelihood have happened at all, had the Commander of the steamer been a country captain—experienced in the navigation of these seas. The Java Government, it appears, passed a law about three years ago, by which all persons not being natives of Holland or Burghers of Netherlands India, are prohibited from commanding on board of a Dutch vessel, and among those whom the law leaves qualified there is not always to be found one possessed of the desirable requisite of experience in the navigation of the Archipelago—a circumstance likely enough to lead to accidents which would not otherwise have occurred. It has thus often happened that a ship-owner who thinks experience more useful and available for the navigation of his vessel, than the legal qualification to command, is compelled to put on board some Burgher supernumerary as nominal commander, while the other is actual master. In the present case, the commander was a lieutenant in H. N. M. Navy, reported to be a skilful and clever seaman, without however having had experience in this country.

The Government had on board of the Willem de Erst, specie to the amount of 100,000 guilders, no part of which appears to have been saved; and as they had a large quantity of stores, &c, also on board, their total loss, including the vessel, is estimated at about 500,000 Rs."

PERSIA.

No material change has lately taken place in the aspect of affairs in Persia. The Shaw seems determined to disregard alike the voice of reason and of experience, and to involve his kingdom more and more deeply into difficulty and distress. While that kingdom, from mismanagement and misgovernment, is in a most distracted condition, requiring the best energies of the king and his ministers to preserve even the semblance of order, and to put it in the road to improvement, the resources of the country and the time of those to whom its interests are entrusted, are dissipated in carrying war into remote territories, thus leaving the kingdom a prey to those discontented and designing spirits which its present state of anarchy has created and fosters. Notwithstanding the advice of the British ambassador, and, also of the Russian, the Persian levies are to be directed against Khorrassan, and the king is in person to head them. The Governor of Isphahan, a man of high character, and allowed to be one of the most talented men in Persia, has been recalled from his Government and another appointed in his place, whose character and policy are congenial to the views and feelings of the Chief Moollah, and of the Ameen Addouls, who has been in sanctuary in the Moollah's house, and consequently protected, ever since the accession to the throne of the present prince. The reason assigned for this extraordinary act on the part of the king is, that the troops that would be necessary to suppress the rebellious disposition manifested at Isphahan, cannot be spared from the army for the contemplated expedition.

The imbecility of the present government is proved in the case of a person who had been appointed to the Government of Pehanan, having been imprisoned and afterwards put to death by the people he was sent to govern; yet no steps have been taken to punish the perpetrators of that act, or to vindicate the authority of the Government.

Our Ambassador at the Persian Court, continues to do the best he can for the protection of British interests; but our chief interest—our trade, is still at the mercy of the authorities for the time being. Every exertion has been used by the present representative, as by his predecessors, to secure a commercial treaty between the two countries; but all their labours in that behalf have been of no use, the existing understanding, as regards trade being liable to be set aside when it may suit the purpose of the Persians or their prompters, the Russians, to think it necessary to do so.

CHINA.

China papers to the 15th of July, have been received.

They represent the state of affairs in China to remain the same as at the date of our last intelligence. Some correspondence has occurred with the local Government anent the Hing-tas Hong, from which it appears that the Governor is well disposed to aid foreigners in the recovery of debts owing to them by the Hing-tse. The total deliveries of Opium during the months of April, May and June, was 6,153 chests; and the quotations were, for Patna per chest of old 810drs.; new 680 drs. Benares old 730drs.; new 655drs. Malwa 525 to 530drs. Turkey 520drs. Prices were on the decline.

LAC.—Shell Lac of ordinary quality has been engaged on English and American accounts at rather low prices. We have not heard of any transaction in DYE.

GRAIN.—The transactions during the week have been to a limited extent, and are reported for the Mauritius only. We notice no change in prices.

OPIMUM.—A few speculative purchases of Benares have been made during the week. Active shipments are in progress on the Antonio Pereira to leave this in a few days for China. Prices are quite nominal and are likely to remain so, till the arrival of the Water Witch and Cowajee Family now daily looked for.

MULS TWIST.—The prices of this article show a reduction of 3 to 6 pie per morah throughout the assortments.

Holdings have shown some disposition to force several parcels in the bazar at present prices.

TURKEY RED AND OTHER DYED YARNS.—Without sale.

WOOLLENS.—A few pieces of ordinary and Coarse Woollens have been sold, but without any improvement in prices.

COPPER.—We notice a further improvement on the prices of this metal. Sales during the week, however, have not been extensive.

STEEL.—Also without sale, and without alteration in prices.

LEAD.—No sale has been reported since our last. Pig lead is quoted at a shade of improvement.

SPELTER.—A sale has been effected, at reduced prices.

TIN PLATES.—Without report of sale, without change in prices.

QUICKSILVER.—Has further advanced in price, and remains in good enquiry.

FAREWELL ADDRESS TO SIR R. W. HORTON.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble Sir ROBERT WILMOT HORTON, Bart., G. C. H., Governor and Commander-in-Chief, &c. &c. &c.

We her Majesty's faithful and loyal subjects, the principal Burghers and Natives inhabiting the Districts of Jaffna, in the Northern Province of the Island of Ceylon, sensible of the benefits conferred on this part of her Majesty's Colonial Territories by the local Government under your Excellency's administration, and of the many advantages we enjoy in consequence of the enlightened and benevolent character of some of your Excellency's official acts, feel ourselves called upon to present, on the eve of your Excellency's departure from this Colony, our grateful acknowledgements. In doing this, we beg to assure your Excellency, that we are not influenced by any motives of a sinister kind, nor are we merely confirming to an accustomed practice; but we are actuated by a sense of obligation and a desire to convey to your Excellency the warm expression of our admiration of your Excellency's Public conduct as the Governor of this Island.

That we have the greatest reason gratefully to acknowledge our obligations to your Excellency, will best appear by some of the leading principles of your Excellency's administration, and the acts emanating from or embodying those principles are viewed with an impartial eye.

The most prominent features of your Excellency's enlightened Government have ever appeared to us to be liberality and official equity. From the principles in active operation we have been permitted to see a new era with regard to the mental improvement of every class of Her Majesty's subjects. It is true, that we do not participate at this distance from the metropolis, the higher advantages secured to the community by the higher means of instruction provided, but we hail the provision with delight, and are permitted to see elementary instruction imparted to the rising generation in the English language, and cherish the hope, that at some future period we shall be privileged to enjoy a greater provision here for perfecting those who may, in time be called to fill the various responsible offices at the disposal of the local Government.

That there is a necessity for the mental cultivation of Her Majesty's subjects appears to us the more urgent since, under a further development of the enlightened policy of the constitution of British empire, Burghers and natives are elevated to the higher situations of the Government. The very fact that Burghers and natives take their seats in the Legislative Council of this Island and that Burghers and native gentlemen are placed on the Judicial Bench, affords a sufficient stimulus to all who possess patriotic feelings, to wish for every means for the mental training of the young, and also to acknowledge the liberal and equitable character of the Government administered by your Excellency.

The Savings' Bank is an establishment which we view with the greatest pleasure, and its operation we are confident cannot fail greatly to benefit the community at large.

The Pension Fund is not less entitled to our approbation. In the one we see means at hand for the exertion of voluntary economy, and in the other security against those disastrous consequences which have too often succeeded to effluence in families bereaved of those through whom means of support were obtained.

We shall not enumerate the benefits we are sensible we have derived from your Excellency's benevolent administration, feeling persuaded, that your Excellency will more highly appreciate our silence than an attempt at a garnished statement of your Excellency's official conduct.

We beg in conclusion, your Excellency will be pleased to accept our unfeigned acknowledgments for all the benefits we have received, and continue to enjoy, under your Excellency's Government. We hope your Excellency will have a speedy and prosperous voyage to your native country, and that her Majesty's Government may be duly sensible of the beneficial efforts which have followed your Excellency's career as the Governor of the Island of Ceylon.

We beg to subscribe, with every mark of respect and esteem,

Your Excellency's most dutiful and Humble Servants,

HIS EXCELLENCY'S REPLY.

To the Principal Burghers and Natives inhabiting the District of Jaffna.

Mount-Lavinia, September 11, 1837.

Gentlemen,—Your Address, bearing date the 1st September, 1837, reached me yesterday; I had never received any intimation direct or indirect of your intention of addressing me.

I observed, with peculiar satisfaction, "the warm expression of your admiration" (but for which I would venture to substitute "approbation") "of my public conduct as the Governor of this Island."

You have explained, in such minute and impressive terms, the grounds upon which you have been led to consider the Government administered by me as being of "a liberal and equitable" character, that it would only be to weaken the sentiments you have so clearly expressed to offer any commentary upon them.

You appear to comprehend so completely the real nature and character of advantages which have been extended to the classes of Burghers and natives under the system of Government, the effects of which you have witnessed, that I feel no necessity to add one word in vindication of that system. But, it must not be forgotten, that the course of public conduct, which I have pursued, was prescribed to me by the liberal policy chalked out by His late Majesty's Confidential Ministers in 1832, and founded upon the report of the Commissioners of enquiry. I feel that I have done my duty in following up that policy in letter and in spirit; and to that extent I am conscious, that your favorable expressions are not misapplied. It is, at the same, time my duty to explain to you, how much I am indebted to the Members of the Executive Council, for the cordial co-operation which they have given me in working out the important problem of carrying on a Government, to use your own words, of "liberality and official equity" to all classes of the community. I have also derived the most valuable assistance from the members of the public service generally, and from no individual in a greater degree than from the energetic and enlightened agent to whom the more immediate administration of the northern province has, to your extreme advantage, been confided.

There is one circumstance in your address, which is peculiarly gratifying to me. It is the joint address of Burghers and natives united under the due appreciation of the benefits, which the classes to which they severally belong, have received during my administration.

In my answer to the address presented to me by the natives on the 8th January, 1836, I stated, that the extension of education would afford them "a complete opportunity of qualifying themselves for public stations and that a career was open to them, which could be frustrated by their negligence."

"You have been kind enough to express your hope, that I may have a speedy and prosperous voyage to my native country, and that the British Government may be duly sensible of the beneficial efforts which have followed my career as the Governor of the Island of Ceylon."

These are very flattering sentiments which I shall have great pride in communicating to the Secretary of State, and for which I beg to return you my most sincere thanks.

I remain, Gentlemen, your most obedient humble servant.

(Signed) R. W. HORTON.

Read a letter from R. Montgomery, Esq., to the Secretary, dated 12th September, (Azimghur), promising to send replies to the Agricultural Queries transmitted to him in a former letter. Asking for supplies of cotton, tobacco, clover, lucern, and guinea grass-seed. Speaks favorably of the Otaheite sugar-cane plants received from Jubbulpore, and planted out last cold season.

From D. F. MacLeod, Esq., of Seonee, dated Calcutta, September 18, presenting specimens of three varieties of country cotton, called "Munnooa," "Deo," and "Berar," and of the produce of Egyptian cotton-seed, received from this society in May 1836. Also, the flower and leaves of a large tree the growth of Seonee, the bark of which is said by the natives, to possess great febrifugal powers.

The Munnooa (green seeded) and the Deo (black-seeded) are stated by Mr. McLeod, to be perennial plants, yielding their cotton in the hot-weather, and not as the common country annuals, at the close of the rains. These varieties are planted by the natives near their dwellings, with a view to shelter, and the produce is chiefly used for making Brahmenical threads. The Munnooa, is also cultivated extensively in fields on the ranges east of Mirzapore. Mr. McLeod, regards these specimens, as very inferior, owing to the excessive rains which fell in that part of the district.

The Berar cotton, is sent merely as a subject in comparison, having been obtained from a native at Hingun Ghat. Mr. McLeod speaks favourably of the appearance of the Peruvian cotton plants, from seed also forwarded by this society, but the pods were not ripe when he left Seonee.

The flowers and leaves of a large tree also accompany this parcel. This tree is stated, according to tradition, to have been planted by a wandering suqueer, and its bark, as already observed, supposed to contain medicinal virtue.

From Dr. A. Campbell, dated Nipal, 5th September, 1837, presenting for the use of the Agricultural Society, a bottle of white clover seed from a crop grown by Mr.

Hodgeon. Dr. Campbell mentions the fact of the famous "Prangos" of Thibet, having seeded at Nipal.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 21st September, annexing an extract of a letter to his address, from H. Chamier, Esq., dated Madras, 6th September, 1837, in reference to Mr. Liddell's letter of the 10th of August, read at the last meeting of this society.

Mr. Chamier says, "I have lately introduced a new plough of a simple construction without coulter and exceedingly light, so much so, as to be easily drawn by two common bullocks, remarkably handy also, and turns over a very large quantity of soil. They are made at the Porto Novo works at ten rupees, without the wood-work, for which six rupees more are demanded. Our Government seeing what an efficient implement it is, has ordered 800 for distribution in the interior, and the Bombay Government has ordered 400. They should be widely introduced in Bengal."

From Dr. Wallich, dated 26th September, annexing extract of a letter from the Hon'ble Mr. Melville, dated Berhampore, 22d September.

"I send a few mangoes just ripening from two trees in a garden here, as Mr. Laidly tells me the fact of this September crop, however well known here, is new to you. He or I will try to send you some plants in the season."

From Dr. W. Montgomerie, dated Singapore, 31st August, acknowledging the receipt of the Secretary's letter of the 25th July, and in reference to it has been kind enough to forward by the Water Witch one hundred canes of the same kind as those already sent by the Guillardon.

Dr. Montgomery has not been able to ascertain any thing satisfactory relative to the origin of the canes grown at Singapore, "they form part of the Sea Stock of almost all native vessels, and, as we have communication with all the East by such means, we may have got them either from Siam, Borneo, Celebes, Java, or any other neighbouring country. The natives recognize the red or purple cane as the "Tuboo Malacca," pointing out Malacca as the place of origin, but they think the three light-coloured varieties, viz. "Tuboo Leab or Local, Tuboo Tetir and Tuboo Kapur have been introduced by the Buggese trader from the Eastern Islands, and in such case they may, most probably, be a variety of the Otaheite cane modified by the Malay, which may have been cultivated by the natives."

From W. Kerr Ewart, Esq., the Report of — Elliot, Esq., head assistant to the Collector of Salem, embodying many interesting details on the subject of experiments made with American cotton seed sent out by the Hon'ble Court of Directors some years ago, as well as much valuable information on tobacco, senna, and soils—grasses and sub-soils, chaya, and other dyes to be found in the talooks of Dharmapuri and Woomulur.

From Dr. Wallich to the Secretary, dated 2nd October, giving cover to a letter to his address from Captain Jenkins, of Assam, dated 21st September, forwarding two samples of lac, (stick lac), and suggesting, that they be handed over to Professor O'Shaughnessy for his opinion as to quality, and the distinguishing character of the lac, with reference to the tree on which the insect is fed.

From Charles Deverinae, Esq., some specimens of the Upland Georgian Cotton grown at Calipod, Jessore. The following memo, accompanies this cotton.

* Note by the Secretary. If these pods are from Upland Georgia seed, they are the finest I have ever seen; but I cannot believe them to be so; else has the staple improved. Without careful examination, I think they are from Egyptian Seed. J. B.

Season 1836-37.

If Mr. Deverinne will follow up this interesting experiment, and give the Society the result, when the crop has been taken off he will be rendering an essential service to the cause of improvement; and, we doubt not, from Mr. L. M. Deverinne's known accuracy and experience, that the Society will obtain what is so earnestly desired.

From Charles Deverinne, Esq., a very fine specimen of the "lime" fruit, taken from a tree transplanted by Mr. Rowe, of Channerundee Factory, in the same neighbourhood into his garden from the jungle, where it was growing spontaneously and producing limes of very diminutive size. By degrees, and fostered by attention, the bush has produced abundantly fruit of equal size as the specimen now presented. Nothing can be more encouraging to demonstrate how materially all indigenous fruits may be ameliorated by judicious pruning and management.

The following correspondence, between Mr. W. Griffith, an Assistant Surgeon on the Madras Establishment, and the Secretary, which was read at the last General Meeting, is now published as accompanied to the report of the committee of enquiry called to report on the subject of Mr. Griffith's remarks or charges.

No. 1.

To JOHN BELL, Esq.

Secy. of the Agri. and Horti. Society.

Sir,—I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your letter, informing me of my election as an ordinary member of the Society. For payment of the requisite sum, may I beg to refer you to Messrs. Willis and Earle.

For the remainder of this communication some apology is necessary, particularly, as I believe, a committee was appointed some time ago, to superintend the experimental garden allotted to the Society in the Botanic Garden; I trust, however, that I shall be excused for trespassing on the province of the Committee alluded to, whose report, I hear, was favorable. My only wish is, that several members will go, and examine the matter for themselves, as my own visit was attended with a decidedly unfavorable impression.

The garden or nursery is really in a condition unworthy of the Botanic Garden; it may, in fact, be considered to be a mere jungle, and the experiment to be, not to produce cotton, &c. of fine quality, but to ascertain how close plants can grow together, and to what degree of privation of free circulation of air they can submit from being closely surrounded by trees.

The cause of its bad state is, I conceive, that the committee place too much reliance on another quarter.

The remedy I would respectfully beg to suggest is, the placing the Nursery as far as may be possible, under existing circumstances, under the charge of Mr. Masters, whose merits as a theoretical and practical gardener are well known to all, and that in addition, Mr. Piddington be requested to become a member of the committee.

If, with the advantage of a Government Establishment, the Society's experimental garden fails so signally, I would respectfully beg to suggest the propriety of renting some land, where, at any rate, the society could act without any clog to its movements.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WILLIAM GRIFFITH.

Member of the Agricultural Society.

Calcutta, Aug. 24, 1837.

P. S. I anticipated the pleasure of bringing this subject to the notice of the Society personally, but I am prevented from doing so, by being obliged to leave Calcutta immediately for Assam.

No. 2.

To WILLIAM GRIFFITH, Esq.

Sir,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, referring me to Messrs. Willis and Earle, for the payment of your subscription to the Society, which shall be duly observed.

2. Adverting to the latter part of your communication, I beg leave to offer some explanation which may or may not remove what appears to me, the erroneous impression you have adopted of the Society's intentions in regard to its maintenance of a Nursery situated within the boundary of the Hon'ble Company's Botanical Garden. After which, should you still consider it desirable, I shall, of course, submit, at the next general meeting, your letter, with a copy of this address.

3. You are correct in your belief, that a Committee was appointed some years ago, to superintend operations in the quarter alluded to, and you are also correct in having heard, that the last report of the Committee was, (as all their reports have been) "favorable," favorable inasmuch as the direct objects of the Society are concerned.

4. But you are not correct in calling the Society's Nursery an "experimental garden," and this confusion of terms has probably led you to arrive at the conclusion, that the Committee have betrayed the trust reposed in them, by the Society; for, if it can be said, that the Nursery is in a condition unworthy of the Society, it follows, as a matter of course, that the Committee have been lax in their duty, and merit the imputation which is conveyed in your remarks of their proceedings; and I am quite sure, that my colleagues, will be as scrupulously anxious to court public opinion, as I shall be to place the question beyond the slightest doubt.

5. The creation of the Society's Nursery emanated from a suggestion of mine, communicated in a letter to the President, which was read at a General Meeting on the 9th March, 1836, which had for its object, the renting of a parcel of ground to the extent of six beegahs, to be fenced in and dug for the reception of Ostia sugar-cane, then expected from the Mauritius, for the purpose of increasing the stocks before distribution to applicants throughout the interior; but the President observed, that although the necessity of having some available ground for the purpose was indisputable, some objection might be raised on the score of expense, as ground so situated (I wanted it near Calcutta) would require to be well fenced and constantly watched. This objection was met by the suggestion of several members present, who, with reference to the perfect willingness expressed by the Superintendent of the Botanical Gardens, before the departure of that gentleman for Assam, not only to spare room in the vicinity of the garden, but to give the Society the benefit of his general supervision, should they desire it. The meeting resolved, that I, as Secretary, should place myself in communication with Mr. Grant, then acting Superintendent, and solicit a portion (six beegahs) for the purpose above alluded to; and that Mr. Masters, who was present, and offered his aid on behalf of the undertaking, should be requested to point out a plot and favor the Society with an estimate of the probable cost of maintaining it in proper condition. It further appears in the proceedings of the 13th April, 1836, that I had met Mr. Masters to whom I was referred by Mr. Grant, who met the Society's wishes and pointed out a parcel of ground, which in Mr. Masters's opinion was well suited for the purpose, and which he stated, had been the site of Dr. Roxborough's experimental garden.

Having concurred in this arrangement the nucleus of the present nursery was formed by two sugarcanes, the only ones alive, out of 100 canes received from Bombay, (vide Mr. Masters's letter to me of 25th April.)

Our expected supplies of cane from the Mauritius were lost with the vicissitude the vessel in which a large assortment had been shipped, and we were equally disappointed in our expectations from Lucknow, the canes sent by Dr. Stevenson having arrived parched up, and all the eyes rubbed off.

The ground having been prepared at a considerable expense, the Committee conceived, that it might be applied to other useful purposes, and it was accordingly resolved in Committee to apply it to the reception of all seeds and plants arriving out of season, to secure, if possible, the produce, even under the disadvantage of planting out of season, which would otherwise in all probability be lost to the country.

In accordance with this resolution, three descriptions of American cotton seeds received through the agency of Dr. Hufnagle, were received about the latter end of last September. I do not know the exact dates of planting, but it must have been shortly after this that some of each was sown in the nursery. On the 10th December, when the Committee visited the nursery, this cotton seed had been planted out into rows, and with reference to the lateness of the season were reported to be most vigorous. From this plantation the Committee expected to derive "an abundant supply of seed to secure, which is now a great desideratum."

At a General Meeting of the Society on the 12th ultimo, Mr. Masters submitted ten seeds of Upland Georgia, and four seeds of New Orleans cotton seed, the produce of the Society's nursery, I believe, the produce of seeds imported through Dr. Hufnagle, for I have not data by me.

Thus, it seems, that the objects of the Society run counter with your opinion, for the Committee never dreamed of planting cotton seed with a view to experimenting on its quality, the Society having long before given to the public their report upon experiments carried on at Akra. The views of the Committee were directed to securing seed to distribute, seeing that much disappointment had attended former attempts to introduce on a large scale the American cotton, from the difficulty experienced of procuring it in a sufficiently fresh condition, and with these facts before me, I feel that the remarks you have made are misapplied, and contain reflections upon the efforts of the Committee which I hope this explanation will tend to remove; not that I desire to blink enquiry, for the Reports of the Committee, from first to last, having been drawn up by me, I feel anxious for the most unqualified expression by other Members as to their accuracy; and, should this letter not be entirely satisfactory, I shall consider it my duty to second your proposal to invite members to judge for themselves, and I mistake the character of my colleagues, if they will not be equally anxious to wipe off the imputation which you have cast upon them.

6. The remedy you have been pleased to suggest, is, if I mistake not, now in full force; the charge of the nursery has been with Mr. Masters from the beginning, and he has had the thanks of the Committee recorded on several occasions for his exertions on bringing it to its present state, which, in my humble opinion, is not a single, but well calculated to secure the ends for which it was designed; viz. the augmentation of our sugar cane stock, and the maintenance of vitality of such seeds and plants, as arrive out of season; which are frequently lost to the country, from being kept until the proper season of sowing such seeds is supposed to have arrived.

No. 3.

To JOHN BELL, Esq., Secy. A. Society.

Sir,—After reading the address with which you favored me on the 26th instant, I beg to say that my opinions remain unaltered.

It would seem, that the principal error I have committed, consists in mistaking the Society's nursery for an experimental garden.

Your remarks have not convinced me that care is not necessary in order to procure the best sorts of seeds, the quality of which will depend very considerably upon the healthy constitution of the individuals from which they are derived. Such, indeed, it is impossible to obtain, in my opinion, unless the nursery undergoes a considerable alteration for the better.

I have not the pleasure of knowing any member of the Committee appointed by the society to report upon the condition of the nursery, but if these gentlemen are not professed Agriculturists, it cannot, I presume, be construed into a reproach that they should have been mistaken in the matter; more especially, as they may have naturally conceived the situation of the plants in a Botanic Garden to be a sufficient guarantee for their proper treatment.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. GRIFFITH, Member.

Calcutta, 29th August, 1837.

P. S.—Should you consider it necessary to read your address to the Society at its next meeting, may I request that you will read the present communication also.

This ends the correspondence, and in accordance with a resolution passed at the September General Meeting of this society, a Committee of "enquiry" was appointed, whose reports upon the accuracy of Mr.

Griffith's charges, as read by Mr. Cracroft, is as follows :

REPORT.

Proceedings of a Committee of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, held at the Town Hall of Calcutta, on the 29th September, 1837.

1st. The Members of this Committee delegated by the Society to examine and report a further state of their nursery, in the Honorable Company's Botanical Garden, in consequence of the management thereof having been impugned in a letter from Mr. Griffith, a member of the Society, met this day, at 12 o'clock (with the exception of Mr. Piddington and Mr. Hurry) having honourably at various times visited the nursery.

2. The Members of the Committee unanimously concurred in the following remarks :—The cotton plants had been put in the ground originally, at the distance of 3 feet and upwards, in some few places where the seed has failed, the plants are at greater distance ; but, the Committee observed, that no particular benefit had been derived by the plants, thus accidentally supplied additional space. The ground was perfectly free from weeds, &c. and in every respect well attended to, and the plants altogether in a healthy and flourishing condition. The Otaheite sugarcane was in the most flourishing state, as well as the mulberry plants from cuttings of various sorts, also the vanilla, caloo hemp, ginger, and other plants in the nursery.

A large piece of ground has also been trenched from end to end ; is in a most perfect state for the reception of future importations.

3d. The members of this Committee are of opinion, that the thriving state of the garden in general, and particularly the sugarcane and cotton plants, fully demonstrate, that Mr. Griffith must have fallen into some great error, or viewed through a distorted medium, not only the state of the garden, but also the intentions and views of those gentlemen more especially engaged in superintending it. The members of this Committee have also resolved, that instead of too great a reliance having been placed in any "particular quarter," or the exertions of the Society having been clogged (in regard to which expressions of Mr. Griffith this Committee think proper to express both their surprise, regret and disapprobation,) they, on the contrary, earnestly recommend, that the implicit confidence hitherto reposed in the Nursery Committee, be continued, if possible, more firmly than hitherto. The Committee have further ascertained, that instead of any thing like a "clog" existing, a cordial co-operation and reciprocal interchange of opinions and an uniformity of views have subsisted between those, whose immediate superintendence and management have been the cause of the present flourishing condition of the nursery.

4th. The members of this Committee feel themselves called upon to declare, that on a very close examination of the garden, nothing came under their notice to palliate, much less to warrant or justify, the imputations and insinuations contained in the letter referred to them for consideration.

5th. Finally, the members of this Committee are happy to have it in their power to state their opinion, that the Society have nothing further to wish for, than that those gentlemen who have already paid so much praiseworthy care and attention to the objects confided to them, will continue to bestow their valuable aid in forwarding the views under which this Nursery was established, viz. to raise seeds and nurse plants received at seasons unfavorable for their distribution, and to preserve the produce of the garden until proper seasons and favorable opportunities for distributing the benefits of it may occur, and the committee on their own part, express their hope that the present members of the Nursery Committee will not permit any unpleasant feelings which may have arisen, from finding their conduct and motives thus unnecessarily impugned by a single individual to induce them to discontinue their meritorious and valuable exertions.

The report having been read and listened to with every demonstration of satisfaction on the part of the meeting, the Hon'ble Colonel Reihling proposed, and was seconded by Dr. Jackson, that the report of the Committee of enquiry be confirmed which was carried unanimously.

2nd. Proposed by Sir E. Ryan, and unanimously resolved, that the Secretary be requested to send Mr. Griffith a copy of this report.

3rd. Proposed by Professor O'Shaughnessy, and unanimously assented to by the meeting, that the correspondence which led to the formation of the Committee of enquiry, together with the report, be published at full length.

4th. Proposed by Mr. Cracroft, seconded by Sir E. Ryan, that the society do request the members of the Nursery Committee to continue their labors, carried unanim.

The President here addressed the meeting at some length, observing that on the subject of Mr. Griffith's charge being brought forward, he had adopted that course which he conceived, would afford the greatest satisfaction, to both the gentlemen who had impugned the committee, and to the members who composed it. It had certainly been mentioned by several members at the last meeting that the charge appeared unworthy of so much attention, but he thought otherwise. Mr. Griffith was known to many of the Indian community as a gentleman, whose opinion might be considered deserving of every respect, and however unpleasant to the feelings of the Committee, he (the President), was anxious to place the question at rest on such grounds, as could admit of no subsequent doubt, and the issue was such as to enable him, on the report of an independent and unbiased body of gentlemen to congratulate the members of the Nursery Committee, in the assurance of the utmost confidence in their past exertions, while the only individual who might feel uncomfortable as to the result, would be Mr. Griffith himself.

Dr. Wallich rose to express on his own behalf as well as that of his colleagues in the Nursery Committee, their entire satisfaction with the report that had just been read. He begged to return their best thanks for the patient investigation that had been entered into, and which had more particularly implicated him in the charge made against the management which called for his thanks in an especial manner.

Mr. Bell expressed himself to the same effect. The President then alluded directly to the Committee's continuing their services, when Dr. Wallich observed, that after what he had expressed it was hardly necessary to assure the meeting that the Nursery Committee would continue their labors with unabated zeal, as they had the interests of the Society, and those only at heart.

Dr. Wallich's motion to offer a premium for the importation of the true cochineal insect in a living state from any part of the world, was brought forward and carried. Mr. Prinsep who had seconded the proposition, having been asked and consented to add, which to obviate mistakes in bringing any other than the domesticated coecas (for particulars vide last month's proceedings).

Mr. E. Sterling's motion to present Major Sleeman with the Society's gold medal as a slight acknowledgment of the estimation in which the exertions of that gentleman was held, for his public spirit in introducing and distributing largely the Otaheite sugar-cane brought by him from the Mauritius, was next in the list.

Mr. Sterling adverted at some length to the zeal and disinterested motives which had prompted Major Sleeman to make such a sacrifice of his time and means, for the benefit of this country, quoting several passages from the transactions of this Society, in proof of the undeniable success of his endeavours, and after enlogizing in emphatic terms, the example so nobly set by this gentleman, hoped that his motion would meet the unanimous voice of the Society at large, (Mr. E. Sterling spoke so low, that we could not gather more of his address.)

Mr. A. Colvin, heartily seconded this motion; it was a very inadequate acknowledgement for all Major Sleeman had done, nevertheless it was a proof which could not be but gratifying to Major Sleeman, of the estimation in which he was held by this Society, as a public benefactor, and as one of its most zealous members.

Received with applause, and resolved unanimously, that Major Sleeman be presented with the gold medal accompanied by the sentiments of the Society.

The following notices of motions were read and handed to the Secretary to bring up at next meeting.

1st. Proposed by Dr. Jackson, seconded by Mr. Bell.

"That in order to afford the fullest means of information to the members of the different Committee on the subject of their various researches and matters of enquiry, that each Committee be furnished with the best standard works in their particular departments and that the members of each Committee be invited to prepare a list of such works as they may think it advisable to have access to for consultation on occasions of reference, and to submit such list for the consideration of the Society at the next meeting."

(Ordered to be submitted to the Committee of papers.)

2nd. Proposed by Captain Carter, seconded by Mr. Cracroft.

"That a reward of 500 rupees and the gold medal be awarded to any person who shall successfully domesticate in the plains, any indigenous (or wild) honey bees, or introduce the species already domesticated in the mountains to the north and north east, or import the European or any other foreign honey bee. It will be required that the claimant shall satisfy the Society that the experiment has been successfully continued for more than one year, and not less than three full hives be shown, obtained by second swarming from the domesticated or imported hives, and that he shall furnish a particular report of the method by which he arrived at the successful result.

(Referred to the Committee of - ?)

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be given for all the foregoing papers and presentations.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society, held at the Asiatic Society's Apartments, the 14th October, 1837.

Letters from the following gentlemen were read :

From D. S. Young, Esq., Nizam's Service ; F. Fleming, Esq., Civil Surgeon Shajehanpoor, and W. Charters, Esq., Surgeon 61st Regt. N. I., requesting that their names might be withdrawn from the Society.

From Dr. Wallich, presenting on behalf of Mr. Desjardins, the 7th Annual Report of the Natural History Society of the Mauritius.

From Dr. Morehead, presenting copies of the proceedings of the Bombay Medical Society.

From Dr. Keinnis, of Ceylon, forwarding a letter which he has published upon vaccination in that Island.

From T. H. Gardiner, requesting that the Society would afford some pecuniary assistance to the sister-in-law of the late Dr. Burlini, as she was totally dependent upon the latter for support, and had been left in very indigent circumstances by his death.

The subject was referred to the Committee of Management.

The Secretary having communicated officially the death of the late librarian, the question of appointing a successor became the subject of some debate; finally it was proposed by Dr. Ranken, seconded by Dr. Stewart,

That as in the case of the museum, the library should be transferred to the charge of the Medical College.

It was stated that the expense of a librarian would thus be saved, and that the books would be more generally useful than they are at present, whilst the professors of the College offered, in case of such an arrangement being effected, to open the extensive library of that institution to the Members of the Society. At the same time the professors undertook on behalf of the College to return the books should they at any time be called on to do so by the Society.

As Dr. Corbyn objected to this proposition, it remained to be ballotted for at the next meeting.

The subject of free postage then came under discussion, and it was proposed by Dr. Stewart, seconded by Dr. O'Shaughnessy.

That the Society request of the Medical Board, as patrons of the Society, to exercise in their favor the privilege accorded to them by the New Post Office Regulations, by franking such part of the correspondence of the Society as may appear to them essential to the interests of the profession in India.

Mr. P. B. Lord's memoir on the plains on the Indus was then read and discussed.

MADRAS STEAM MEETINGS.

The Petitions and Memorials of the Inhabitants of Madras, were confined to the grand object of establishing a monthly communication between Britain and India, by the Red Sea, by means of Steam Vessels, and while they suggested Point de Galle as the most eligible place for the arrival and departure of the Steam Packets, they expressly submitted the details to the wisdom of Parliament, His Majesty's Ministers, and the East India Company. In the letter of instructions to their Agent, Captain Grindlay, however, it was explained, that though the Petitions had been confined for the present to this primary object, the inhabitants of Madras never would be satisfied until Steam Communication should be extended to the several Presidencies; and that they had recommended Point de Galle as the main Steam Port, chiefly in consideration of its convenience as the centre for branch communication to Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay. This ulterior object the Agent was distinctly instructed to keep in view in discussing the subject.

The late advices from home have satisfied us that the Honorable Court of Directors have, in concert with His Majesty's Ministers, taken efficient measures for accomplishing the first great object, and that a regular monthly communication between Britain and India, by the way of the Red Sea, may be considered as ensured. The chief request of the inhabitants of Madras, as expressed in their Petitions and Memorials, has thus been complied with. And we have great encouragement to hope that the ulterior measure which their Agent was instructed to advocate as necessary to render Steam Communication between Britain and India complete, will also be accomplished. For, we find, that Sir J. Hobhouse, the President of the India Board, has declared himself to be "convinced that any plan which does not embrace a communication by Steam Packets with Madras and Calcutta, as well as with Bombay, will entirely fail to give public satisfaction, and to fulfil the just expectations of the people both of England and India," and, has stated, that a project is under consideration by which he thinks "it will be very possible, and indeed very easy, to obtain all the objects which are sought for by a more extended plan of communicating with the three Presidencies by means of Steam," and which it is his "hope and conviction" "will finally receive the consent of the Court, and that within no long time the Home authorities will be able to communicate to the public and Indian Government, that it has been altogether decided upon."

The Committee have carefully examined the estimate lately prepared by the Court of Directors, of the cost of establishing Steam Communication between Suez and Bombay, to ascertain whether the plan might not be extended so as to embrace all the Presidencies without involving an expense greatly exceeding what they are prepared to lay out for that confined purpose, and they submit the following observations on the subject.

The Court of Directors, it appears, have agreed to maintain four Steamers for the purpose of keeping up a monthly communication between Bombay and Suez. Their estimate of the cost amounts to 88,000*l.* per annum. In giving in this estimate to the Select Committee of the House of Commons, Sir J. Hobhouse observed, that it was considered to be rather over than under what the cost is likely to be. It appears to the Committee that it is under in excess. In the first place, the estimate provides for the four Steamers as if they were all to be in actual employment; whereas, it is to be inferred, that the plan is to keep only three Vessels at work, and the fourth as a spare Vessel to be used occasionally in place of one of the others, which may be disabled, or may require repairs.

The annual charges of one sea-going vessel, exclusive of coals, are estimated as follows:—

Interest on Capital sunk at 4 per cent.	£ 1,200
Insurance on do. at 5 per cent. per annum	1,500
Allowance for annual deterioration by wear and tear of Hull, Engines, and Boilers.....	2,317
	5,017
Repairs,	1,500
Establishment and Victualling,.....	5,000
	11,517

Now it is obvious, that a spare vessel will not require an establishment and victualling, on this account therefore a deduction of 5,000*l.* may be made from the estimate for the fourth vessel; and it will surely be ample to allow for deterioration and repairs of one half of the allowance for a sea-going vessel; here, then, a further deduction may be made of 1,908*l.*; reducing the estimate for the spare vessel from 11,517*l.* to 4,609*l.* Hence, it appears, that the cost of the four Steamers, three working, and one at rest, exclusive of coals, will not, upon the data assumed by the Court of Directors, be more than 39,160*l.*, instead of

46,068 l. the amount of their Estimate, the reduction being 6,908 £	Revised Estimate. £ 11,517 3 Working Steamers 34,551 4,609 for 1 spare Steamer 39,160	Estimate of the Court of Directors. £ 11,517 4 46,068 39,160 Reduction 6,908
--	---	--

In the article of coals in the present estimate of the Court or Directors, the expense is reckoned at much less than in the former one; but it still appears to be rated far too high. It was stated in the Appendix to the Madras Memorial that from accounts of actual transactions furnished by the Mercantile Houses here, it appeared that 30*s.* per ton might be taken as a fair average price for coals in India, and it was assumed that 60*s.* would be a sufficient price in the Red Sea. Doctor Lardner estimates that the price in India in the event of Steam Navigation being permanently established would be 23*s.* per ton, and could not exceed double that price, or 50*s.* on the average, at Socotra, Camaran, and Suez. The Court of Directors however have calculated the price in India at 45*s.* and in the Red Sea at 80*s.*; and supposing 1-4th of the coal required to be supplied in India, and 3-4ths in the Red Sea, and making the large allowance of 20 per cent.

for wastage and a considerable allowance for the expense of transhipment, &c. the whole cost is estimated at £41,932 for 12 months' consumption.

But the experience of the period which has elapsed since our former estimate was made, the Committee understand, has proved that 30s. is, as was assumed, fair average price for coal in this part of India; and they see no reason to doubt that 60s. will, when there is a certain demand, command the supply required in the Red Sea. Ac-

It is to be observed that in the above calculations, the Committee have taken the same data as the Court of Directors, except with respect to the price of coals. But in their new estimate which the Committee have followed, the Court have made the charge for insurance and the allowance for deterioration by wear and tear, considerably higher than in their former one, with which Doctor Lardner's estimate corresponds in these particulars.

There will remain then out of the sum of 88,000*l.* which it appears the Court of Directors have agreed to appropriate to the maintenance of Steam Communication between Suez and India, a surplus of 16,656*l.* not required to keep up the communication with Bombay, which it may be safely assumed, the Honorable Court will not refuse to apply to promote the great object of extending the communication to the other Presidencies. Of this, according to the Court's estimate, 11,517*l.* will be sufficient to keep up another Steam vessel with the necessary establishment in complete working order, and there will remain 5,139*l.* for coals. Now, a Steam vessel passing between Calcutta and Point de Galle by

It will remain only to provide a Steam vessel for the * Aspare steamer being already provided passage between Ceylon and Socotra to complete the comprehensive plan recommended by Dr. Lardner in his able pamphlet, embracing all the three Presidencies and the Island of Ceylon. The whole cost according to the above estimate for 5 working vessels and 1 spare one will be £1,09,735, viz.

Estimate for communication between Suez and Bombay..... 88,000

Difference.. 21,735

Thus it appears that an extended scheme of Steam Communication, embracing all the three Presidencies and the Island of Ceylon, may be carried into effect, at a cost exceeding, by only one-fourth the expense which the Court of Directors are prepared to incur for keeping up the communication with Bombay alone.

Dr. Lardner's estimate makes the whole cost of the same establishment only 92,200*l.*, or 17,535*l.* less than the estimate now framed; the difference is chiefly in the cost of fuel, the price of which, as before noticed, he estimates at 25s. per ton in India, and 50s. in the Red Sea.

If the above calculations be found correct, they will afford strong ground for inducing the Home Authorities to make the scheme of Steam Communication complete, when it can be done at so little additional cost to the State; and, it may be safely affirmed, that it will increase the returns in a degree far more than sufficient to compensate for that extra expense. Indeed, until it is extended to the comprehensive scheme contemplated, no correct estimate can be framed of the returns. For, when a certain regular, secure, and speedy passage by Steam to and from all the Presidencies in India is provided at a cost as cheap at least, and, probably, cheaper than the tedious and comparatively hazardous passage round the Cape of Good Hope, there appears no reason to doubt that it will be generally preferred. To invalids and children who constitute the majority of passengers from India the quickest mode of transit to the climate which they are seeking for the sake of health, when it is also the easiest and safest, and, probably, the cheapest, will always be preferable; and not only is it likely that a majority of the present number of passengers to and from India will, in future, use the Steam Vessels, if the communication reaches to all the Presidencies; but, it may be expected, that the aggregate number of passengers will be augmented. India will, probably, have more visitors from Europe; and, it is not improbable, that the quickness and facility of the passage will induce even natives of India, who have hitherto scarcely ventured upon a voyage to Europe, to avail themselves of it.

The Committee recommend that a public meeting be held to consider the subject, and they would suggest that memorials be addressed to the Court of Directors and the President of the India Board, expressing the thanks of the inhabitants of Madras for what has been already done, whereby a very great benefit has been conferred on the Indian Community in the acceleration of correspondence; acknowledging the liberality with which the strong desire of the public for the extension of Steam Communication, so as to embrace all the Indian Presidencies, has been regarded at home; and, earnestly praying, that their "just expectations" in this respect, may be fulfilled.

The Committee cannot close their report without declaring their opinion, that Captain Grindlay, the Agent, appointed by the inhabitants of Madras, for promoting their views in this matter, has perfectly fulfilled his instructions, and is entitled to their best thanks for his services.

Madras Steam Committee, Sept. 21, 1837.

[Conservative, September 23.]

A Public Meeting of the inhabitants of Madras was held at the College Hall this morning to take into consideration the Report of the Madras Steam Committee. The Meeting was not so fully attended as on some former occasions, but we noticed the Chief Justice, the Honorable Mr. Sullivan, Sir P. Maitland, Major Derville, Mr. McDonnell, Mr. Lane, Mr. Key, Mr. Maclean, Mr. Bruce, Capt. Dalrymple, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Barrow, Mr. Ouchterlony, Major Kitson, Capt. Justice, Mr. S. Sam, Mr. Sam, Mr. Scott, Mr. Fullerton, Mr. Smythe, Capt. Freshfield, Mr. Sewell, Mr. Ashton, Mr. J. Arbuthnot, Mr. Cator, Chocapah Chitty, Colunda Moodiler, Ragavah Charryah, Mr. A. J. Maclean, Mr. Cropley, Dr. Wight, Mr. D. Elliot, and Mr. Waddell, &c. &c.

Sir R. B. Comyn, having been requested to take the Chair,

Mr. Cator read the Report of the Steam Committee.

Proposed by the Hon. Mr. Sullivan, Seconded by Sir P. Maitland, and carried unanimously.

Resolution 1.—Resolved, that the thanks of this Meeting be given to the Committee for the report now read.

Proposed by Mr. J. Arbuthnot, seconded by Mr. W. Ashton, and carried with one dissentient voice.

Resolution 2.—That this Meeting view with surprise and disappointment the conduct of William Crawford, Esq., M. P. for the City of London, who having undertaken to present to the House of Commons a petition of the inhabitants of Madras, has neither done so, nor afforded any explanation which can lead this Meeting to view such proceedings on his part in any other light than that of a most unjustifiable neglect of the trust committed to Mr. Crawford by the inhabitants of Madras which he had accepted.

Proposed by Mr. Bruce, seconded by J. Scott, and carried unanimously.

Resolution 3.—Resolved that the Chairman of the Committee be requested to convey to the Commissioners for the affairs of India and the Court of Directors, the thanks of the inhabitants of Madras, for the establishment of a Monthly Steam Communication with Great Britain and India.

Proposed by Sir P. Maitland, seconded by Mr. A. D. Campbell, and carried unanimously.

Resolution 4.—Resolved, that the thanks of this Meeting are particularly due to the President of the India Board for his most gratifying and unqualified support of the comprehensive scheme.

Proposed by Captain Dalrymple, seconded by Mr. P. Cator, and carried unanimously.

Resolution 5.—Resolved that it is the opinion of this Meeting that as the British Government and the East India Company have actually consented to incur the expense of a Monthly Communication between England and Bombay, its extension to Madras, Ceylon and Calcutta may now be looked upon, not as an additional expense to the established plan, but as its most powerful auxiliary in a financial point of view, and this Meeting are fully convinced, that the returns from the passengers, parcels, &c. by an extension of the present plan to Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta, will not only cover the expense of such extension, but will, in all probability, leave a surplus to be applied in diminution of the present sanctioned expenditure for communication with Bombay.

The Memorial to the Court of Directors having been read by Mr. D. Elliot.

Proposed by Mr. D. Elliot, seconded by Mr. Sullivan, and carried unanimously.

Resolution 6.—Resolved, that Memorials to the Commissioners for the Affairs of India and the Court of Directors be prepared (accompanied by a copy of the Committee's Report) pressing upon these authorities in the most earnest manner the extension of their plan so as to embrace a communication by Steam with Madras and Calcutta as well as Bombay.

Proposed by Mr. A. D. Campbell, and seconded by Mr. P. Cator.

That subject to explanation respecting his publication of erroneous documents, the thanks of this Meeting are due to Captain Grindlay for his valuable services in promoting the cause of Steam Communication between England and India, and that the Steam Committee be empowered to make to him out of the funds placed at their disposal by the inhabitants of Madras, a suitable remuneration for his services.

Moved as an Amendment by Mr. Ouchterlony, seconded by Mr. A. R. McDonnell, and carried by a majority.

Resolution 7.—Resolved, that the thanks of this Meeting are due to Capt. Grindlay for his valuable services in promoting the cause of Steam Communication between England and India, and that the Steam Committee be empowered to make to him out of the funds placed at their disposal by the inhabitants of Madras, a suitable remuneration for his services.

Proposed by Mr. P. Cator, seconded by Mr. J. Arbuthnot, and carried by a majority.

Resolution 8.—That the thanks of this meeting are due to Capt. Barber and Major Head for their great exertions in the cause of Steam Communication, and this Meeting renews the pledge given at the Meeting of the 23d of January last, to support by taking shares in any Joint Stock Company possessing a charter which shall be formed in England under the auspices of the Committee of which Major Head is Chairman, for the accomplishment of a scheme of Steam Communication which shall secure to Madras the advantage of a direct communication from the Red Sea, and that with a view to ascertain the probable amount which the Madras Community will contribute in aid of such an undertaking, the Committee be requested to circulate a subscription list, in which, parties may insert the sum to the extent of which they will take shares, subject on the part of such of the Officers of Government as are restricted from trade, to the sanction of the Government in this respect, which there can be little doubt will be granted.

Proposed by Mr. J. Ouchterlony, seconded by Mr. J. Scott, and carried unanimously.

Resolution 9.—That the Chairman of the Meeting be requested to forward the memorial to the President of the India Board, with an assurance that as Sir John Hobhouse is of opinion "that it will be very possible and indeed very easy to obtain all the objects which are sought for by a more extended plan of communicating with the three Presidencies by means of Steam", the inhabitants of Madras trust, the President of the India Board will never relax his exertions to obtain the completion of this extended plan, which will be hailed by all Her Majesty's subjects in this part of India, with the most lively satisfaction."

Proposed by Mr. D. Elliot, seconded by Mr. A. D. Campbell, and carried unanimously.

Resolution 10.—That the thanks of the Meeting be given to the Chairman for his obliging conduct in the Chair.—Madras Herald, Oct. 7.

The Steam Meeting on Saturday went off well. The resolution relative to Mr. Crawford was greatly modified in conformity to the general feeling, and any expression of thanks to Captain Grindlay deferred till the receipt of his explanation should allow the matter to be discussed at a more appropriate season. The only point respecting which considerable difference may remain is on the 8th resolution, and it is an additional reason for regretting that the whole of these, as originally proposed by the Committee, did not gain a much earlier publication. As it was, few, we suspect, gave themselves the trouble to examine the real drift and tendency of this resolution, which we are sorry to find is in reality a divergence from that Bengal scheme, which is now seeking the demonstrative and of an ample subscription list. There was some reason perhaps for our community being little flattered or content with the course of proceeding adopted by the Bengal people, but none sufficiently strong in our opinion not to be overcome by the consideration that action in unison will form at the present moment our strongest weapon of offence. We do not gather our notion of the feeling of many at this presidency from what transpired at the meeting on the subject for little more was there spoken than the actual resolution itself, but from what we have subsequently ascertained. The desire appears to be to have the Madras list for subscribers willing to support a Joint Stock Association towards the furtherance of a comprehensive scheme (while in that form at least) distinct from the one now being circulated at Calcutta. This wish arises from an idea (but an exaggerated if not mistaken one we humbly conceive it to be) that we shall be able to act a more independent part when the matter is brought to a decision; and from a dissatisfaction felt at the want of consideration shewn by the Bengal Steam Committee towards our community in seeking a private agency, however highly respectable as that agency is, to further their particular scheme, when there existed a public organ of that community corresponding to themselves, our Steam Committee, whose co-operation should most naturally have been the first object of their direct solicitation. It has been argued from the latter circumstance that the identity of our interests with those of Bengal promises to be made more a matter of convenience in their arrangements, than to ensure its due appreciation in reference to the claims and importance of our presidency. We are sorry that the Bengal Committee have furnished a ground for this opinion, which can only tend to retard our cordially working together, like those who feel they are in pursuit of an object in which they have a common interest. The deed is, however, completed; the rival subscription lists are now or will immediately be abroad, and we are therefore only left to regret it the more because we cannot see that the division will tend to do other than weaken Bengal without strengthening Madras.—Madras Herald, October 11.

AUSTRALIAN ASSOCIATION MEETING.

At a respectable and well attended Meeting of the Australian Association at the Town Hall this-morning, Edward Stirling, Esq., in the chair.

The report of the Committee was read and adopted by the Meeting with a few verbal alterations.

It was proposed by Mr. M. Manuk and seconded by Mr. Wm. Smith,

"That a letter having been sent to the Committee to be laid before the Meeting, regarding a ship tendered to the Association, it be resolved, that the acceptance or rejection of ships rest with the committee."

Proposed by Mr. Nott and seconded by Mr. Alexander.

"That a subscription book be opened for the 'Donative Fund' and circulated first among the members of the Association, and then amongst the public."

Thanks were then voted to the Chair, and the Meeting separated.

The first Report of the Committee of the Australian Association of Bengal.

In presenting the report to the first quarterly general meeting of the Australian Association of Bengal, your committee are happy to say that the Society has met with as much support as was anticipated from Bengal, they have not to report any decided measures having yet been adopted for carrying into effect the objects of the association, as the period for active operations, has not yet arrived, they are, however, pledged to Government and the public to dispatch a vessel to the colonies in all November and another in all January next, and under any circumstances two ships will positively be dispatched with such arrangements for the comfort and accommodation of the passengers as will doubtless be found satisfactory.

The number of shares taken in the association amount to eighty-nine, and the names of the subscribers are stated in the annexed paper A. In the published list the name of one gentleman was erroneously inserted, and another has withdrawn from the association, giving it his first instalment of 50 rupees. The name of a gentleman has been communicated by one of the Committees as desirous of taking a share, but this has not yet been confirmed by the party himself.

The funds per annexed account marked B. amount to Co.'s Rs. 7,391 11 10,

Of the subscriptions Co.'s rupees 700 are in course of collection, as per list marked C. it will however be seen that several of the parties have remitted, but their remittances are not yet due, and one gentleman has paid 50 rupees in excess of his instalments.

It is proper here to remark, that your Committee having no immediate occasion for money, took upon themselves to call in only 50 rupees of the second instalment, and they hope the meeting will approve of their having done so. There is a further sum of 100 rupees in the hands of Messrs. Binny and Co., Madras, being two instalments on one share held by a subscriber of that presidency.

Your Committee are sorry that the expences of printing have been so heavy, but they were unavoidable and were in part incurred at the particular request of a gentleman whose liberality in supporting the Association has far exceeded that of any body else, and who continues to take the warmest interest in the success of the undertaking.

It is with regret your Committee have to observe that the association has not received the support that was anticipated from the Madras Presidency, an unfounded prejudice seems to have obtained ground there that we were seeking greater advantages for Bengal than the most of departure must necessarily have over an out-port. Messrs. Binny and Co. have been written to, to endeavor to remove this impression, and an advertisement has been inserted in the Madras papers, intimating that the whole of one side of the accommodations on the gun-deck of the January ship with fifty tons of freight are reserved for engagement at Madras up to the 31st of December, and it is hoped, that you will consider this a liberal return for the solitary share subscribed at that presidency: it was a question whether our ships, as they were intended to touch at one of the ports of Western Australia, should also go into King George's Sound, but this has been settled on the understanding that the ships shall touch at King George's Sound in the event of our having either a passenger or fifty tons of freight for it. Under the erroneous impression already alluded to, it was proposed to get up a separate association at Madras, and deeming that the association here sought no monopoly, but rather that you would be rejoiced to learn of the complete success of the one contemplated at Madras, inasmuch as it would be bringing about the very end in view here, viz. an increased communication between India and Australia, your Committee immediately offered to assist the Madras association by gratuitously aiding it in chartering a ship from this place or otherwise being of all the assistance in their power. At the same time, it was suggested, that unless there was a good prospect of effecting a separate communication, it would be better cordially to assist an association already formed, instead of frittering away good money in an unsuccessful attempt, for with some further aid we might have it in our power to dispatch a third ship in May or June next.

The Governments of Bengal and Madras have so far acceded to the request of your Committee to be allowed to convey their convicts to New South Wales, that whenever conveyance may be required the association will be informed, and if it can undertake for it within one clear month from the date of such communication, the convicts will be given to the association.

Your committee would have been glad if they could have ment the subscribers with the information that they had chartered a ship, but their efforts hitherto have not been successful, though not the slightest difficulty is anticipated in securing proper ships.

Six ships were tendered to the association, and among them one for the January voyage. Some of these would have suited very well, but the terms were either higher than the Committee had reason to expect, or there were other difficulties in the way of an arrangement.

The Secretary has written to the Swan River, King George's Sound, South Australia, Van Diemen's Land, and New South Wales, that the existence of the Association may become generally known at the colonies, and like communications have been made to some of the mercantile houses in London. Captain Grundlay, the Honorary Secretary of the Colonial Society, in London, as well as to Mr. Cross, the book-seller, Holborn, who publishes most of the works relating to the colonies, and from whom copies of the best works, maps and charts connected with Australia have been ordered, it has also been suggested to him, that if he will send out a few copies of such works, as really contain information, the Secretary of the Association will sell them for him at any price he may affix.

Your Committee have further to regret, that the "Donative Fund," which it was proposed to raise to pay the passage of indigent and deserving persons, has not received any support from the public, though at one time, when there was no such fund, several contributions were tendered. This is a circumstance much to be regretted, as some good might have been effected had this fund received ed any accession. The amount collected is stated in paper D.

The list of the passengers and freight engaged in the November ship, is stated in paper E., and that for the January ship in paper F., and though much freight does not appear to be engaged, your Committee are assured by several persons that they will be prepared to occupy tonnage on the ships of the Association.

Two medical gentlemen having been enquiring for passage in the November ship on the understanding of performing its medical duties, and a friend of another has obtained the refusal of the January ships upon the same terms.

The following scale of voting was adopted by your Committee at the suggestion of a subscriber :—

Each shareholder.....	1 vote
3 shares.....	2 "
5 ditto and upwards.....	3 "

The rates of passage have not yet been determined, as your Committee are desirous of fixing them as low as possible, and this cannot be done, till a ship is chartered and the number of passengers ascertained. At present, we should say, that a side-cabin would cost from 8 to 9 hundred rupees, and a stern-cabin 1,000 to 1,001 rupees for a single person.

Your committee have only further to observe, that Mr. N. Alexander consented to act on the committee, in the room of Mr. J. P. Mackillegan, who was desirous of withdrawing.

Signed by the Committee.

MEETING TO ADDRESS THE QUEEN.

A Meeting was held yesterday at the Town Hall at five o'clock in the afternoon (to which hour it had been postponed in order that the Ladies of Bombay might be present) for the purpose of voting an address to Her most Gracious Majesty upon the occasion of her accession to the Throne of the British Empire.

The space around the Town Hall was crowded with carriages and other vehicles, and as we entered the Hall the coup d'œil was imposing from the large and respectable assemblage which was there congregated; a considerable number of ladies occupied the prominent place, and seemed gratified at their presence on an occasion when their youthful Queen was to receive an expression of the love and affection of her Indian subjects. We also observed a considerable number of native gentlemen, desirous of evincing their attachment to their new Sovereign and their adherence to that Government which throws so ample a protection around them.

The meeting commenced its proceedings by calling the Honorable James Farish, Esq., to the Chair.

The Chairman stated to the meeting, that it was convened to offer to our Queen Victoria an assurance of the loyalty and attachment of her subjects at this presidency, and a deep sense of the benefits they expect to derive from the sway of the illustrious personage who, at so tender an age, had stepped upon the Throne of her ancestors; that the advantages which Her Majesty had derived from the careful watchfulness of her illustrious mother, and the truly English education she had received, promised every thing for the glory, stability, and happiness of her reign.

The Hon'ble Sir John Awdry next addressed the meeting, and in a neat and appropriate speech, dwelt upon the high expectations which were to be entertained of a sovereign, upon whom so much care had been bestowed to qualify her to fill and adorn the lofty station which divine providence had assigned her; and proposed the first resolution which was seconded by Rear Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm.

H. Fawcett, Esq., then rose and addressed the meeting to the following effect.

I have the honour to rise to propose that the address to Her Gracious Majesty which I hold in my hand be adopted by this meeting. Before I proceed to read it I feel it due to explain the manner in which it has been prepared. Several gentlemen who signed the requisition to the Sheriff, conceiving that much delay might be avoided by having an address drawn up previously to the meeting, assembled and prepared this paper. Not wishing to trust entirely to their own judgment, they sent the rough draft to our Hon'ble Chairman and Sir J. Awdry, and having obtained their approbation, proceeded forthwith to prepare it for signature. The shortness of the time rendered it impossible to circulate it generally, but they trusted that the approbation of the gentlemen I have mentioned, would be a sufficient guarantee that the substance and form of the address were what they ought to be. If there ever was a period which called upon all classes to offer their loyal and dutiful congratulations to the monarch, the present is undoubtedly the one. A royal maiden born and bred in our native land has been called at an early age to the throne of her ancestors, to fill as it were the place of that lamented princess whose untimely loss afflicted England as a private calamity and drew from many eyes those tears which are only shed when the angel of death visits our nearest and dearest circles. But under what happy auspices does this granddaughter of George 3d ascend the throne? She has been taught to revere the institutions of her country and her education has been conducted under the ever watchful eye of an affectionate mother. May we not then look forward to a reign brilliant as any which has marked our annals? It has been observed that the reigns of our female Sovereigns have been generally the brightest in our history, and it has held good to the remotest period. When the legions of Rome, so accustomed to victory that they barely looked for resistance, first landed on the shores of Britain, they found our barbarian ancestors ready to oppose their naked breasts to these iron clad warriors, and they proved, that "he is trebly armed who has his quarrel just", for they fought for their altars and their homes; they were marshalled under the standard of their Queen; they were led to battle by the glorious Boudica. In the days of anarchy and civil war, when the rival houses of Lancaster and York convulsed England and deluged her fields with her own sons' blood, when the imbecility of the sixth Henry had sunk the fortunes of the red rose to the lowest ebb, it was the Queen who revived the spirit of his parties, instilled fresh courage into his soldiers' hearts, shared their privations and stood foremost in battle. There is one dark spot, one infelicitous stain on the annals of our female sovereigns, but happily the night was short and we fear no return of its horrors; it was when the best blood of England was poured as water on the altar of bigotry and superstition, when the piety of her children was proved in the fire of Smithfield.

It would be trespassing too long on your time to dilate on the brilliant reign of Elizabeth or the glory of our arms under Anne. May our gracious Queen be blessed with the lengthened days of the former, and should the threatening clouds which hang on the political horizon break in tempest and war, I doubt not, a Drake and Effingham will be found to protect the coasts of the kingdom from insult, and a Marlborough to lead her armies to victory.

May heaven shower upon Her Gracious Majesty its choicest blessings and instil wisdom into her councillors, and grant that for lengthened years she may reign in the hearts of her subjects.

Mr. Fawcett then moved the second resolution which was seconded by Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Esq.

Lieutenant-Colonel Wood then rose and said, he was happy to see present upon this occasion so many of the native gentlemen of Bombay, and felt highly gratified at the alacrity they evinced to testify their attachment and loyalty to the new Sovereign who had ascended the throne of the British Empire; but he was happy to observe, that they had already in anticipation of this meeting, come forward and were signing an address to express their firm adherence to the sway of Her Majesty and their sense of the blessings which the native community had derived from the just and impartial administration of the British Government.

That they had on prior occasions signed their names to addresses which had been prepared for them, and expressed in them sentiments which had been drawn up in a stiff and formal manner, but that he was happy to see that upon this occasion the address which they had signed as he had mentioned, was their own and the thoughts, language and sentiments emanated from themselves, and were dictated by their own impulses.

The Gallant Col. concluded by moving the 3rd resolution which was seconded by Jugonnathjee Sunkersett, Esq.

A. S. Le Messurier, Esq., Advocate-General, proposed the fourth resolution, which was seconded by W. C. Bruce, Esq.

All the resolutions having been carried unanimously and the address voted, Lewis Grant, Esq., moved the thanks of the meeting to the Chairman, which was seconded by Ibrahim Mackha, Esq., and carried unanimously.

The meeting which had been most numerously attended, then separated.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

May it Please Your Majesty,—We your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the European and native inhabitants of the Presidency of Bombay, humbly desire to present our heartfelt congratulation to your Majesty on the occasion of your accession to the Throne of the British Empire.

Enjoying, as your Majesty's subjects in this country have ever done since it came under the dominion of British Rule, the greatest security and protection in their rights and liberties, they gladly avail themselves of this happy occasion to testify to your Majesty the grateful sense they entertain of the many blessings they enjoy, and the vast benefits they have received from the wisdom and justice so conspicuously manifested in the Government of India by your illustrious ancestors.

Some of the proudest periods in the History of our Country are those in which the sceptre has been swayed by Female Sovereigns, and educated, as your Majesty has been, under the immediate and affectionate care of an illustrious parent, and in a warm attachment for the British Constitution, we may confidently expect that your Majesty's reign will be equally distinguished.

As regards your Majesty's Eastern dominions, we have abundant reason to hope, that it will ever be your Majesty's gracious desire to pursue the same wise policy, and, to the utmost of your power, to promote the welfare and happiness of all classes of your Majesty's subjects in these distant, but vast and important possessions of the British Throne.

We therefore humbly entreat that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to accept these expressions of our fidelity and allegiance, and to permit us to assure you of our steady and loyal attachment to your Majesty's Royal Person, with our earnest prayers, that the Almighty Disposer of all events may bless you with health and strength, may support you under your arduous duties, and, of his goodness, grant to your Majesty a long, a happy, and a prosperous reign.

Resolved unanimously,

1st. That a dutiful and loyal address from the Inhabitants of Bombay be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty, congratulating her on her accession to the Throne of the British Empire.

2d. That the address now read, be adopted.

3d. That the address be placed at the Town Hall for signature until Saturday, the 21st instant.

4th. That the Chairman of this meeting be requested to hand the Address to the Right hon'ble the Governor in Council to forward by the Hugh Lindsay through such channel as he may deem best.

5th. That the thanks of this meeting be voted to the Hon'ble James Farish, Esq., for his conduct as Chairman on this occasion.—Bombay Courier, October 19.

THE MADRAS MEMORIAL—GENERAL GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

DRAFT OF PETITION.

HUMBLY SHewETH,—That, previous to the Act III. and IV. of William 4th Chapter LXXXV. the Governors in Council of Madras and Bombay possessed the power of managing the details of the Government of these Presidencies, and of carrying into execution all measures of improvement within the same.

That by the passing of the above Act, the Governors of both these Presidencies were deprived of this power, and the same was vested in the Governor General of India in Council.

That, upwards of 4 years have now elapsed, since the said Act came into operation and full time has thus been afforded to prove whether it has been beneficial or detrimental to the local Interests of the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay.

That your Petitioners humbly represent the placing this excessive power with the Governor-General of India in Council, has been attended with effects most injurious to the interests of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies.

That, situated as the Supreme Government is, at a great distance, occupied with the details of their own Presidency, unacquainted with the local causes requiring improvement in the others, and much less interested than the Resident Governments in these improvements, it was not to be expected that the same attention would be given to their wants and necessities, as had been the case, when these Governments possessed the power at once to remedy or remove them.

That, plans of improvements, of the highest consequence to the prosperity and welfare of these Presidencies, have been submitted to the Supreme Government in Calcutta, regarding which, either from not fully understanding their importance, or unwilling to give their consent, the most protracted delay from repeated references has occurred, the plans often abandoned, often curtailed, or acceded to, when the parties, who originated them, and understood them most perfectly, were no longer in the situation to see them carried most beneficially into effect.

That, while the Governor General of all India is also Governor of Bengal, and his Residence fixed at Calcutta, the wants of that Presidency will ever first command his attention, frequently to the exclusion of the well founded claims of the other Presidencies and two recent instances may be adduced in proof of this, viz. the abolition of the Town and Transit Duties, and the declaring Calcutta a Bonded and Warehousing Port—two Acts of the Legislative Council which we more required for the relief and of greater importance to the prosperity of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, but which, although one of them has been now in active operation for upwards of 15 months in Bengal, and the other for more than 6 months, have neither of them been yet extended to Madras and Bombay.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly represent, that it is most detrimental to the interests of the two Presidencies of Madras and Bombay, that the whole powers of Government should be vested in the Governor-General of India, who is also the Governor of Bengal;—that overwhelmed, thus, with the details of Government of the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay, in addition to those of his own Government of Bengal, he cannot give that prompt attention to their interests, nor can he understand the grounds urged for plans of improvement, so well and so intimately as the Governors in Council of these Presidencies; and that the consequent delay in the despatch of all business, from the necessity of distant reference, is extremely prejudicial to their interests and prosperity.

That the constitution of the Council Board of the two Presidencies of Madras and Bombay being essentially the same, as before the passing of the said Act, your Petitioners therefore humbly pray, that the powers formerly exercised by their Governors in Council, may be restored to them. — Madras Spectator, September 16.

MINUTE.

The communication from the Bombay Chamber has brought under review a subject which I conceive to be well deserving of our consideration. The withdrawal of all power of expenditure by the subordinate Governments has long been to my mind a source of great injury to the best interests of this Presidency, an opinion which daily experience tends only to confirm, and it seems therefore of importance that our efforts should be united with those of our Bombay brethren to effect if possible a revision of this part of the existing system.

There are some evils arising from that important change introduced by the New Charter into the constitution of the Indian Government, the reduction of the powers of the subordinate Governments, which do not perhaps come within our Province to consider, but the withdrawal of all power of expenditure in works of general improvement is a practical grievance which operates more severely on the Mercantile than any other portion of the community, and is therefore, as appears to me, a perfectly fit subject for our deliberation with a view to the adopting of such measures as may be most likely to obtain relief.

That the change to which I have alluded has had, and continues to have a most injurious effect on the prosperity of the country by retarding and checking that spirit of improvement which has followed some of the other changes effected by the New Charter, we need only to come to such conclusion, contrast the present situation of Bengal and the works of general usefulness in progress there, undertaken, many of them, under the auspices of Government, with the entirely passive state of things under this Presidency either as respects the improvement of our internal communication, or the removal of restrictions which press so heavily on the commerce of the country, and I think it must be no less apparent that a change which has stripped the local Government of all responsibility and power, has virtually deprived this portion of the Empire of that direct and vigorous interference in objects of local improvement and of that superintending influence over our best interests, which can alone emanate from a Government possessing an intimate acquaintance with the wants of the community, and without which knowledge, no governing body, however well disposed, can, or ever will, prove an active instrument in directing the energies and resources of the country.

The existence of the present state of things may be traced to a few instances of lavish expenditure on the part of the subordinate Governments which were much dwelt upon in the minutes of those Members of the Supreme Government, whose opinions were sought for, and apparently acted upon, in forming the provisions of the New Charter.—The Court of Directors endeavoured, though unsuccessfully, to diminish the force of such partial arguments, by pointing out in their letter to the President of the Board of Control of the 2d July 1833, "that the most striking instances of unauthorized expenditure and of the creation of New Establishments are to be found in the proceedings of the Supreme Government." I mention this fact because I think it affords a reasonable ground for hoping that we shall have the countenance and support of the Court of Directors in our endeavours to effect the object we are now contemplating, which I conceive to be the retransfer of the controlling power and check on improper expenditure leaving a certain discretionary power in the hands of the local Government from the Government of India to the authorities at home.

But I would hope that the result of the three year's working of the present Charter, will have been sufficient to satisfy even those who most strongly advocate the formation of the existing system of the entire failure of those views which led them to expect that a Government could be formed which would be so freed from the details of local Administration, that it would really prove, as was intended, one great superintending authority having its attention directed equally, and without favor or affection to all parts of the Empire, that the Governor-General would be surrounded by advisers selected from all the services of India, and that he would be really the Governor-General of Madras and Bombay, as he is of Bengal. In place of this fancied and comprehensive scheme, what has been the result? The Governor-General so far from having his mind, as I have already said, freed from the consideration of subjects purely local, and of the details of Government, has to conduct singly and unaided by a Council the whole affairs of the Government of Bengal, he will have when a new Lieutenant-Governor is appointed to Agra, the immediate control over the acts of that Public Officer, and besides these functions which of themselves constituted the duties of his predecessors, the present Governor-General has under the new system to preside over the deliberations of the Council in questions Legislative, Political and Financial relating to the empire at large, and to sit in appeal from the measures of the subordinate Governments. With such vast and multifarious duties, is it likely or possible, that the head of the Government can even consider, far less make himself master of the details or be a fit judge of the utility of measures proposed by the subordinate Governments? or is it not much more probable that the despatch will be handed over to an irresponsible Secretary who with a mind already occupied in the consideration of subjects of more immediate interest and consequently but little disposed to take a deliberate view of questions, with which he has had no previous connection, and unchecked altogether by the voice of public opinion, which on a subject devoid of all local interest he truly feels can never reach him, finds it much easier to place at once a negative on the proposition and to obtain at all events for his Government the credit of restraining undue expenditure on the subordinate Government.

The peculiar state of things in this country renders it of essential importance that the attention of the ruling authorities should be directed to the promotion of public works and the general improvement of the resources of the country.

In other countries much of this may be left, and is no doubt accomplished by private enterprise; but in India the Government forms in reality that influential and useful branch of the community existing in other countries. They are the landlords of the whole country and the inhabitants mere tenants possessing no capital nor the means of acquiring any.

To hope therefore that private enterprise will exercise the influence and the good it does in countries where the people are both in theory and in practice the proprietors of the soil, and have a direct interest in its improvement, must be a vain expectation.

It is the part of Government to plan and to execute those works which are to lead to a gradual approximation between the state of this and other more civilized countries and to render that interference and those exertions more effectual, a greater discretion than now exists ought to be left with the local Governments.

With these views I would propose that a letter be addressed to the Supreme Government reiterating the application of the Bombay Charter, and if that application proves unsuccessful, I think measures should be taken to get up a public meeting with a view to petition Parliament to rescind such parts of the present act as has placed the subordinate Governments in their present position.

(Signed) J. A. ARBUTHNOT.

A Memorial to the Home Authorities has been prepared at Madras, praying for a restoration of those powers to the subordinate Presidencies, of which they were deprived by the last Charter.

This New Charter is altogether a very curious piece of mechanism. Considering the mode in which it is put together; redundant in provisions which are of little interest, and defective in matters of substantive importance, and viewing the general incongruity which runs through it, one might at first sight suppose, that it was a kind of political experiment, the duration of which would be limited to three or four years. But, when we remember, that it was intended as the instrument for governing ninety millions of people for twenty entire years; that it was the supposed result of seventy years of experience in the Government of India, it appears difficult to imagine how men who had any character for wisdom to sustain, could have given it their concurrence. The really beneficial principles which it embodies, such as that of throwing open the China trade, of relieving the Government from the duties of the counting-house, and of opening situations of trust to the Natives, had already been matured in public opinion, and would have been incorporated with it, by whatever political party the Charter had been drawn up. But the defects which are so apparent in its various provisions, may justly be imputed to those to whom the formation of this instrument of Government was especially committed.

The construction of the Executive Administration in the New Charter combines the most singular anomalies. We have an Executive Council for all India which exercises an unlimited and minute control over the subordinate Presidencies. All real power has been withdrawn from them, and concentrated in the new Council. In order that a Council with such large responsibilities may be enabled to secure general confidence, and provide impartially for all interests, it appears reasonable, that it should comprise the ablest public functionaries from each division of the empire; but, instead of this, we see the vacancies filled up exclusively from the Bengal Civil Service. The nomination of Colonel Morrison, several years ago, to a seat in it, appeared to hold out to the other Presidencies the promise of a fair participation of the power which was to control the whole empire, but every subsequent selection has shown that this plan has been abandoned. The anomaly of this arrangement appears the more glaring from the union of all Legislative with all Executive powers in this Council. The laws which are to bind the territories of Madras and Bombay, are enacted without the presence of a single individual acquainted with the state and condition of those Presidencies. The Law Commission is constructed on the more reasonable plan of having the different interests of this diversified empire represented in it. Why, it may be asked, was not the same principle admitted in the formation of the Legislative Council? The subordinate Presidencies have, therefore, just reason to complain, that the Supreme Legislative and the entire Executive authority throughout all India is entrusted to a body of men drawn from the service of only one Presidency, and that the two Councils which previously existed are deprived of every function which could justify the expense of keeping them in existence.

On the other hand the Civilians of Bengal may justly advance their claim to a seat in Council. They may argue with great reason, that if their brethren at Madras and Bombay are allowed to look forward to such posts as the reward of a long career of zeal and integrity, it would be inequitable to deprive the Bengal service, which outnumbers the aggregate service of both the other Presidencies of similar hopes. And this brings on the consideration of another anomaly of this Charter. Bombay and Madras have still their Executive Councils continued to them; they still exist, though shorn of all the attributes of power, as the most honourable and the most lucrative stations in the public service. But the Government of Bengal, as well as that of the Western Provinces, is administered without a Council. In order, therefore, that the Bengal Civil Service may not be placed in more disadvantageous circumstances than that of the minor Presidencies, the members of this service are introduced into a Council, which absorbs all the Legislative and Executive powers of all India.

But upon what principle is the plan justified of endeavouring to govern Bengal and Agra, which comprise seven-ninths of all the subjects of the Crown in India, without a Council? If the well being of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, require that even the subordinate details of the administration should be directed by a Council, it seems strange that three-fourths of the population of British India, should require no Council whatever. Either the arrangements at Madras and Bombay, therefore, are redundant, or those of Bengal and Agra are deficient. It requires little penetration to see that the error lies on our own side, and not on theirs. If Councils are at all necessary, they are most necessary where the details are comparatively largest, the responsibility most heavy, the interests most extensive. Yet seventy millions have no council, and twenty millions have two.

But the anomaly does not end here. It has been ordained, not only that the Governor of Bengal shall superintend all the details of this large Presidency without the aid of a Council, but that he shall be one and the same individual with the Governor-General of India. As if the duties attached to the chief seat in the Executive and Legislative Government of all India were not sufficiently arduous, the weight of the entire internal administration of Bengal is superadded to it. In all the "Plans for the Government of British India," which were collected some years ago into one large quarto volume, we question whether one can be found to match the present system. It seems incredible, that it should have escaped the notice of our legislators, that at the time when so large an increase of responsibility and labour was thrown on the Governor-General, his mind ought to have been left free for the consideration of the weighty interests entrusted to him; and that to distract his attention with the anxieties of a local governorship, was to the last degree injudicious. We believe that it is only through the high talent and industry which have now been brought into operation, that there has been any mitigation of the evils which this preposterous plan is calculated to entail. We speak of systems, not of men; and shall not be misunderstood when we observe, that it is unjust to the exalted individual, placed at the head of this imperial administration, thus to double his labours, and at the same time to deprive him of the assistance which his predecessors have enjoyed. It is unjust to the people and to their interests to combine duties which are so manifestly incompatible, in the same individual. It is unwise to leave no appeal from the Governor of Bengal, but to the same personage in a more exalted capacity. It is unjust to the individual who fills the office of sole Secretary to the Governor of Bengal, to place him in a situation, where the undivided odium of every measure by which any man may consider himself or his friends aggrieved, shall be concentrated on his head; to create a post, which though it were managed with the abilities and temper of an angel, could not fail to make more enemies than friends. In the arrangements of the Charter which relate to the Executive Government of India, there appears so much of clumsiness and incongruity, there is so anomalous a distribution of authority, that it may be said to exhibit rather the unpractised hand of an apprentice, than to indicate the finished workmanship of a master.

As it regards the immediate object of the Memorial, it ought not to be forgotten that the establishment of one Supreme Executive Government, which should direct the general affairs of the empire, in war and in peace, upon a uniform principle, and harmoniously combine all its movements towards one great end, is a measure which was required to consolidate. There have not been wanting passages in our past history, which pointed out the eminent necessity of a general government, similar, in some respects, to that which has now been constructed. And that it is calculated to benefit the empire, there can be no question. If, indeed, we needed a proof of the beneficial results of this concentration of power, we have only to point to the New Post Office Act, the benefit of which we could not have enjoyed to its fullest extent, if Madras and Bombay had continued upon their ancient footing. But it was not necessary to the advantageous working of this comprehensive system, that the subordinate governments should be denuded of all power, and to the condition of cyphers. Though it is essential to the idea of a Supreme Government, that it should possess a general control over the finances of the Empire, a certain range of authority might still have been left to Bombay and Madras, even in matters of expenditure. If governments are to be kept up, they should be furnished with the means of maintaining their own dignity; and nothing will tend so effectually to sap the foundation of their usefulness, as a feeling of absolute subserviency. The delay which has occurred in extending the abolition of the transit duties to those Presidencies, is much to be deplored; but we scarcely think that the acquisition of this boon would have been accelerated, if Madras and Bombay had been excluded from the control of the Supreme Council, and had constituted independent Presidencies. Those duties, though small in comparison with the revenues of Bengal, form an essential part of the revenues necessary to the establishments now kept up at the subordinate Presidencies, where the expenditure is generally in excess of the income. It was, therefore, only, we conceive, by regarding the revenues of India as forming but one exchequer, that it was found possible to relieve the sister Presidencies from these odious and pernicious taxes.

But how can the anomaly of the existing state of things be corrected? The Charter, which was established by Act of Parliament, can only be amended by the same authority. To obtain a New Act is a matter of no little difficulty; Parliament have laid the affairs of India on the shelf till the year 1854; and nothing, possibly, but a Russian invasion will induce that assembly to review the subject. One provision of the New Charter, that of a fourfold nomination of writers, which, in fact, nullified the privileges of the Directors, has been amended, because the Act was enabled to creep quietly, and unobserved through the House. But if the President of the Board of Control were to give notice of a motion for reconsidering the provisions of the Charter, and remodelling the executive Government, there would be no House on the appointed day. If it were possible for him to take the House by surprise when the benches were full, and to bring on the subject, the mere mention of India would be found to operate like a dinner bell, and he would soon be left alone in his glory. And, really, considering how small is the debt of gratitude under which we have been laid to the wisdom of Parliament, when that august assembly has condescended to legislate for us, we can scarcely consider this version to our affairs in any other light than as a Providential dispensation.—Friend of India Oct. 12.

ADDRESS TO DR. MILL.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY, TO THE REVEREND W. H. MILL, D. D. PRINCIPAL OF BISHOP'S COLLEGE, THEIR VICE PRESIDENT.

The intelligence of your intention to return immediately to Europe has been received by us with feelings of deep regret, impressed, as we are, with the conviction, that India is about to sustain by your departure, a loss which cannot easily be repaired.

It will rest with higher authority than the Asiatic Society, to bear witness to the unwearying zeal and fervent piety, by which you have been uniformly distinguished in the discharge of the sacred duties committed to your care; but, it is peculiarly our privilege to testify, in the most public manner, our sense of the benefit we have derived from your abilities and learning, as well as to convey some parting token of our esteem and respect to a scholar, whose presence among us we have always regarded with feelings of pride and satisfaction.

It is now sixteen years since you arrived in this country. While yet a young man, you had established for yourself a literary reputation of no common order, having excelled on an arena, where excellence could have been won only by the united efforts of genius and industry. We hailed your arrival, therefore, with no ordinary feelings of satisfaction, indulging in the hope, that the classical languages and literature of the East would receive from you a share of that attention which had already been so successfully devoted to the learning and science of the West. This hope has since been amply realized.

The journals of our society contain abundant evidence of your patient research, of your correct judgment, and of your profound erudition.

Your translation from the Sanscrit of the first part of Calidasa's Uma, affords indisputable proof of your skill as a poet and a commentator; while your qualifications as a Historian and a Philologist have been clearly established by your restoration, with valuable critical and historical notices, of the Allahabad Inscription, and by your full and accurate translation of the Shekshatee inscription found in the temple of Hursha at Ooncha pahar, and of that discovered at Bhittiri, near Ghazepore. In your comments on the Macan manuscript of the Alif Leila, we trace at once the minute accuracy of an experienced critic, and the refined taste of an accomplished scholar.

In your Arabic treatise on Algebra, and in your Hebrew collection of the psalms into the same language, we have a durable monument of your learning and piety. But the most valuable of your literary undertakings is your Sanscrit poem, the Christa Sangita. Is that beautiful work the praises of our Redeemer have been for the first time sung in the sacred language of the Vedas. It is your peculiar boast, that you have caused the purest doctrines to flow in the stream of this noble language. To the whole body of the learned Hindoos you have thus rendered accessible the sublimest truths, by conveying them in a channel to which, as to their own venerated river, they ascribe the power of purifying all it touches. To a mind like yours this must be an inexhaustible source of gratifying reflection.

But, Sir, we feel that we should be doing you an injustice, were we to describe at greater length, the fruits of your studies already before the public. We feel that no conception can be formed of the stores of your capacious mind from the comparatively small samples of your labours which have been given to the world. We feel that to the unobtrusive nature of your character is owing the infrequency of your appearance as an author, and we know that you have assiduously improved your great facilities, that your scientific attainments are on the most extended scale, that as a Hebrew scholar you were early distinguished, that your knowledge as a modern linguist may be said to be universal, that you are equally familiar with the astronomy of the Sidhantas, the mythology of the Puranas, and the mystical doctrines of the Vedas, while there is no department of the literature and science of Arabia, that has escaped your scrutinizing researches.

We trust that, in the leisure of dignified retirement, you will be enabled to put forth the maturer fruits of your rich and highly cultivated mind. We are confident that your well-earned reputation will be sustained by whatever you perform, and we are sanguine enough to hope that our country may now boast of possessing an Englishman, the depth and variety of whose oriental studies are not surpassed by any (numerous and distinguished as they are) of the scholars of the continent.

We cannot allow this opportunity to pass, without assuring you of the deep sense of obligation we feel towards you for your unemitting attention to the duties of your station as Vice President of our society, and for the alacrity with which on all occasions you have afforded us the benefit of your opinion and advice, and the aid of your learning and judgment on the difficult, and continually recurring references that have been submitted to our consideration.

We are in some degree consoled for your loss to ourselves, by reflecting that, here you have no more to learn, that though your acquirements are beyond the standard, which is ordinarily reached in the longest and most laborious life, you are yet in the vigor of manhood, and that you are about to return to a land where you will meet with the distinction, which is due to abilities so eminent, and to attainments so various.

It is our earnest desire, that you will gratify us by sitting for your portrait as soon after arrival in England as may be convenient to yourself. For the members of our society who have the happiness to know you, no token of reminiscence is requisite; but the wish is reasonable, that our hall should be decorated with the resemblance of one, who, while among us, was so useful and so distinguished a member of our society.

(Signed) EDWARD RYAN, President.

DR. MILL'S REPLY.

Mr. President,—The address which you, in the name of this society, have done me the high honour of presenting to me, is one which I cannot rise to answer without some feelings of doubt and embarrassment. For I fear to incur the imputation of affected modesty on the one hand, or on the other, what I would equally wish to avoid, the appearance of slighting in any degree the deliberate judgment of an assembly like this, were I to give expression to my actual sentiments, on hearing the terms of strong and noble eulogy with which you have dignified my scanty contributions to your learned stores, and the comparatively humble attainments from which those contributions have proceeded. But whatever may be the real value of these labours and attainments, I feel and must ever continue to feel, the great obligation which your praise imposes on me, of aiming to resemble as far as I may, that standard of excellence which your too favorable judgment has inferred from the specimens of me already before you. I must ever consider it among the strongest additional incentives to the assiduous cultivation of that knowledge, in promoting which the Asiatic Society has long held so distinguished a place, a cause which I cannot but consider as intimately connected with that of mental improvement and true religion.

I have long been impressed with the conviction that as an accurate knowledge of the intellectual state of any people must precede and accompany all enlightened efforts for their amelioration, so to attempt that amelioration by appealing entirely to the lower principles of our nature, the love of comforts and luxuries and the like, while we disregard and despise the forms, however imperfect they may be, in which their own ideas of mental and moral elevation are embodied, is to overlook a most essential element in the problem of human improvement, to slight equally the spiritual and high nature of man, and the history of our own gradual progress to the eminence we have reached. This would be true, even if the language and literature in which these ideas were incorporated by the natives of this country were far inferior to what they are known and acknowledged to be by the most accomplished spirits of civilized Europe, the one nearly unrivalled for its powers of combination and expression, the other distinguished by a peculiar grace and tenderness of sentiment, and in the higher flights of speculation into regions, where man requires better guidance than his own reason can impart; characterized even, when most tarnished by error, by a singular acuteness and profundity, as well as grandeur of thought.

Now if it be a mistake in matter of religion particularly to avail ourselves of what is good and just in heathen theology, with a view to its rectification by revealed truth, it is a mistake certainly in which the Apostle of the Gentiles has led the way, as any one may see who observes his appeal not only to the ethical but the theological poetry of heathenism, even when most nearly treading on the verge of that same Pantheistic sentiment, which characterizes the theology of heathen India; and if any precedent could be wanted after this inspired authority, we might find it in the course taken by all the great lights of the Church, the Basil, the Chrysostom, the Augustine, when the expansive power of Christianity with much of its primitive fervour, was seen in close and more equal juxta position with the faded, yet still conspicuous splendours of Western Gentilism. These considerations (if authority were needed where the reason of the case speaks with sufficient distinctness) had I weight with me in the conception of that work which the Society has honoured with such distinguished approbation. I am sensible that to conceive and to execute are very different things, and I cannot venture to take to myself all which your kind judgment has been led, perhaps, to readily to transfer from one to the other; yet, I cannot see the manner, in which learned natives have received many portions of this work, I cannot see the unhesitating manner in which their sentiment has been adopted in this assembly, including some whom only the increased complexity of public affairs prevents from marching in equal steps with the Colebrookes and the Wilsons of former days, without satisfaction at the result of the experiment, and hope for the future.

I would not however be thought to limit my interest in the researches of the Society to matters of this high bearing, for no speculation into either the works of nature, or the monuments of man, are without their proper claim to attention, and just and reasonable as it is to enquire into the solid utility of any pursuit we undertake, it never appeared to me either wise or worthy to ask at every turn what special usefulness or bearing on present concerns may appear in each part or section of the study before us. In science, we know, that things, which were once thought to be mere food of learned and abstract mathematical speculation, have turned out in the progress of knowledge to subserve the most practical purposes; and with respect to those literary and antiquarian researches, which form the more proper object of this society, while nothing that gives us clear knowledge of the history of man and the progress of mind ought to be deemed unimportant by us; we must remember also, that we cannot exactly determine beforehand, how far any fragment or morsel of history may conduce to that clear knowledge in the end. In investigating the former history of India, wherefrom the almost total absence of written documents, we must needs proceed by such fragments and morsels; it is very necessary to bear this in mind. With respect to my own occasional share in these researches, of which you have made such kind and flattering mention; I fear that what I have succeeded in deciphering has scarcely adequately repaid the labour bestowed; my own judgment could never admit the idea, which some even of considerable eminence in these pursuits would have led me to entertain as probable, that the classical period of Indian history had been attained; I adopted at length firmly, however reluctantly, the conviction which both internal and external evidence forced upon me, that the monuments in question belonged to a much darker as well as more recent age. A better fortune, as well as a higher merit, has characterized the efforts in the same kind of another member of the society now present; whose happy researches in other monuments, conducted under much greater disadvantages in every way than mine, have finally led to a conclusion, which I think, all but certainly established that they belong to and illustrate a most classical and important part of the history of this country. I beg my friend the Secretary's pardon for taking thus of disadvantages; for it appears almost ungracious to notice, what however, enhancing, as it does, the eminent inductive sagacity that he had displayed in his discovery, might seem also to derogate from the universality of his varied and extensive knowledge. I would not have mentioned them, had I not been convinced that he needs but the will, if he could find the leisure, to rid himself entirely of them. I know at least that if he could bend his thoughts that way he needs far less time than most men to add a critical knowledge of the learned languages of the country, so auxiliary to his successful researches in the coins and monuments of India to the many other distinguished merits which have made his journal of our society, even in his sole portion of it, the object of attention to literary Europe. Of his merits as a Secretary, I cannot possibly say more than that he has caused even the loss of the transcendent merits of Wilson to cease to be thought irreparable by us.

My business, however, as I must not forget, is not to express my sense of the merits of other officers of this society, (however incidentally forced on my notice in this instance,) but to acknowledge of your kind opinion of myself, and to accede thankfully to the proof of it contained in your parting request to me. To be associated in this manner in the remembrance of this society with its illustrious founder, and the many others whose contributions have conferred ornament and dignity on its proceedings, is what I cannot suffer even my sense of comparative unworthiness to prevent esteeming a great source of gratification. To you, Mr. President, who have so long added to the duties of your high station in this settlement, a zealous and able administration of the affairs of this society, as well as your colleague, in both these respects, of whom, being now absent, (as I regret to perceive,) from illness, I may speak with more freedom, as one whose distinguished scientific and literary attainments add lustre to his other excellent qualities. I am well pleased to leave this token of recollection of myself whose friendship with both was begun in the academic associations of a far different clime from this, in which again I hope we may yet meet. To the other very learned and able Vice-President now present, and to all, whether countrymen or natives of India, who may be led to take interest in the works you have mentioned with such marked approbation, I am glad to present, when absent, some memento of my endeavours, such as they are, to instruct or to benefit them. Once more, Gentlemen, I thank you for your kind sentiments towards me, and bid you most heartily farewell.

MOONGHYR.

In the case of Budunchund Gomashtah and others, who were committed by Mr. Clift, an unconvenanted servant, on a charge of having made away with a quantity of opium, a number of additional witnesses were examined on the 20th and 21st September; but it is not necessary to detail their evidence. When the examination closed, the roobakaree of Mr. Clift was again read. The defendants named some witnesses who, they begged, might be called on their side, and who were directed to be subpoenaed. The Joint Magistrate observed to the pleader on the part of the defendants, that it was likely Mowjeeloll, Sherishtadar of the Collector of Bhagulpore, would be implicated in the business, with reference to the urzee which Chetoo Sing states to have been sent to him. The pleader begged leave to remark, that several of the witnesses too were plainly accessories to the fact. The Court said, that had the case come before it at once originally, without having been previously examined by Mr. Clift, it would have committed the whole of them as accessories; but as they were sent by Mr. Clift as witnesses, it should receive them as such. The pleader hereupon desired to know who were the prosecutors in the case, the Government, Chetoo Sing, or Mr. Clift. The Court said the Government. The pleader then asked in what capacity Mr. Clift's Mooktarcar appeared there, and interfered in the proceedings? The Court observed that no notice had been taken of the circumstance in the beginning. The man was employed by Mr. Clift to manage the business out of Court.

On the 23d, the case was again brought up, but Mr. Clift's Mooktarcar did not take his stand at the bar of the Court near the witnesses as was his wont. The Dak Moonsee's report was read, stating that in the month of August 1836, a letter was brought to the dak by one Pooran Sing for Mowjeeloll, Sherishtadar of Bhagulpore, and for which half postage had been paid which proved that the communication was private, all public letters going free of postage. After this several witnesses were examined.

On the 29th the case was finally called up. The proceedings already held were laid on the table with the notable file of Mr. Clift's proceedings. Of the latter, a paper professing to be a copy of Chetoo Sing's urzee to the Collector of Bhagulpore, or to his Sheristadar, was read. Next a roobakaree from the Collector of Bhagulpore and the Kyteut of Mowjeeloll Sheristadar were read, both stating that no urzee had been received from Moonghyr on the subject of the charge on which this prosecution has been laid. The Court informed the prisoners that although in its own mind there could be no doubt as to their having taken away the opium or having been concerned in its abstraction, the want of proof of any kind rendered the prosecutor and the others on the side of the prosecutor accessories to the fact. So that it would not condemn them (the prisoners) and would therefore acquit and discharge them. The prisoners were discharged accordingly, after suffering imprisonment for some months. We are not quite certain whether we have given the sentiments of the Court accurately, for we were labouring under indisposition and had gone into Court in opposition to the advice and injunction of our medical adviser. It is remarkable that neither Chetoo Sing, the prosecuting witness, nor any of the other witnesses were in attendance.—Hurkuru, October 7.

CHOWRINGHEE THEATRE.

THE ROAD TO RUIN.

The Road to Ruin, by particular desire, failed, notwithstanding, to draw a good house, at which we confess ourselves somewhat surprised. The comedy is a good, bustling, lively sort of affair, the dialogue is rich in sentimental claptraps, and abounds in witty and pleasant passages; the characters of Sophia, of the widow, of old Doraton, young Doraton, Gold-finch, and Silky, are original and exceedingly well drawn; the only drawback is the preposterous improbability of some of the incidents of the piece.

With such a catalogue of attractions, we anticipated a more full and fashionable attendance, at this performance the amateurs. The troop, which has this year taken the field, consists, we believe, wholly of veterans. We had written thus far and were about to plunge headlong into the delightful and bitter sweet waters of criticism, but our career is suddenly arrested; and we are spared the expressions dictated by our own fastidiousness, by the kindness of a friend, on whose taste we of course rely implicitly, and whose critique, may prove more agreeable to the amateurs than our own: It has about it a character of verity which is irresistible and possesses, moreover, the charm of novelty, of which human nature, according to the poet, is ever greedy. We therefore print the notes of our obliging contributor verbatim et literatim.

"Old Doraton (The Secy.) went through his part in a creditable manner. I can't say more. The scene of the reconciliation with his son called forth loud applause.

"Young Doraton in the lighter parts of the character, was all that could be wished. His easy confidence in his first interview with Silky capital. In the pathetic parts, his manner appeared forced.

"Master Modus appeared quite at home in Gold-finch. He detailed the excitements, the hopes and fears, of a race in Sportsman-like style—the character evidently suited him.

"A gentleman in Green (L'Homme vert et tranquille) performed perhaps the most difficult character of the night, Milford, the walking gentleman, and went through his part as most walking gentlemen do.

"Silky portrayed to the life the cunning old usurer who has an eye for coin and conscience on all occasions: his bye play in the last scene was excellent. This actor, I hear, is always imperfect in his parts, and has made rapid progress within the last few months.

"Mrs. Leach reminded some of the spectators of Madame Vestris in the same character. The artless, unsophisticated girl was well pictured, and stood in strong relief against the character of the amorous widow, which was taken by Mrs. Francis. The mercenary abigail was in the hands of Mrs. Chester and very well done. The house was not full, but there was a pretty good attendance.—Hurk., Oct. 20.

EXAMINATION OF THE SCHOOL AT FORT GLOUCESTER.

TO THE CHIEF SECRETARY TO GOVERNMENT.

Sir,—Ist. I have the honor, by desire of the College Board, to report, for the information of the Honorable the Governor in Council, that, at the 2d private quarterly examination, held under Section XVII, Title I, of the College Rules, on the 15th and 20th instants, the gentlemen, whose names are entered in the margin, attended for examination.

TELOUGOO.

2d. Mr. Daniell has passed a very creditable examination in this language. His translations both from and into Telougoe, are very nearly correct; and, the language in which the latter exercise is expressed, is with the exception of a single phrase, strictly idiomatic. He translated off hand an easy urzee without the slightest assistance. In conversation, he understood all that was said to him; and, although he does not express himself fluently, he was able to make himself perfectly understood, by the native with whom he conversed.

HINDOOSTANEE.

3d. Mr. Daniell's translation of an English paper into Hindoostanee is intelligible throughout, and in some passages exhibits a good knowledge of idiom. In others, however, the meaning of the original has not been entirely conveyed and the structure of the sentences is not idiomatic. His translation from the language is close and accurate, and with the exception of one word, the meaning of which has been misapprehended, this exercise is entirely free from error.

4th. Mr. Daniell read off, and translated (vital voce) the urzee given to him, with fair readiness and success, requiring, however, occasional but inconsiderable assistance, both in deciphering and translating this paper. In conversation, he readily understood what was addressed to him, and succeeded in making himself intelligible to the Moonshie, with whom he conversed in reply. He requires further practice, however, to express himself with readiness and fluency.

TAMIL.

5th. Mr. Pringle has made very satisfactory progress in Tamil since the last quarterly examination. Both of his written exercises are well executed, and these papers as well as the manner in which he conversed, and read a business paper, shew him to be fully qualified to enter on the duties of the public service, though he has not yet acquired that knowledge of Hindoostanee which would justify our recommendation of the highest allowances in his favor.

6th. The examination passed by Mr. R. R. Cotton, who was admitted into the College, only on the 20th of July last, is highly creditable to him. He is well grounded in the rudiments of the Tamil language, and there is reason to hope that perseverance in the same course of study, will enable him at an early period, to shew that he has overcome its chief difficulties.

7th. In conclusion, the Board beg leave to recommend that the highest rate of College allowances may be awarded to Mr. L. D. Daniell, and that this gentleman may be employed in the Public Service; but, as the period of his two years' residence in College has not yet expired, his wish to be permitted to remain at the Presidency, until the 2d half yearly examination, to be held in December next, may be complied with.

8th. Mr. Pringle having been reported fully qualified to transact public business in one language, and having expressed a wish to be appointed to do duty as an Assistant under the Collector of Chingleput till the 2d half yearly examination, to be held in December next, the Board, under the provision of Section X, Title II, of the College Rules, beg to recommend his appointment accordingly.

9th. Mr. R. R. Cotton, they consider, has satisfactorily established his claim to the first increased rate of College allowances, and which they accordingly recommend may be granted to him.

I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

M. J. ROWLANDSON, Secretary.

College, 30th September 1837.

To the President and Members of the College Board.

GENTLEMEN,—Para. 1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your Secretary's letter of the 30th ultimo, reporting the result of the 2d private quarterly examination for the year 1837, of Junior Civil Servants attached to the College.

2. The Governor in Council is pleased, agreeably to your recommendation, to grant to Mr. L. D. Daniell the highest, and to Mr. R. R. Cotton the first increased rate of College allowances, and to permit the former to prosecute his studies at the Presidency for the purpose of attending the second half yearly examination.

3. The Governor in Council is further pleased to appoint Mr. Pringle to do duty as an Assistant under the Collector of Chingleput until the second half yearly examination to be held in December next.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your most obedient servant,

LECTURES.

Delivered at the College Hall, by G. Norton, Esq., Advocate General of Madras.

5th Lecture.

ON THE PRINCIPLES UPON WHICH THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE DEPENDS.

Mr. Norton proceeded in his sixth lecture, to explain the principles upon which the effectual administration of justice in settled and civilized countries depended; observing that this was the end and aim of all governments. The objects of the administration of justice were to prescribe and enforce; first, rules of conduct; and secondly, rules of property—and the two qualities which ought to characterize a perfect system of administering right and justice between man and man, so that every individual should know and enjoy his own in peace, were certain and clear laws, and method of procedure in exacting obedience to them.

Before he came to speak of these two qualities in the efficient administration of justice, he was desirous of impressing on their attention how necessarily that last and best result of good Government—over-advanced and prosperous nations depended on prudence—deep thought—long and repeated mental labours. It was common among simple and ill-informed people to express a desire for cheap and ready justice; but, if they would examine and reflect a little on this subject, they would easily understand how impossible it was that any real and fair justice could be administered amongst a numerous people possessing various and extensive property, and bound together by as various and extensive duties, unless many rules of right were laid down, and a well-arranged plan devised for enforcing them. To invent and draw up a body of these rules was beyond the strength of any single human intellect, or the combined talent of many wise men. It was the work of ages, and the labour of a succession of experienced ages. Accordingly, they would find that, in barbarous and despotic countries, and in such as were lowest in the scale of nations, the laws were few, and the mode of settling differences about the rights secured cheap and rapid. It was an easy and ready way to hear two disputants tell their story, and then decide, not by reference to rules, or precepts, but by mere arbitrary will. And that was the course among the poorest and worst governed countries. But such a course could not be applied, in free and civilized countries, abounding in wealth, and where security in the enjoyment of it, as well as in personal rights, was the prominent aim of the Government.

Mr. Norton proceeded at considerable length to illustrate these observations by quotations from Blackstone, and by pointing out a variety of rights and duties, as arising out of contracts, tenures of lands, relative duties between parent and children, masters and servants; which in complicated society had to be settled according to certain rules and a plan and system; and to be ascertained by those who gave themselves up to legal studies, but which could not be obvious to others by the mere force of natural reason audibly exercised on occasion called it forth. He noticed also, that the common consent of all mankind had assigned the highest fame to those who had devised or reformed the system of administration of justice in various nations.

He then referred to the necessity there was, that the laws under which justice was administered should be certain and clear. Without this quality in the laws, there might as well be none at all; for no one could prove that any judgment given under them was wrong, since the Judge would have no sure guide; and all decisions upon claims and rights were liable to be pronounced from mere caprice and feeling. In such a state of the law, no man could be safe, either in his person or property. He noticed and explained the various evils which every day's experience proved amongst the native community, from this uncertainty and contradictions in the law relative to Hindoo wills. He read also passages from the Hindoo laws as illustrating the obscurity and want of certainty in regard to the rights of inheritance. He remarked that this state of their laws had been a fertile source of litigation and ruin among the wealthier portion of the natives, and that it had had the effect of very materially lessening the value of their property, and their facility of dealing with it. The effect of vagueness and uncertainty in the law was, that arbitrary constructions might always be put upon it. No certain advice, in respect of their rights and claims, could be given them; and, therefore, there was no end to litigation, and no other source in many cases which ought on principles of justice to be plain. There could be but little industry, or exertion to attain wealth, where there was little security in the possession of it. The people were but mere herds, if the laws were in such a state, as that nothing could be known of the rights they professed to possess, without reference to the commands of a superior who judged, not by plain, well-ascertained rules, but by his own sagacity and discretion. These were considerations which had induced one of the wisest of men (Bacon) to lay down the maxim, that those laws were best which left least to the breast of the Judge, that judge the best who left least to himself.

Next to that requisite characteristic in the administration of justice of clear and certain laws defining the rights and duties of the people, was the necessity of a good method of procedure. The importance of this consideration was so apparent to those who in the government of India had laboured to introduce the pure and efficient administration of justice, that the major part of the vast and numerous volumes of the Government Regulations was directed to that sole object. It must be obvious that however perfect the system of law was, in declaring what was right and prohibiting what was wrong, such laws must be nugatory and vain, if, in the mode of enforcing it through the authority of Courts of Justice, those Courts had no fixed rules to be guided by. The objects of a good method of procedure were, that the points in dispute between parties should be clearly ascertained, that each party should have the full opportunity of supporting his case by proof and argument; and that such proofs and arguments only should be admissible, which were applicable to the cases made, and calculated to show the truth. But, to accomplish these objects with any thing like certainty and fairness, a plan and method was necessary, settled and laid down beforehand, according to certain and fixed rules to be conformed to by both parties, and which required no small sagacity and experience to frame. Without such rules, all investigations and trials of rights and claims made in a Court of Justice would come to depend on the talents, or, perhaps, the dispositions of the presiding Judges. Each Judge would have a mode of his own, and it would always be in their power at least, if not in their inclination, to make the cases appear as they pleased. The parties could never know from a sure source when and how they were to assert and prove their claim or their defences; and they could never be certain, therefore, of obtaining a full and fair hearing. They must wait on the directions of the Judge at each step, and would often be in ignorance, not only of the course required of themselves, but also of that which had been adopted by their antagonist. His auditors would easily perceive what irregularity, confusion, and uncertainty would arise from such a mode of administering justice; and how open it would be for either party to mislead the Judge, and take unfair advantages of his opponent. He instanced the practice which was so commonly resorted to in India, of attempting to bias the minds of the Judges by private petitions, a practice which if successful in its objects, must necessarily poison the very sources of justice. What could be more unfair than that one party should be allowed secretly to influence the minds of the Judges by statements, which the other party had no opportunity of even knowing, much less answering? and how could a just Judge place reliance in statements so made, which might perhaps be easily disposed of? these were courses which were allowable only where the laws had not provided a regular and prescribed method of proceeding, enabling each party to be fully heard, and at the same time fully to know, and to have the opportunity of answering, what was alleged against him. But, whenever investigations and trials by Courts of Justice proceeded by the reception of the private petitions of the parties, or by any other unregulated course of bringing the subject of difference before the consideration of Judges, there must necessarily arise danger that, from want of requisite notice, or from want of preparation, or from want of means afforded, one side or the other has not been able to lay his case fairly and completely open for judgment; or, that, if both sides have in the result, been able to present their case in all its just bearings before the Judges, it has been at a greater expenditure of time, and labour, and money, than could have arisen out of the most intricate rules of procedure which were fixed and settled.

19th Lecture.

ON THE METHOD OF PROCEDURE IN THE PROVINCIAL COURTS.

He should close this lecture with a few general observations on the quality of this system of legal procedure in the provinces. By some he might be thought to have expressed himself too freely upon the defects of it, which he had endeavoured to explain. That imputation would be just, if he should neglect altogether to ascribe such defects to the natural and almost necessary causes, or if he had no object of suggesting by his notice of them the appropriate and practicable improvements. But, while he pointed out such defects as appeared to him to be palpable, he was, for one, as free and ready to do justice as well to that wisdom and those magnificent virtues, which in the midst of war and struggles for national security first devised a scheme for the regular and peaceful administration of the law to all classes of this immense empire, as to those who, unpractised and unversed in legal learning, laboured to digest that scheme through all its details into specific regulations. A foreign band of settlers in a new country had to introduce regularity, where there existed the utmost confusion; the dominion and power of fixed rules of right, where the arbitrary authority of individuals had before been the only rule of government. They undertook to accomplish this among a people, whose whole conduct in life was guided by customs, principles, authorities, and habits, varying greatly amongst different classes; and all totally dissimilar to, and often at variance with, their own; and they had to do all this at once, and as the first fruits of this change of government, which was to be made welcome to those who were to live under it. As no combination of circumstances could present greater difficulties, so none could more forcibly urge caution, and the strictest attention to all the topics on which such new laws were to bear. If the times are favourable now for a reformed, and more exact, current, and uniform system of administering justice, those early times (not to speak of very deficient means) were far from encouraging such an effect. Indeed, one of the errors which it appeared to him that the framers of the Government Regulations had continually fallen into was, the legislating for small details and particulars in the proceedings of the Courts, which had better have been left to the gradual arrangement of the Courts themselves, by rules of their own, well deliberated upon, and suitable to the various powers and jurisdictions which they exercised, and the quality of those who lived under them. The task of legislating for the complete and sure administration of justice, was too difficult for any but the most experienced, and the most learned, and the most talented of mankind; and even the laying down of rules of legal proceedings required great reflection, as well as habitual practice in judicial pursuits. He need, therefore, say no more, as accounting for the imperfection of the present scheme of administering justice according to the Government Regulations, and its inferiority to the more exact and regular plan of the English system, or even to that which might be devised as most suitable to the people of this country; without, at the same time deprecating the credit so nobly earned by those who had already done so much.

Improvements, however, were no doubt required, and some of them appeared to him as obvious as they were practicable. One most necessary requisite in the due administration of the law was, that those who undertook that sacred duty should themselves be learned in that law, and in the method of procedure for enforcing it. Great as the evil unquestionably was, that the native law itself was obscure and uncertain, yet each evil was perhaps overmatched by the want of an exact and known specified method of procedure. But both those evils together were, in his opinion, overbalanced by the want of learned Judges; and the necessity, there was, that those who officiated as such, should from their ignorance refer to native advisers, who had all the functions but none of the authority or responsibility of Judges; or else rely on their natural unassisted common sense (which, in other words, was only arbitrary will and discretion); or else, which was worst of all, upon the little learning in English or foreign systems of law, hastily caught up, but for want of a regular legal education ill understood. From the combination of all these causes, it must have happened, that appeals were so numerous, that so much delay, and often expense, was incurred in the Courts of the provinces; which, if any reliance was to be placed in the work he (Mr. N.) held in his hand, far exceeds any parallel to be drawn from any other Courts (Mr. Norton here read from a work called, "the judicial system of India," from which, he said, it appeared that, on reports of various averages, taken in different Courts, or causes tried in several series of years, no less than one half of the decisions were reversed, or altered, on appeal; that the time expended in the trial of suits appealed to the Sudhar Audalut occupied from three to twelve years; and that the rate of proceeding was not one-tenth, compared with the dispatch of the English Courts.) The great encouragement to appeal was of course the probability that, either from some defect in the Judges of the Court, or in the proceedings, the first decision would be overturned. There could be no such effectual check to this evil of appeals, and the consequent expensive and protracted litigation, as the supplying the Courts with learned and experienced Judges, whose judgments the people must necessarily respect. It was a mistake in principle to make the power of appeal the check on improper judgments, instead of the learning and integrity of the Judges; though, in the absence of the latter, the former might be better than none. On these grounds the people of this country were to be congratulated that the positive, declared policy, both of the Government at home, and of the Governments here, was, to open the native courts to all practitioners; and to promote those to seats on the bench, who, in that character, had made themselves most competent to the duty, and he trusted the time would come when none but those who proved themselves competent from their learning, and experience would be elevated to that important station. Other improvements, and of hardly less importance, were, the digesting a sound, plain, clear code of the laws of evidence, (which being a code of natural law, and founded on natural reason, might and ought to be the same in all civilized countries), and the opening the highest Court of the Sudhar Audalut to counsellors and practitioners of their own appointment, from whatever classes of the King's subjects were competent to conduct, and argue cases appealed to their decision. This was an amendment, which it appeared to him, was not more wanted for the sake of the Judges themselves of those courts, and their more efficient information of the matters, and the merits of the cases before them, than for the sake of the public at large, who looked to that court as the great source of the administration of justice throughout India, and the source of all the declared law of the land. There would then be at least one tribunal, where learned, and solemn, and public discussion, and an open decision, after full inquiry and full information upon all disputed topics of law and right, would be made; and the public would thereby as it appeared to him, gain the best security, not only that the law in each particular case should be correctly pronounced, but that the rules and grounds of the law should be deliberately declared for the benefit of all others.—Conservative, October 13.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

OCTOBER 23, 1837.

On Wednesday last, a jury was impanelled by the coroner to hold an investigation into the cause of the death of Hlaudee, a chokeedar attached to the Mascebe Parah Thanah; and after the body of the deceased was inspected, the inquest was adjourned till two o'clock this afternoon.

It appeared in the evidence of Maher Ally chokeedar, of the same Thanah, that on Tuesday last deceased took a quantity of the infusion of the coochela (nux vomica) of which witness saw him soak a large quantity in about two eggs of water two days before. About a quarter of an hour after deceased became ill and unmanageable from convulsions. Two chokeedars held him down. Kooin, the native doctor, who had recommended deceased to take the infusion, was present and desired cold water to be poured over the head of the deceased. This being done, deceased was placed in his bed. On a second attempt to bathe the deceased he expired. Witness did not know that the drug was poisonous. Deceased took it as a remedy for rheumatism. Kooin was present at the taking of the infusion and said deceased might take as much of as he could, but not too much. Kooin had said that the convulsions would continue till evening and the deceased would then recover. The medicine was taken about 8 o'clock, and the deceased expired about twelve. Two other chokeedars, had also taken of the medicine soon after deceased took it. Witness knew that Kooin was in the habit of prescribing medicines for people in the neighbourhood, but did not take any money for his trouble. After taking the infusion, deceased complained of a great burning in his stomach, and felt excessively hot and thirsty. The convulsions were very strong.

Dr. Bain, the Police Surgeon, examined the body of the deceased, by opening the head, chest and abdomen. He found there was a considerable congestion of the brain and effusion of serum in the surface, base, and ventricles of the brain. The left lung was inflated with forthly looking matter and was easily broken up. The urinary bladder was distended with urine; but the rest of the viscera in the chest and abdomen was healthy. Professor O'Shaughnessy, who undertook to analyse the contents of the deceased's stomach informed witness that he was unable to direct any thing of a poisonous quality in it. Witness was of opinion that vegetable poison was seldom detected. Witness considered coochela as a very powerful poison, and that the quantity of the infusion of the drug taken by the deceased was more than sufficient to have caused death.

Rohin Chookkeedar, partook of the infusion, about half a wine glass full, as a remedy for pains that he had. He took it because another chokeedar of the same thanah had been cured by the same medicine previously. Witness did not know when it was mixed nor by whom.

The Coroner then summed up the evidence and the Jury returned a verdict of "Died from taking a large quantity of the infusion of coochela or nux vomica."—Hurkaru, Oct. 25.

SUPREME COURT.

OCTOBER 23 1837.

FOURTH TERM.

A gloom prevailed in the Court this morning in consequence of Sir Benjamin Malkin's death. The Chief Justice took his seat at eleven. Three were, as usual, motions taken by his Lordship, after which it was understood that there were no Common Law Causes set down on the board as yet, but there were some Equity Cases which are fixed for the 26th, or Thursday next. His Lordship, however, intimated to the Bar that he would sit to-morrow to take motions.

Sir J. P. Grant is expected to be back by the middle of next month.—Hurkaru, October 24.

OCTOBER 24, 1837.

In the goods of Richard Brittridge, deceased.

Mr. Advocate-General moved that a commission do issue authorizing commissioners at Nussurabad to administer the oath of an executor to Captain R. B. Brittridge, of the 13th regiment of Native Infantry.

The learned counsel stated, the deceased who was in his life time a merchant at Mirzapore, died on the 6th of November, 1836. Mr. H. H. Thomas, the Civil and Session Judge of Mirzapore, took charge of the estate and effects, and caused search to be made, if the deceased had made a will, but was unable to find one.

Mr. Thomas being subsequently informed by Captain Brittridge, the son of the deceased, that he had reason to believe his father left a will, a second search was made, and a testamentary paper in the handwriting of the deceased was found in a writing desk. The paper is as follows:—

"I, Richard Brittridge, of the town of Mirzapore, do hereby make my last will and testament, revoking all others whosoever or howsoever made. I give and bequeath all my property of every description to my son R. B. Brittridge, a captain in the service of the Honorable Company of merchants trading to the East Indies, for the following purposes: First, to pay off all my just debts; secondly, should there be any residue, to divide it equally between himself and Jane Francis, married to Charles Bransby Francis, a surgeon on the establishment of the said Company, &c. &c. I hereby appoint my son R. B. Brittridge, my sole executor of this my last will and testament. In witness whereof I have this 12th of May, 1836, fixed my hand and seal in the presence of.

Mr. Advocate-General did not contend that the deceased was prevented by the act of God from affixing his signature and having attesting witnesses to the will, but still he insisted that the will was complete. He urged that the tustion of the deceased prevented him from having legal advice, and cited a letter from the deceased to his son, in which he stated that he was preparing for the event by arranging all his worldly affairs. With this view he had made the memorandum of a will, in which he had appointed him executor. The learned counsel urged, that it was in the contemplation of death that the paper was written, and cited several cases where in probate had been granted under circumstances of the like description.

But the Chief Justice was clearly of opinion, that the piper was an unfinished testamentary document, and that the letter from the deceased to his son was strong evidence to show it was a memorandum as the deceased had called it.—Probate refused.—Englishman, Oct. 26.

OCTOBER 26, 1837.

Our Supreme Court report would have been blank this day, but for an omission of our reporter, who neglected to record on Monday, that C. T. Moreton, Esq., took the prescribed oaths and was admitted to practise at the bar.

We learn that the motion to set aside the verdict of the jury in Rex v. Thomas Ferguson, will not come on before the return of Sir John Peter Grant from Singapore.—Hurkaru October 26.

OCTOBER 26 1837.

(Before the Chief Justice.)

In the matter of Rajah Sheeb Kissen Bahadoor against his brothers, the Advocate-General moved, that the attorney for the plaintiffs show cause why he did not file his interrogatories within three weeks from the time of the service of the notice on him. The order was granted on the 23d September, and the notice was served on the plaintiff's attorney on the 23d of that month.

Mr. Leith, for the plaintiffs, offered to put in several affidavits to show the grounds, one of which he read, which set forth that the interrogatories were not filed, because the notice had only now been made over to Mr. Leith to prepare the interrogatories, which he was doing, and the notice had been served on the plaintiff's attorney, only three days previous to the departure of Mr. C. T. Princep, his counsel, for Singapore; and as the proceeding consisted of 1,055 folios, he could not prepare and file these interrogatories within the specified period. He further contended, that the Advocate-General ought to have shown the grounds of his proceedings before issuing the notices, and laid them before his client's attorney four days previous to the service of his notices on his client.

The Chief Justice replied, that the attorney for the opposite side was bound to file his grounds four days previous to serving the notices, but he was bound to show them to the opposite party, and to serve the notice on him.

He consented to grant him further time for one month, on his paying the costs of this order.—Hurkaru, Oct. 27.

BOMBAY SUPREME COURT.

WEDNESDAY, 27TH SEPTEMBER, 1837.

Before the Honorable the Chief Justice.

AND

A Common Jury composed of the following gentlemen.

HINDIA VS NOWROOEE DORABJEE AND MORAB JEEFORABJEE
For the Prosecution. Messrs. Campbell and Montagu.

Attorney.—Messrs. Morgan and Armiage.

For the Defence.—Mr. Advocate-General Le Mesurier.

Attorney.—Mr. J. P. Larkins.

This was a case in which one Awaboye, the widow of Hormasjee, Shapoorjee charged the defendants with the publication of a libel to her prejudice, in a certain Gooratoon newspaper called the Bombay Chabook, dated 2d March 1837. The case was then opened by Mr. Campbell. His Lordship the Chief Justice remarking incidentally that it was generally usual for a Junior Counsel to open a case.

Gentlemen of the Jury, I will not trespass long upon your patience, the case being of so very simple a nature, but will proceed as briefly as possible to state the grounds upon which this indictment is laid. The Prosecutrix Awaboye, the widow of Hormasjee Shapoorjee, a respectable Parsee merchant, complains of a libel against her in a native newspaper called the Bombay Chabook, of which the defendants are the Editor and Proprietors. The libel of which she complains is a publication in the Journal on the 2d March, 1837, to the following tenor and effect.

"Now on the other hand, during the last year, a respectable Parsee (meaning the said Hormasjee Shapoorjee deceased) departed this life, leaving behind him 3 sons and 1 daughter making 4 children, one widow (meaning the said Awaboye) and a property to the value of about four or five lakhs of rupees; and notwithstanding he (meaning the said Hormasjee Shapoorjee deceased) was a man of much experience and wisdom, yet in his last will which he made, he made many mistakes, and amongst others he appointed one Soortee (literally a Surat man) to be his Executor. At the same time his death was announced in your paper, on the perusal thereof it was printed, that the property of the defunct could with difficulty be taken care of, and accordingly I now see and hear in the town such things about the Surat Vakeel, and the widow of the defunct (meaning the said Awaboye) that if it be the fact it must be considered to be a great crime and a very shameful thing and exceedingly scandalous, and fully tending to a breach of confidence. I am not willing truly or falsely to defame the character of any man or woman, therefore I do not enter into any long discussion of the subject; but he is a brother by day and a husband by night (meaning a brother by day and a husband by night to the said Awaboye) who all day and all night continues lying in the house of his late friend, and who, sending away all the other executors, friends or relations, clerks and moonshies, himself is managing all the business. Certainly such conduct is not becoming the character either of himself or the widow."

"In our paper of this day a correspondent's letter signed by a person opposite to the Temple of Alanoctone Sheet is published. We do recommend all our countrymen to peruse it. The subject which our clever correspondent has treated upon, is one of very great importance, and it is a very shameful affair, and though we were not ignorant of the case of this Soortee Executor, and the shameless widow (meaning the said Awaboye) yet we had no authentic grounds in hand hitherto, to enable we are obliged to such an important affair, consequently we were obliged to be silent thereon." To the great damage, scandal and disgrace of the said Awaboye, and of her reputation and character and to the evil example of all others in the like case offending and against the peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and dignity.

The law has defined a libel to be any thing either by writing, printing, or pictures, which may provoke another to a breach of peace. I may here anticipate the defence which I understand will be set up on the part of the defendants, that there was no intention on their part to say any thing injurious to the character of this prosecutrix, but from the purpose of the matter laid as libellous that will remain for your consideration. To establish the fact of publication by defendants, I shall put in the declaration made by one of them in conformity to the Act of the Legislative Council passed for the Regulation of Newspapers and Periodicals. This having been put in and read, it appeared to set forth that SONARAJEE DONARAJEE declared himself the printer and publisher of a newspaper in the Goojrattee language called the MOMMAINA CHABOOK, upon which the Chief Justice remarked that there was a variance between this and the specification in the indictment of the paper, in which the matter alleged to be libellous was described as the SOMRAY CHABOOK.

JACKERSON NANABAY sworn. I am a Banian in the service of Byramjee Fuckerjee. I know Awaboye the widow of the late Horinarjee Shapoorjee (a paper of the 19th January, 1837, is here put into the witness's hand marked A). I have not seen this paper before (two copies of the CHABOOK of 2nd March, 1837, are now put into his hands.) I have seen these papers, marked D & C (paper marked D is put into his hand.) I have seen these papers before (and E put into his hand;) I have seen all these papers before. I saw them all five months ago at Awaboye's house. I was sent by her to bring them from the CHABOOK office. They were delivered to me by a Parssee. I took them to Awaboye. The CHABOOK office is situated in the market near the Gun Bow-well.

Cross-examined by Mr. Advocate General.—I know Awaboye well and have done so for the last ten months, during which time I have been in her employ as a clerk upon 12 rupees a month. I keep her accounts (requested by the Jury to speak up) I have said that I am in the service of Byramjee Fuckerjee. Mr. Advocate-General.—Are you in the service of both him and the Proxixutrix? No, I only go occasionally to the proxixutrix when I am sent for. Byramjee Fuckerjee is not employed by Awaboye but his wife is her sister. I do not know how old Awaboye is, but she is much older than I am. I am 21; she is, perhaps, about 30 years of age. She is not an active gay woman. She does not live alone, but has her family consisting of three sons and one daughter in the house with her. The eldest son, who is the oldest of the family, may be about 17 or 18 years old. I do not know how long her husband has been dead. He died before I entered her employment. She has the same servants now as she had all the time that I have been with her, but I do not know if they are those who were in her husband's service. I have never heard any thing regarding this from them. I do not know if the prosecutrix understands Goojrattee. (All witnesses concerned in this case are ordered out of the Court.) I purchased four papers at the CHABOOK office. I read Goojrattee. I never read any of these papers to Awaboye, but merely delivered them to her. I don't recollect exactly, but I paid half a rupee for each newspaper.

Re-examined.—I am not in Awaboye's employ but only go occasionally when she sends for me. I remain in Byramjee's house, and he pays me my 12 rupees per month.

By the Jury.—Do Byramjee and Awaboye live in the same house? No, they live separate. Upon what occasion were you sent for by the prosecutrix? How often in the course of a month or week? Are you sent for upon business, or very frequently? I am only sent for when there is business. By the Chief Justice.—When is there business? Not frequently but only occasionally. By the Jury.—What business are you sent for; mercantile business, or business connected with the family? When she wishes her accounts to be settled, she sends for me. When I went for the papers by her order she told me to bring four. She mentioned their dates. By the Chief Justice.—Of each? Yes. When I carried the papers to her she did not read in my presence, but merely took them from me. She did not look at them but kept them by. I know that the papers shown to me to-day, are the same as I took her, from their dates and from no other reason. I put no marks or memorandum upon them by which I could identify them again. By the Jury.—Did you take any memorandum of the dates? No. How do you recollect them if you did not, or were you desired by any person to take notice of the dates? I remember the dates but can assign no reason for doing so; nor was I told by any person to take notice of them. I remember them from my mistress having told me what dates to ask for. I brought them all upon the same day, but read nothing of them but their dates. I was sent for them in April last, but I don't know upon what day.

Cowarjee Hormazjee, sworn. (Mr. Advocate-General endeavoured to discredit his testimony).—I know the defendants. They carry on the business of a newspaper called the Bombay Chabook. The name by which it commonly goes is the Chabook newspaper. Both defendants work at that press. They each write articles for the Chabook newspaper. (Mr. Campbell here requested that the witness would give his evidence in English, which, in reply, he stated that he understood very imperfectly; he was however desired to try and did so.) It is known among Europeans by the name of the Chabook or the Chabook Press. It has no other name. What do you mean by writing articles for that paper? They both conduct that paper. (The Chief Justice objects to this mode of examination, as the witness should be required to speak to facts only, and not be suffered to draw inferences.) It appears in public in the name of Sorabjee. I know it to be his property. Cross examined by Mr. Advocate-General.—Sorabjee Dorahjee is printer of the Courier newspaper. I don't know any thing about his monthly salary, whether he gets 40 rupees or not. I am a merchant on this Island and also Editor of the Bombay Sammachar. I know that the defendants write articles for the Chabook by their style, having been formerly acquainted with them. Their place being opposite to mine, I see them both frequently at the office. I have never had any connexion with them in business. I have plenty of reasons for knowing that they are connected with the Chabook, all Bombay knows that (From the tone in which this was delivered His Lordship informed the witness that he was upon his oath, any further indulgence in a similar strain of levity would meet with the reprehension of the Court.) My reasons for knowing this is because Sorabjee's name is generally upon the paper as printed in his office. I know that they carry on that office and, why I know is because Nowrojee has written me many letters stating himself to be the editor. There is also a declaration at the Magistrate's office to that effect. I have none of the letters with me which Nowrojee wrote to me in the character of an editor. I have never been in the Chabook office. It appears at the bottom of the Chabook at what office it is printed. I have never seen any of their writings in manuscript which afterwards appeared in print in their paper, but I have seen advertisements in their writing. I am not the proprietor, but editor of the Samachar. No one assists me in editing my paper.

I never received any articles from either of the defendants for publication in my paper. I had an acquaintance but not an intimacy with them. Neither of them ever mentioned to me that he was editor of the Chabook news paper. In conversations which I may have had with Nowrojee I do not remember whether he said he was editor or not.

Ardaseer Hormasjee, sworn.—I am a warehouse keeper at Mr. Nicol's. I have known Awaboye for the last five years. I know the defendants. I remember having a conversation with Nowrojee in March last. I have been a subscriber to the Chabook for some time; my conversation with Nowrojee to which I now allude, took place one evening on the Esplanade road as I was in my buggy going to my garden. Nowrojee was walking on the Esplanade. I asked him "what news." He said have you read my Chabook? I replied, "Yes, I have." I asked him who was the writer of that paper regarding the particulars from a person appointed to Manackjee Sheti's Agiary, and he replied "who do you think?" I do not remember the date of the paper, but it was in March last. I said, I thought it referred to the family of Hormasjee Sapoorjee. He said, you are right. Nothing more was said; I read the article in question, and am in the daily habit of reading the Chabook, and when I read this, it was somewhere in the beginning of March between the 5th and 10th. If the paper was shown to me, I could know from the date if it was the same as I read. I do not exactly remember, but think there were two or three papers in March in continuation of the same subject. I do not recollect the date of this conversation with Nowrojee, but it was about four or five days after the publication of the paper, a friend was in my buggy, but no one with Nowrojee; the person with me was Ardaseer Framjee. During the period of my acquaintance with Awaboye, I never heard any imputations against her character. I know Cursetjee Eduljee. —Cross examined by Mr. Advocate-General. —I am not related to Awaboye nor connected with her by marriage. Ardaseer Framjee bears the name of Darwar. I take this to be a title of respectability. I never knew him to go by the name of Chore or Turkatia. By the jury. —I never went to Awaboye's house, I have no business which would lead me there; I have seen her in the streets, and used to see her at her house once or twice about five years ago. I have no further knowledge of her than this. I know several others of the same name as Awaboye; I know that she is the widow of Hormasjee Sapoorjee; I am acquainted with Nowrojee. The paper bears the name of Sorabjee but I have no personal knowledge of his being connected with it. I know that Nowrojee has some business in connection with Sorabjee's paper; I heard from others not from Nowrojee himself, that he is the Editor of that paper. He has told me frequently what was published in the paper. (The Chabook newspapers are put in on the part of the prosecution as evidence of the libellous matter to which Mr. Advocate-General objects, on the grounds that although the matter contained in them may be libellous, there is no evidence that either of the defendants was editor or proprietor, or concerned in their publication.)

Pestonjee Hormasjee, sworn.—I am a Broker, and I procure China paper for printing, I know both the traversers, and am in the habit of going to their office to sell them China paper, suitable for printing. I procure it from other places and sell it to them. Sorabjee has the newspaper office, where the Bombay Chabook is published. I collect their bills and outstanding debts from their subscribers, sometimes I take advertisements to be printed. I sell them printing paper and receive these bills as payment. They are signed by Sorabjee and given to me by him and no other person. Sorabjee now carries on the business, but Nowrojee was formerly in the office and used to write something for Sorabjee who was the proprietor. The business has been entirely managed by Sorabjee for the last 18 months. Nowrojee used to write about 7 or 8 months ago, but I only say this by guess. Cross examined by Mr. Advocate-General. —I was always told to go to particular persons with the bills, and the money which I got I placed as a set off for the payment of the paper which I furnished. The bills were written papers signed by Sorabjee. I do not know what Nowrojee and Sorabjee had to do with the paper.

Manackjee Pestonjee, sworn.—I am a compositor in the Chabook Press and I am employed by Sorabjee Dorabjee; my business is to compose with types from manuscripts in the Gazeratte language. I know the defendant Nowrojee Dorabjee. When the press was first established by him in 1835, he carried it on till September of that year when he went to Poona for two months. During his absence Sorabjee carried it on, but when he returned he began to carry it on again, and contained to do so till January 1837. I don't know if he has written any articles since January last I know his hand writing; I used always to compose from it, as well from letters received from other places. I have composed since January last from Nowrojee's hand writing, and used to do so every day up to the time that he went to jail. When he went I don't know as I was away at Panwell about that time for five days. When I returned I heard he had gone to jail. This was at least four or five months after January. Up to the time that I went to Panwell, I used to compose constantly from Nowrojee's hand writing. The Chabook office is in the Bazar within the Fort, near the Ganbow Well, in a house belonging to Sorabjee, Wadia. Cross-examined by Mr. Advocate-General. I composed from other letters during January and from that time up to my going to Panwell.

By a Jurymen.—Do you read Guzeratte or do you only know the letters? I read it. I am in the habit of reading the articles which I compose. I compose every thing whether news, translations, editorial remarks or advertisements. I do know the distinction between Editorial remarks and other things such as letters or news. I composed from manuscripts by Nowrojee who used to write every thing for the paper except the letters. He left off the paper in January last and took to it again in February and continued to carry it on till he went to jail. There are two compositors in the Chabook office besides me. I am not foreman over the others. (Mr. Campbell tenders the newspaper marked B. dated 2nd March 1837 to be read, to which, Mr. Advocate-General objects, as it has not proved to the Court how they have come there. His Lordship decides that the paper should be read, which is done, and Mr. Vaupell reads the heading of the paper, as Shree Momboyne Chabook. Mr. Advocate-General argued, that upon this evidence they could go no further; the description of the paper, in the indictment, in which the paper is alleged to have been published, being at variance with the name of the paper now produced; it being laid in the indictment that it had been published in a paper called the Bombay Chabook, whereas the paper produced in support of the evidence of publication is one intitled Shree Momboyne Chabook. Moreover, no writing or publishing by the defendants had been proved, although the indictment states that it has been written and published by them. In support of these objections the learned Counsel quoted the case of Cartwright vs. Wright (5 Barnwell and Anderson) and that of Bell vs. Byrne (12 East Page 554). To this his Lordship observed that although the evidence was by no means so satisfactory as he could wish it to be, still he thought that there was enough to send before a jury. The Court now adjourned at a few minutes past 7, till the following morning. His Lordship reminding the Jurors that being on their oath there should be no communication between them and others on the subject of this trial. —Gazette, Sept. 30.

THURSDAY MORNING, 28TH SEPT. 1837

On opening the Court this morning, the Chief Justice said, "Mr Advocate-General, with regard to certain objections that you made yesterday I have a very strong opinion, but I do not think it sufficient to authorize me to put a stop to the proceedings, as in the event of a conviction you will be able to urge them either in mitigation of punishment or in moving for a new trial when I shall be able to hear them with the assistance of another Judge, but in the meantime I think it best to allow the matter to go before the Jury."

Ardaseer Framjee sworn. I am Manackjee Wadia's manager. I know the Prosecutrix in this case to be the widow of Hormayjee Sapoorjee. I also know the two travellers, Nowrojee and Sapoorjee, to be engaged in the business of the Chabook newspaper. Ardaseer Hormayjee is a friend of mine and I remember dining in a buggy with him in the month of March last. On that occasion, as we were going out of the Fort, we met Nowrojee on the Esplanade. Ardaseer stopped the conveyance and called Nowrojee to him. He came and stood on the right side of the buggy and asked him "what news?" He asked Ardaseer "have you read my paper, the Chabook?"—These are the exact words as far as I recollect, but I only speak by guess. They had a long conversation together but I only recollect a little of it more or less—(proceeds to state what he recollects.) Ardaseer asked him who does that refer to that you have written in your paper? Nowrojee replied "Who do you think it refers to?" Ardaseer answered, "I think to Hormayjee Sapoorjee Pastagia's (dry fruit-seller) Widow—Nowrojee said 'Yes, it is published with reference to her'—a good deal more conversation took place in the course of which Nowrojee spoke against Awaboye and said that he would prove what he had asserted. He said "what I have written and printed I will prove." The conversation was against Awaboye and what he had printed was against her, but as I did not like the conversation I did not listen to it but remained quite. He said that Courtjee Soortee met him on the road and was cross with him and threatened to beat him—he added I gave him no answer and went away. Nowrojee said also, Awaboye is a very bad woman and acts very improperly. I recollect being in a garden with Ardaseer Hormayjee, where all we friends generally meet together. Ardaseer being a subscriber to the Chabook newspaper brings it there and reads it to us sometimes.

He brought it there on the 2nd or 3rd of March. When we were all seated together he commenced reading the newspaper and read all the particulars regarding Awaboye from the beginning to the end. Some of the rest also read it and we began to converse regarding it. The paper was dated the 2nd or 3rd of March. I also read the paper and took it to refer to Awaboye. The substance of what I took to refer to her is what is written in the Chabook regarding Soortee being "a brother by day and a husband by night." This was signed "a person opposite to Manackjee Sheet's Agency." Cross examined by Mr. Advocate-General. My reasons for thinking that this paper related to her are because she lives in that street. I have known Awaboye for the last 6 or 7 years by sight, and that she is the widow of the late Hormayjee Sapoorjee,—for the last two years also I have visited at her house. The conversation which we had in the garden regarding this business was before we met Nowrojee. I first mentioned in the garden to the others who were there to whom I thought it referred, and they all agreed with my opinion—no one had spoken to me about it before this. This was the first time I had seen the paper—Ardaseer Hormayjee produced the paper and said all that Nowrojee said when we met him in the garden, for it was he who spoke to him. I have not seen Awaboye for the last six or seven months. I do not recollect whether I have seen her since I went to the garden. Ardaseer and my other friends, I have been once since that at her house, where I went with her sister's son, either Pestoojee or Ardaseer, I do not recollect who of them. This was 8 or 10 days after we had read the paper. I went because she sent for me. When I got there I saw her sitting with her sister. She said "this bad man (meaning Nowrojee,) has printed such bad things against me—it hurts my character and puts me to great shame without any fault of mine—I will kill myself". She sent for me as a friend of her nephew. I assisted my friends and relations with my advice in law suits when I am asked to do so, but I never receive a price for this. I expect no remuneration from Awaboye. I advised her not to go to Court with so bad a man. Ardaseer Byramjee, her nephew, manages this prosecution, he has told me that he was going to file indictments against Nowrojee by desire of Awaboye, by the Jury I met Nowrojee on the Esplanade when I was with Ardaseer Hormayjee in the buggy, about the 7th or 8th March. It was after the conversation in the garden that we had in the buggy. It continued for about 8 or 10 minutes, but I took no part in the conversation. I would never speak to such a person as Nowrojee. I heard that part of the conversation which I have related but I paid no attention to the remainder. I have stated all that I remember. If I am asked further I will answer. I paid attention to the part that I have stated and not to the other, because Nowrojee he is a bad man I did not wish to hear what he said and told myself not to do so. Nowrojee did not say that he had written the article, but that he had printed it and would prove it. Nowrojee used the Gozratee chaploo which in English means I have printed it. Ardaseer Hormayjee recalled I said yesterday that I had read something in the Chabook newspaper regarding Awaboye and also related a conversation that I had with Nowrojee upon the subject. If the paper was put into my hands I would say if it was the paper I alluded to (the paper being handed to the witness, he marks the article that he means.)

By the Jury I did not state yesterday all that passed between Nowrojee and me in our conversation on the Esplanade; what I kept back I was not asked about. (He is reminded by his Lordship that he was sworn to speak the whole truth.) I have mentioned all that I said to Nowrojee, but I did not mention any thing about reading in the garden.

By Mr. Advocate-General—I have not been in Court during the examination of the last witness by the Jury, I stated yesterday all the conversation that took place between Nowrojee and me. I did not ask Nowrojee who was the author of the article, I only alluded to the printing.

Jeejeebhoy Dadabhai called and objected to by the Chief Justice as he had not been sworn and his name was not in the list of witnesses. His Lordship felt himself compelled to state that there had been a strange mode adopted in getting up this prosecution, whoever was concerned, but it was not that which he had been accustomed to see practised in the Courts, particularly where the proceedings had been adjourned to suit their convenience. Mr. Campbell did not see how the other side could object with a good grace to his being examined as he was a witness for the defence. Mr. Advocate-General said that his learned friends were certainly proceeding in an unusual way; being driven from their attempts to prove their case by Sorabjee's declaration, they were feeling way and shaping their course accordingly. The Chief Justice being of opinion that notwithstanding his name not being on the list, he should be called, the learned gentleman consented to his being put into the box and sworn. His Lordship, however, showed the urgent necessity of gentlemen when drawing up proceedings to consider the number of their witnesses, and upon whom they wished to call so as to afford some sort of guidance to the Court. Jeejeebhoy Dadabhai, sworn. I am a broker. I know the Defendants (Some of the Jury requested that this witness should give his evidence in English from his personal knowledge that he could speak English, and adducing as a proof that he could do so, that he was a member of the Grand Jury. His Lordship observed that was no proof as he had known a man stand behind him who was quite deaf and was still a member of the Jury, though the fact of his being on the Jury did not prove that he could hear; as the witness now on the floor preferred to give his evidence in his own language it was not in the power of the Court to force him to speak English. I had a conversation with Nawrojee Dorabjee before he went to jail. It is a long time since he went there; he used to come to converse with me almost every two or three days. I never went to any place at his request, he never asked me to go any where. I sent my servant to Awaboye after a conversation that I had had with Nawrojee, stating that this was a bad matter and had better be amicably settled. I sent this message by my servant as from myself, I sent because I thought it improper for the Parsee community, as this related to a female, to bring it into Court. Nawrojee did not come to me particularly about this matter but used to come to converse with me upon different topics. He used to come frequently sometime two or three times a week. I advised him to settle this matter amicably, the best way he could. He said if you think proper to settle it, I am ready to do so, I accordingly sent my servant to the prosecutrix and she refused to do it. I neither sent nor went to any other person. I have spoken with many persons upon this subject, but don't recollect I advised the nephews of Awaboye to settle the matter and only as it was bad. I did this because it was a bad matter concerning my caste. Cross examined by Mr. Advocate-General. I never saw the prosecutrix.

Corretjee Eduljee Soortee, sworn.—I knew Hormasjee Sapoorjee in his life time and I know his widow. A few days before his death he recommended his children to my care and asked me to take care of his estate. I know Nawrojee Dorabjee. I made an application to Awaboye on his account from the following circumstance. As I was going along the road I met Nawrojee near the King's Baracks. He called me by name and said raise 1000 or 1200 Rs. at interest from Hormasjee's widow for me. I asked him if he had an estate as without that security the widow would not lend any money. He replied, "my estate is news, which I will show you." Nothing further passed, and I went away. He showed me nothing then. On the 2nd March he printed and showed me. On reading that news I knew what he meant. Our first conversation took place in February last after 12 o'clock in the day, five or seven days before he printed this. I mentioned to Awaboye what Nawrojee had spoken to me. I said Nawrojee Halkaru wants 1000 or 1200 Rs. at interest. She said she could not lend money to a person who had no estate, she said nothing more. I saw him again on the 4th March at the Gunbow-wall about one o'clock. I told him that he neither feared God nor the justice of this world. You will be summoned before the Justice. He said I have written and printed it and you may ask me wherever you like. Cross examined by Mr. Advocate-General.—I have lived upwards of twenty years in Bombay and am called Soortee from being a native of Surat. I am about 40 years old and the prosecutrix about 35. I knew her first about a month before her husband's death, when I used to attend upon him. He died about 20 months ago. My attendance upon him, consisted in my going to him, because from our friendship of 20 years he insisted that I should do so. I went to him merely as a friend and used to go to his home or garden to sit with him. I did not know Awaboye till about a month before her husband's death although I was acquainted with him for 20 years because it is not customary with us to sit down with women. The month preceding his death I became acquainted with her from being for a month constantly at their house day and night, as he would take no medicine except in my presence. On these occasions Awaboye and her sister used to come frequently to his bed and sit down. He was bed-ridden then.

Previous to his death Hormasjee recommended me to take care of his children and his estate, which I promised to do. When Awaboye's children are sick I am obliged to go to her house at all times, but 20 others have gone in a similar way. I would not go otherwise. I am the manager of her husband's estate. I act under her orders, but give her my advice when necessary. I am not an executor by Hormasjee's last will, but in a former will which he made, there were four executors appointed of whom I was one. The widow was appointed the sole executrix by the last will. Hormasjee took out the names of all the executors of the first will by my suggestion, in consequence of having had a conversation with me whether it would be better to make a will in favour of his wife solely or other persons. These other three persons who were executors in the first will, interfere and give their advice the same as I do when Awaboye asks them. None of them take any money belonging to the estate. I do not consider myself empowered by the Testator's recommendation to take any money. Awaboye manages the estate by my advice. I sold her China goods for her and took the advice of the other persons who had been appointed executors in the first will.

All the writers and clerks that were in the service of the deceased are now in that of Awaboye except one muttah and servant, who were discharged because there was no business for them. I remember a cause in this Court in which one of the parties was named Joze Maria de Souza. Myself and another Parsee had lent him a sum of money and were the plaintiffs in that case. We lost the suit. The Court said on that occasion that the suit was illegal and false. We then wanted to file a bill in equity but the party died. My attorney explained to me that the Court was very angry with me and therefore I must produce all my former accounts. I wished to file a bill in equity and make Lima de Souza a party to the suit, but he died. I don't recollect that the Court said anything at that time about the criminal side of the Court. This was about 3 years ago. I have been in Bombay all that time since. I went to Tarapur on the occasion of Viccajee Meysjee's marriage. Shortly after the result of this action I left Bombay, but not sooner than two months after. I was absent about a month and then returned. The deceased and I, and two or three other persons, after the case was settled, went to the hot wells. During my stay in Bombay after the action I appeared in public. I did not file my bill in equity, because Lima de Souza died the day after I lost my suit. It was my misfortune that I lost my good cause, but his death prevented me from filing my Bill, as I wanted to make him a party to the suit, having had dealings with him. I had frequent conversations with Awaboye since this prosecution commenced. She told me that she was prosecuting Nawrojee. I am not the manager of this prosecution, but her nephew is. She pays the money, which will pass through his hands, not mine. The day that I read this publication, my feelings were very much hurt and so were hers, so much so, that she and I intended to kill ourselves. I do not know why she did not adopt a mode of prosecution to prove her innocence; that is only known to the manager. I was not aware that in this form of proceeding the truth would not be allowed to be entered upon, nor was she; but I was in hopes that the truth of the whole matter would be acquired in it. What Nawrojee has printed is publicly known to all the world, but any amicable arrangement that we could enter into who would know it.

This is a public Court and the result of this suit will be publicly known. Re-examined by Mr. Mehtien.

Awaboye does not live alone, her two sisters and her children live with her and did so at the time when I was in the habit of going constantly to her house. I never see her alone. Her sisters, the metahs and her children are all present. By the Jury.—When I met Nowrojee the second time in the month of March last, he said I have written and published. If you want to ask me any more about it you must do so in a Court of Justice. I read the Chabook of the 2nd March, which was sent to me by a friend. I am no relation of Awaboye's; she is not my sister-in-law. My children go to her house and her's come to mine. A Banneah was in my employment in March last, called Nasrendasa. My metah is named Keeran. I used to send messages by him to the prosecutrix, sometimes she sent her men to me. She has many servants, and she did not always send the same one, but whoever was a hand.

When Hormajee was about cancelling his former will, he consulted all the other executors. He beat and drove them out after the consultation. I also was present and assisted him to beat them. I conceived that the article in the Chabook applied to me and Awaboye because any one that read it would see that it did, from the particular manner in which it described three sons and one daughter of a man who died about a year ago, leaving property to the amount of four or five lakhs of rupees, and a Soortee or Surat man being the manager of the business, and whoever met us on the road said that it referred to us. On reading it, it is self-evident that it reflects upon us and upon no one else. Mr. Montrieux observed, that as the Jury had gone so far in questioning the witness about the cancelling the will and the beating of the co-executors, he thought that something more should be known about it, and he left it to His Lordship to say if it should not be so. The witness being re-examined, states the co-executors had been beaten by the deceased because when he had employed them to draw up a will they left two blank lines which led him and myself to suspect that they intended fraud. By the Chief Justice. I know that Mr. Morgan is the attorney for this prosecution. I also know that Mr. Armitage, whom I see in Court, belongs to the same office, and is concerned also. By desire of the prosecutrix, I called upon these two gentlemen to inform who were the witnesses in the case. I declare upon my oath that I did not know from either of these gentlemen that in a criminal proceeding the truth of the matter could not be entered into. Nor did I know from any of their Purvoes. The Jury having retired for refreshment, Mr. Advocate-General moved on behalf of Mr. Hilberry, who had been a witness in the case of Willcox, who was tried last Tuesday, that he should have his expences for the time he had been detained in Bombay on account of this trial. His wages on board the Great Harwood had been 6 guineas a month, and he had been obliged to refuse several situations equally good in point of emolument while he was waiting here as a witness. There were 1,500 Rs. in the hands of the Accountant-General applicable to such purposes and the Advocate-General moved that the Master might be directed to examine what was stated in the affidavit and tax the amount that should be given to Mr. Hilberry for his expences. His Lordship replied that as the Court had sometimes ago made a decision on a similar application, the exact nature of which he did not then remember, he thought it would be better to enquire into that and make the present in accordance with that precedent; at present, however, he had no objection to its being given to the Clerk of the Crown to examine and report his opinion upon the matter. Upon the return of the Jury to the Court, Mr. Campbell called Curstjee Manajee, who being sworn states, I saw the Chabook newspaper and I read it. I have been a subscriber to it for more than two years. In the beginning of March last I saw a paper containing a charge against a Parsee woman (identifies the Chabook of the 2nd March as the paper he means) In my opinion the Parsee woman referred to is Awaboye, because it mentions her having three sons and a daughter and a Soortee being her manager. She is the widow of Hormajee Shapoorjee. Mr. Gadder, the Marshall of the Jail, deposes that to the best of his recollection was imprisoned about the 20th April last and still is in his custody. Mr. Vaupeil translates the heading of the paper to be the Whip of the happy and prosperous Bombay. The word Shree he said did not mean sacred, when placed before the name of Town except it be a holy place which Bombay is not. In answer to Mr. Campbell.—The word Shree is very seldom translated. I never translate it when connected as it now is. If it is not translated the heading is the Bombay Whip; if translated it is this happy and prosperous Bombay Whip. With reference to what was said about the heading not being properly described in the indictment he had to say that he was not told, to translate the heading but that portion of the paper which is charged in the indictment as libellous.

Four other papers marked B. C. D. E. were put in and read to prove that allusions had been made upon the subsequent occasions to the original libel, whereof the animus of the writer would be shewn.

By request of the Advocate-General the latter end articles, part of which are laid as libellous in the indictment, were read at full length by the officer of the Court, after which the learned gentleman proceeded to address the jury, as follows, on behalf of the traversers.

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY.—The whole charge against the Defendant being now entirely in your hands, it is for you to say whether they are guilty or not guilty. My learned friend who leads upon the other side, informed you that the case was very simple; but notwithstanding this assumed simplicity it has nearly occupied two whole days. It is so simple that without imputing claims to any person, I am satisfied that their case could have been proved had they been allowed to avail themselves of the declaration, alleged to have been made by one of the Defendants, according to an act of the Legislative Council, that he was the printer and publisher of the Chabook newspaper; but being unfortunately driven from that point they have been obliged to enter into evidence the value and weight of which you will, I am sure, have the benefit of learning from his Lordship's comments when he draws your attention to the whole evidence in summing up. With respect to the variances in the indictment and the evidence, although it would be more proper that you should hear an opinion upon them from his Lordship, it is still within your province to decide whether a charge resting upon illegal evidence can be supported. Certain newspapers have been put in evidence, but the only proof adduced regarding them is, that they were bought at a certain office; but still we are left in the dark as to how they came here, or if they are the same papers as the witness says he bought by the orders of the prosecutrix. Two kinds of evidence have been employed, to establish the connexion of the Defendants with the Chabook newspaper, both of which I consider have ended in a total failure. Nowrojee's conversations with different individuals implying or acknowledging his connexion, and the evidence of certain persons as to their belief from what they heard publicly and seeing him at the office in which the paper was printed. If the papers themselves are not proper evidence, what the witnesses may advance is only to be viewed as collateral support, and it remains then with you, gentlemen of the Jury, to judge, whether they are correct or not. The paragraphs in the Chabook of the 2nd March were considered in the opening address as applicable to the case of the prosecutrix and Soortee, sufficient for a case, and although I felt myself bound to make the objections which I did, I am glad now that nothing whatever has been kept behind, but that all have been placed before you.

I must here express my surprise that in this case the course of proceeding by an indictment has been adopted, when it is evident to every one, that the truth of the allegation cannot be enquired into. I say, that it is a most oppressive course. Nowrojee, if we are to believe the evidence, has always challenged an investigation, he has invariably said that he is ready to prove the truth of what he may have published and written, whenever an opportunity would be afforded him. There were two modes which the prosecutrix might have taken, and if she and the Soortee were so much distressed and had their feelings so much hurt as to lead them to entertain the idea of destroying themselves, they would gladly have embraced the opportunity of wiping away the slander thus attached to their name, and of establishing their innocence, but as they have now done so, they stamp as true the names which have been applied to them. She, if innocent, might have cleared herself, for by bringing an action in which the defendants would have been allowed to plead in justification, and if damages had been awarded it could never have been supposed that a rich woman like the prosecutrix would have proceeded in that manner from the hope of recovering them exorbitantly from two poor individuals in the condition of the defendants, one a printer in the Courier office upon a salary of 40 Rs a month, and the other a man in jail for debt. But allowing them to adduce proof she could have proved her innocence, or if what the defendants are charged with having printed and published was true, there would have been an end to the case, for the law holds that no one can complain of an injury sustained by his own bad conduct or dishonesty. In the shape of a criminal information the fullest enquiry would have been afforded, every possible circumstance would have been sifted from top to bottom, and in the weighing of serious charges her own oath would have been received in denial of it, which it would not in action for damages, but on the other hand, if the defendants had brought forward not only positive proofs of their assertions but a reasonable suspicion of the correctness of their inserting in a public journal what they have done, the information would not have been granted, as the law rejects all such applications on the part of those who do not come into court with clean hands. Whereas by this course the law is shut against every investigation of that sort and the truth is not allowed to be enquired into.

The law of libel in this view is not intended for the gratification of one individual by the punishment of another, but for the preservation of the tranquility of society which any slander or written defamation is apt to produce, wherefore it will not suffer an enquiry into the truth of the matter laid in the libel, but merely whether it is libellous and thereby calculated to create a disturbance. An opinion however, that its truth should in every case be allowable in justification, seems to be gaining ground in England, and you may no doubt have seen in the late English newspapers that have come out to this country, that Mr. O'Connell, has introduced a Bill to permit the truth to be admitted as evidence, which has been lost by a very small majority. One word more, gentlemen. The Soortee who has said that neither he nor the prosecutrix knew that the truth would not be admitted in this case, represents an impossibility, for if she were so distressed as he says, she would naturally ask her solicitor which was the best way to clear her reputation. When she knew that the prosecution was getting up did it not strike her as something strange that they did not require her? It is impossible to believe that she did not know this.

I repeat, that the course adopted has been most oppressive to the defendants, a criminal information is what they should have sought. What is the form of this libel?

You cannot suppose that an Editor of a public newspaper in his capacity of catering for the public taste, can from his position have the same malignity of mind in publishing what he does, as if a private person circulating his opinions even in a form which should ensure to them the greatest publicity. He gains his livelihood by contributing to the amusement or instruction of the public, and cannot have the same malus animus as if he were influenced by private motives, and in all probability had reasonable grounds for what he did. The letter of a correspondent charged as libellous, is one sent to him at his office in the ordinary course of business for publication, upon which he remarks, and is not the same as if it had come from himself, as expressing his own sentiments. It is therefore not so heinous nor so aggravated as if it had been the production of a private individual (when you look at the difference between insertion and mere publication), the malice which would prompt the latter so to do, being in this case entirely absent. The law admits of free discussion, and in the freedom of writing the strict legitimate bounds are in some measure overstepped, so nothing is allowed where the heart does not appeal to be concerned.

In Nowrojee's editorial there seems to be no malus animus whatever, he supposes a case, argues upon it fairly and temperately, and the terms used in this exposition are general and reflect upon no particular person. I am aware that there is a great distinction between what the law holds to be legal malice and the malice or malus animus which is in the heart, but you will see that he has viewed the matter very soberly, and appears to have got up legal precedents which advising his correspondent and his readers generally in a way that show him to be a bit of a lawyer as well as an editor. Now, gentlemen, after having read through the whole of these papers I am at a loss to discover the slightest libel, chargeable to either of these defendants, if you except the editorial remarks, which you must consider whether it be libellous or not, but for my part I declare if you do think so, it is really more than I can see. His Lordship is permitted and required by the law to give his opinion upon it, and you will hear and see from what he says, if you are expected to gratify the vindictive feelings of the prosecutrix. I have already stated that the defendants have been hardly dealt with in general, and if you consider Soortee's admission of his having had a seat in this Court and his non-recollection of the Court having said any thing to him upon that occasion of his liability in a criminal proceeding, you will be able to pronounce how far his character is free from imputation. I have said before that their proper course would have been by a criminal information had they wished as speedily as possible to clear their character, or had entertained any anxiety upon that point, whereas the matter charged as libellous has been published in March, and they do nothing before the July Session, when by a criminal information the truth or falsehood of the assertions would have been sifted upon the first day of the then ensuing term. I do not wish to detain you, gentlemen of the Jury, by remarks upon the contradictions and deficiencies in the evidence, particularly in that of Ardaseer Framjee, I would wish to state that this is the first case in which the paper has been brought before a Petit Jury, and to impress upon your minds that all which you have to find, is, that the papers put in today libellous, and if so—are the defendants proved to be connected with that paper so far as to show that they were concerned in their publication.

The Chief Justice—Gentlemen of the Jury, I am satisfied now, as I dare say you are, that we have approached very near to the conclusion of this case, and although I thought it prudent last night to recommend our adjournment, I could not predict how long we might be detained, yet I foresaw from the state then, and the facts which seemed likely to take, that it would run on a great length.

I am not able just now to enter upon this subject very fully, but it will perhaps be sufficient if I confine your attention to the necessity of your considering how far the evidence that has been advanced in support of the prosecution affects one or other of the defendants.—His Lordship's summing up, although delivered briefly and with his usual perspicuity, we regret being obliged to curtail, from having already devoted so much space to the report of this trial, that giving it in full would impose an extraordinary degree of labour upon our establishment. The Jury retired and returned about a quarter past four with a verdict of Not Guilty.—Gazette, Sept. 30.

INSOLVENT COURT.

October 14, 1837.

(Before Sir E. Ryan, Kt.)

We were happy to see the bench occupied to-day by our worthy Chief Justice. He appeared to be benefited by the trip he took to the Sand Heads.

The following applicants were sworn to the correctness of their schedules to-day.

1st. Laus Magniac, Esq., of the Civil Service.

Mr. Sanders, the attorney for the Insolvent's Assignee, J. W. Alexander, Esq., addressed the Commissioner, and said that he was directed by the Assignee to move the Court to grant, if possible, a larger deduction than 1-3rd of the applicant's pay and allowances. Mr. Magniac, in reply to the bench, stated that his present allowances were only 320 rupees per month; but he expected shortly to be in the receipt of a much larger income as soon as he could obtain a situation on the effective strength of the service. The Chief Justice directed the insolvent, under present circumstances, to be put under stoppages of a sum not exceeding 1-3rd of his present allowances; but observed, that as soon as this applicant would be in the receipt of the increased rate of salary, which he has said he expected, he must then inform the Assignee of this increase to his income, when the Court would, on the Assignee bringing it before its notice, issue an order for a larger amount of deduction from his pay in proportion to the emoluments the Insolvent may then receive. The Chief Justice then observed, that he in general did not order a larger deduction than 1-3rd from the allowances of military insolvents; but as the Civil Service were much better paid, he considered that perhaps they could well afford a larger deduction in proportion to their salary. After this, this Insolvent was discharged.

2nd. Mrs. Mary Anne Haycock, late milliner and habut maker, of Esplanade Row, was then brought up and sworn. The Commissioner observed, that it appeared three of the creditors mentioned in this insolvent's schedule, had not been served with the notices of this insolvent's present application to this Court.

Mr. Strathell, the attorney for the insolvent, replied, that an affidavit had been filed by the applicant in this case, setting forth that she, the applicant, had used her best endeavours to search and find out the aforesaid three creditors, in order to serve their notices on them, but had failed to do so; she therefore now moved the Court that it would be graciously pleased to pass an order for her release, with the exception of the claims of those three creditors, whose names were Modoo Rearer, 20 rupees; Mesh Jan Bhatia, 7 rupees; and Jackur Sweeper, 12 rupees. The prayer of her affidavit was granted, and she was ordered to be released.

3d. On Shuk Maheroolah being called, Mr. Nathaniel Hudson said, that he was authorised on behalf of the opposing creditor to bring to the notice of this Court that this insolvent, as he had been released by the detaining creditor previous to his having obtained his discharge from this Court, could not obtain his discharge now, and he further cited the case of Mr. Hair, in which the then presiding Commissioner, Sir John Franks maintained this opinion. The Chief Justice, in reply said, that the Insolvent Court as constituted in this country, differed widely from its construction in England. There, by the 38th clause of the Insolvent Act, which expressly provided for a case of this kind, a debtor had been discharged under similar circumstances; but it does not appear that there is any similar clause in the Insolvent Act, as passed in this country. The question he admitted was one of great difficulty, and it was not his intention to express an opinion on it in the present instance, as Sir B. Malkin, before whom this case had been originally heard, maintained, that the applicant, in his judgment, was entitled to his release. He therefore would now uphold that opinion and order his discharge. But it certainly was a question which involved much intricacy, and if the opposing creditor wished, he could enter his appeal in the Supreme Court, against this order, when the question would be taken up; and the judgment of that Court given upon it. After this, this insolvent was discharged.

No persons appearing to oppose the discharge of the undermentioned applicants, they were sworn to the truth of their schedule, and discharged.

Oboychurn Mookerjee, Govindhunder Kerr, Radha-mohun Ghossamy and Khetormohun Ghossamy.

An application was made by, we believe, Mr. Wm. Jackson, on behalf a creditor of Mr. Kiernan, of the Provost's Service, to know what order the Court would be pleased to pass on that Insolvent's application, in which he had prayed this Court to be exempted, on account of his being obliged to maintain a large extra establishment, from paying any deduction from his present allowances, and offering to pay one-half of his salary as soon as he is appointed to a higher grade of the service. In conclusion, Mr. Jackson observed, that this insolvent had offered previously to his applying for the benefit of the act, to pay one half of his salary to his client if he would reduce his debt to half the amount: he argued, that if he could then afford to give up one half of his salary, why not one-third now. The attorney on behalf of this Insolvent stated to the Commissioner, that his client had been ordered by Sir B. Malkin to specify the particulars of the increased establishment he was obliged to keep. Expecting the rehearing would come on before Sir B. Malkin he had not as yet prepared this statement. The Chief Justice remarked, that the Insolvent had no ground to entertain such an idea and postponed final rehearing of this case to the 5th of November, when he said, this Insolvent must be prepared with the required statement.—Harkara, October 16.

SUDDER DEWANNY ADWLUT.

Sept. 18, 1837.

President—J. F. M. REID, Esq., Officiating Judge.Chukooram Sing, appellant, versus Musammatt Sookse and Durgha Dasee, respondents.

For the appellant, Mr. A. A. Savestre, Baboo Raum Praun Roy and Bungehe Budun.

For the respondent—Baboo Gooropursaud Chowdry.

This was a suit instituted by plaintiffs in the Hooghly Zilla Court in the year 1835, against defendant, to recover the sum of 13,470, stated to be the principal of mesne profits realized from lands situated in Purgunnah Melcuddee, Hooghly, together with interest thereupon.

The plaint set forth, that the plaintiff purchased Mouza Raum Nuggur annexed to lot Durrumpoor from Deebnauth Sing, Chowdry, father of Chukooram Sing, and obtained possession thereof; that after the death of plaintiff's father they retained possession of these Mouzas through their agents, who were legally constituted as such by power of attorney as they were at that period minors; that Chukooram Sing then instituted a suit under provisions of Regulation VII. 1799, against Praunkissen Holder for the recovery of arrears of rent, which had, through the negligence of their agents, become due; that Chukooram by clause 7, section 15 of that Regulation, having taken measures for the payment of future rents, annulled the lease, and made a new settlement with other farmers, viz. Dola Chukurbutty and Mahomed Hossain, and that in 1225, he disposed plaintiff's and their agents. By a subsequent action in the Zillah Court by Praunkissen Shoor, one of the agents, against Chukooram Sing, this new settlement was set aside accordingly. In 1235 Fs., plaintiff recovered possession and brought the present action for the realization of mesne profits for 10 years, amounting as stated above.

The defendant, Chukooram Sing, stated in answer, that Dola Chukurbutty and Mahomed Hussain were in possession of the above-named Muhals; that Baboo Bijnath had purchased the same from them in the name of Bhowanee Churn Mullick; that he, defendant, had received only the Malgoozares from them, and that, therefore, he was not answerable nor liable for the payment of the profits appropriated by the holders of these Muhals. On the 30th May, 1835, the acting judge of Zillah Hooghly passed a decree in favor of the plaintiffs directing the defendant to pay the amount of 3,957-9-2-3 cowries, being principal of mesne profits, and providing that the plaintiffs should receive interest, therefore, from the date when they instituted their suit to the date of his decree, viz. 5,801-6-17-2, amounting to the total 9,759-1 cowrie; and likewise interest on the whole amount till payment should be made to plaintiffs. The appellant being dissatisfied with the above decision, appealed to this Court through his legally constituted pleaders on the 17th September 1835. The petition a regular appeal proceeded to state, that there was no evidence by which it could be proved, that the above Muhals were in the possession of the appellant; that there was sufficient proof that possession was retained by Dola Chukurbutty, who held the farm and paid the stipulated rents to appellant, who duly discharged the malgoozares to Government; that, therefore, appellant was not responsible by any rules of equity and good conscience, for the misappropriation of mesne collections, which had been made by the holders of the Muhals; that the mesne profits ought to be paid by Dola Chukurbutty, and his representatives after death, who also appropriated the Mofussil collections; that the Aumeen appointed by the Zillah Court, had, from wrongheadedness, included several customary fees, viz. Matoolit and Magun, under the head of mesne collections, which was contrary to every principle of justice; that he had also included unlimited charges for rents due by cultivators, who were said to have absconded without their being due proof thereof, and had thus raised the collections to an amount highly improbable; that the Acting Zillah Judge had passed a decree for mesne collections, the interest of which had greatly exceeded the amount of the principal, and that by Regulation XV. of 1793, the Courts are not in any case whatever to decree a greater sum for interest than the amount of the principal. The appellant, therefore, prayed for a revision of the order of the Zillah Court.

The appeal having been duly admitted and the requisites of an appeal having been performed by the appellant, through his pleaders, the case came to a hearing this-day.

The papers of the case having been read and considered, the presiding Judge recorded his judgment in the following terms:—That the decision of the Zillah Judge was correct, so far as regards the payment of the wasalaat due by the appellant, and awarded to plaintiffs, because it was proved that they were dispossessed by an action brought by the appellant for arrears of rent; and that the house was cancelled by the provisions of Regulation 7, 1799, and that the new settlement was made by appellant with Dola Chukurbutty and others, which settlement was subsequently set aside by the late Provincial Court, at the instance of one of the agents of the plaintiff. Under this circumstance, appellant has the option of bringing a suit in the Civil Court, for the profits of the lands, should appellant think himself injured and be able to do so. With reference to the fees, and interest exceeding the principal, these are not allowable in wasalaat accounts, because the fees are a kind of ubwaba and the interest is at an usurious rate, contrary to the existing Regulations; ordered, therefore, that the decree of the Zillah Court, dated 31st May, 1835, be amended, that plaintiff's (respondent) recover 3,615-11-1 cowrie principal of mesne collection, and the like sum as interest thereupon amounting to 7,230; that interest be also charged on the whole sum now due, till payment should be made from the date of this day's decree of the Sudder Court; and that this case be sent up for a further hearing to a second Judge of this Court with a view to obtain a final order thereupon.—Hurkara, October 12.

REVENUE BOARD.

CIRCULARS.

No. 75.—The Committee of statements having prepared, under the orders of Government, a set of forms and statements for the officers of the land revenue department, and submitted the same to the Sudder Board, Mr. Secretary Trevelyan under the directions of the Members has forwarded copies of the forms to the several Revenue Commissioners, requesting that all forms and statements shall until further orders be prepared strictly according to the prescribed specimens of the Statement Committee.

No. 76.—Inconvenience having been experienced by the Strand in consequence of the various kinds of land measurement according to which Mehals under settlement are measured and of the absence of any authentic record of the land measure of the different Zillahs and Pargunnahs, the Revenue Commissioners have been requested to furnish to the Board, with all convenient expedition, tables of the land measure in use in the Zillahs and Pargunnahs under their jurisdiction, drawn up according to a form the heads of which are as follow:

Pargunnah.

Land measure in use, shewing the number of the lowest denomination of area in use in one of the next denomination, and so on to the highest denomination, as in the English tables of land measure.

Length in feet and inches of the rope, chain, hauth or null employed.

Number of English acres in the highest denomination of area in use.

Remarks.

[Hurkaru, October 18.]

We publish, with great gratification, the following correspondence between Mr. Halliday and the assistants in the Revenue Board. Such an understanding between the head and the subordinates of an office is extremely creditable to both parties:

To F. J. HALLIDAY, Esq., &c. &c. &c.

Sir,—Your separation from us for a period of two years at least, if not for a much longer time, induces us to approach you on this occasion with mingled feelings of pain and pleasure, pain at the prospect of losing a kind superior, and pleasure at the happiness we experience, and shall always feel in your advancement in the service.

We do not presume to offer any opinion on the great good and advantages which have resulted in the office of the Sudder Board of Revenue, during the period you administered to its many exigencies; but we would fain ask your acceptance of our warmest expressions of gratitude for the uniformly considerate treatment, which all our agents and failings have received at your hands. Your characteristic kind demeanour to your subordinates without compromising your duties in the strictest sense, has not failed, as indeed it could not have done, to demand our admiration, and we can only hope that in pursuing the praiseworthy treatment you have bestowed on your subordinates, you have found from experience that kindness and condescension are the readiest methods of securing respect, good will, and cheerful attention in the transactions of public business.

With this feeble expression of our sentiments, we conclude by offering you our humble and sincere congratulations on your recent promotion, assuring you, that you will ever be remembered by us with feelings of the highest respect and esteem.

We have the honor to be, Sir, your faithful servants,

Signed by G. H. POOLE, —and 40 other assistants.

To Messrs. G. H. POOLE, G. T. F. SPEED, R. KING, J. TOTTIE, C. GARDNER, A. A. OGG, J. AUGUSTIN, T. HAMPTON, S. M. REBEIRO, J. THOMAS, RAMCHUND SEAL, W. GOULD, BRINDRABUN DUTT, GOURUNG DASS MOKERJEE, CAUSSINAUT PAULIT, &c. &c.

Gentlemen,—I have received with much satisfaction your address of this date.

In endeavouring to discharge efficiently my public duties, I have always sought to promote the comfort and to conciliate the judicious regards of my official subordinates. I am therefore highly gratified by this expression of your esteem, and accept it as a testimony of my success.

Yet I cannot but feel that your kindness has attributed to me in this respect, a merit which chiefly belongs to yourselves. Where a body of officers are as zealous, intelligent, industrious, and public spirited, as I have found the assistants in the Sudder Board of Revenue, their immediate head can hardly deserve much credit, if while he directs and encourages their labors in the public service, he secures their private esteem by those natural tokens of consideration, respect, and good will, which necessarily result from an appreciation of their characters and exertions.

I thank you cordially for your congratulations. I beg to assure you of my strong interest in your prosperity, and I trust to be considered by you always,

Gentlemen, with sincere esteem, your faithful friend,

(Signed) FRED. JAS. HALLIDAY.

Calcutta, Oct. 21, 1837.

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. G. T. F. Speed, we understand, is appointed head uncovenanted assistant to the Superintendent of Police in the Lower Provinces, at a salary of 500 rupees per mensem, with an additional allowance of 200 rupees per month, when out on a tour of inspection with the Superintendent.—Englishman, October 26.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA.

THE PICE.—The pice humbug continues, and there is very little chance of a sufficient supply of pice being issued to relieve the distress of the poor. The government still keep up its pice-vending establishments, for which no one but the shroffs feels thankful, as no one else experiences relief from them. Few men will wait for two hours to get a rupee exchanged, and seldom can any body get change at these shops without waiting during that time. It would be better for government to close these shops at once, and let the other shroffs have their own way. They cannot charge much more than three pice for changing a rupee, and they now demand that amount.

TUR CROPS.—The change in the weather and the plentiful fall of rain, have very much improved the condition of the crops, which are now represented to have a very promising appearance.

INDIGO CROPS.—The indigo crop is expected to range between ninety-five and a hundred thousand maunds.

THE NEW STEAM PROSPECTUS.—The comprehensive Steam Prospectus has now upwards of 1,400 shares subscribed for.

The New Post Office Regulations came into force on the 1st instant, and henceforth newspapers may go, bearing postage, all over British India. To stations within 400 miles the postage will be two annas, and to all more distant stations the postage will be three annas on each cover not exceeding 3½ tolas.

DEATH OF THE KING OF DELHI.—A private letter from the imperial city, announces the death of the King of Delhi on the 28th ultimo, at 3 p. m. Meerza Abboozaffer has succeeded to the throne, and the Resident and his Assistant have presented nuzzers to, and received khilats from, the new King.

DEATHS BY DROWNING.—A young gentleman of the name of Wall, of the Pilot Service, was unhappily drowned on the 20th instant, at Sulkea. The melancholy accident occurred at Walker's Docks, and at about half past 5 o'clock. The body of the unfortunate young man was brought up after a search of twenty minutes, and medical assistance procured as early as possible; but all attempts to restore life failed. An apprentice attached to the ship Arabian, was also drowned in the river on the 21st instant.

SUPPOSED SUICIDE.—A European soldier, met a watery grave in a tank in the suburbs, behind the General Hospital. The deceased, who was deranged in intellect, was a patient in the Hospital, and was missed on the morning of Monday last. In the course of the day, the body was discovered in the tank. The deceased, is supposed to have got out of the Hospital during the night, or early in the morning, before day-break, for the purpose of committing self-destruction.

SUICIDES.—Several unfortunate natives have perpetrated suicides during the month. The practice is getting very common among the native population.

MURDER OF ENSIGN BLINKINSOP.—The following is an extract of a letter, dated Chybaasa in Singbloom, 29th September, 1837:—

"Another instance of the truth of the saying that 'in the midst of life we are in death,' happened at this place this morning. Ensign Blinkinsop, of the 34th Regiment N. I., who was in temporary charge of the detachment in Singbloom, during the absence on leave of Captain Armstrong, was cruelly and inhumanly murdered at day-break by a suwar of the 5th Local Horse, whom he had with justice ordered to drill for most impudent and insubordinate conduct. About 5 o'clock, a. m. the suwar presented himself at Ensign Blinkinsop's quarters, informing his bearer that he came as orderly of the day. The bearer went out to a short distance, and returning after a few minutes, found his master lying in a corner of the bungalow bathed in his blood. The doctor was immediately sent for, and on arrival found him in the pangs of death, occasioned by 4 wounds on the head of great length, two of them penetrating the brain to the depth of 2½ inches. A punctured wound was also observed on the neck, but not of a dangerous description: three of the fingers of the left hand had been cut off, the same hand almost separated at the wrist, and the head of the arm bone of the right side was exposed by a large wound at the upper part of the arm. A long sharp knife and a sword were found belonging to the suwar. It is supposed that he first attempted to murder his officer while asleep, by stabbing him in the neck with the knife; that Ensign Blinkinsop had started out of his bed, that while defending his head, his hands had been disabled, and then the other wounds had been inflicted, which deprived him of life.

"The murderer fled after committing the sanguinary deed, but was observed by the European corporal in charge of the guns, who at the same time heard the alarm of the murder. He pursued him, calling out in passing the bazaar guard, but finding that he was unable to gain upon him, he ordered a sepoy to fire, who shot him through the abdomen. He unfortunately died before his evidence could be taken."

SERIOUS ACCIDENTS.—On the morning of the 14th inst. a dinghy containing three men, was caught by the boar while close to the north end of the Sumatra Sand, and being kept by the stupid steersman with her broadside to the impetuous tide, was capized. The steersman and one man perished in the waves.

A poor native woman was crushed on the 16th instant, by the falling in of the arch over Baboo Mooranauth Mullick's gate, at Seebpore, and expired the next day.

BRUTAL ASSAULT.—About 10 a. m. of the 11th inst., a Mussulman, a kite manufacturer by profession, named Goohee, had a quarrel with his wife about a dhoobe, also a fellow-villager, and after quarrelling all night, they came to blows, and about the time mentioned Goohee armed himself with a sharp chopper with which he laid his wife and mother-in-law almost lifeless, having inflicted three deep wounds on each of their heads, and as many on their arms. He then sat himself down in his house, until the Manuktullah darogah came up with his people, arrested the ruffian and had him bound. Goohee said he was exasperated at the conduct of his wife she having reduced him to poverty by her extravagance, and having made arrangements to leave him for the Dhoobe, with whom she had been carrying on an illicit intercourse. The unfortunate man has a family of three grown-up children.

FUNERAL SERMON.—On the 12th instant, the Revd. Kishnah Mahaba Bonerjee, preached from the following text a funeral sermon on the death of his friend Mohi Chunder Ghose, to a large audience in the Old Church of Calcutta.—"Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth."

THE VICTORIA BALL.—At a meeting of the Stewards of the Victoria Ball, Major-General McGibbon, in the Chair.

Resolved,—That the Ball take place on Monday, the 13th November.

Resolved,—That it be a fancy dress ball.

Resolved,—That all who are included in the Government House list, on public occasions, be eligible to subscribe.

Resolved,—That the invitations be strictly confined to the Foreign settlements, and Foreigners who are strangers.

Resolved,—That the price of a family ticket be 16 rupees, and a single person's ticket 10 rupees; and that no tickets be procurable at those rates after the 1st November next.

Resolved,—That the Stewards form Committee among themselves for the purpose of carrying into effect all the requisite arrangements for this entertainment.

Resolved,—That the thanks of the Meeting be given to the Chairman.

At another meeting of originators of the Victoria Ball, held at the Town Hall on the 23d instant, the following resolutions were proposed and adopted:

"That instead of having the Victoria Ball, as at present proposed, with tickets at fixed prices, it is desirable to have the ball as on former occasions, dividing the expense amongst the subscribers generally.

That the books be re-circulated for the purpose of ascertaining whether present subscribers will permit their names to remain with reference to the above resolution, and that when a hundred subscribers are declared they be called upon to meet and elect Stewards.

That the ball be held on Friday, the 20th December next."

Messrs. D. Wilson and Co., the Confectioners, have determined to set up a rival Victoria Ball at Mr. Dupuis' Rooms, in Durrumtollah. None but those on the Consistollah List, will be admitted.

CAPT. CHAMPNEYS.—It is said that Capt. Champneys, A. D. C. to the Governor-General, is to be appointed Pay Master at Necrut, vice Lord George Gordon.

MILITARY ITEMS.—Kynuk Phyou has been abolished as a military station, and the remnant of the 67th ordered to Sandoway. Orders have been sent to Bombay for the dispatch of a Company's cruiser to cruise for six months on the Tenasserim coast, and bring away sick officers and troops when necessary.

MILITARY ORPHAN INSTITUTION.—The three questions, some months ago, were circulated by the Directors of the Military Fund for the decision of the subscribers, have all been determined in accordance with the views of the former body.

The first question relating to a claim by Surgeon N. Maxwell to be exempted from subscribing to the Fund in the rank which corresponded with his standing on the Medical List, or in other words continue his subscription as Captain, while his contemporaries were contributing as Majors, has been decided by a rejection of the appeal.

The second, suggesting an alteration in rule 25, which regulated the grant of passage money to widows, has been carried in the affirmative. The nature of the change is as follows: "if the money possessed by a widow exceed the sum of 12,000 Rs., the same being available for immediate expenditure and entirely at her disposal, she shall not be admitted to the benefit of passage money. In like manner, although not immediately available nor at her sole disposal, if the yearly interest of such money exceed the sum of £68-8-9, the claim to passage money will be disallowed."

The third, which respected the correctness of the Directors' practice under the rule passed in 1835, (that increased donations should be claimable from married subscribers whose ages exceeded by certain stated differences the ages of their wives) viz., whether the said rule was applicable only to future marriages, or also to those now existing on the husband's entrance into a superior grade, has been decided in favor of the latter interpretation.

CAPT. BOCAWEN AND McNAGHTEN.—A rather curious correspondence has passed during the month between Captains Bocawen and McNaghten, arising out of some remark, made by a writer in the Englishman, supposed to be Capt. McNaghten, under the signature of W. W. W., on the letters written ament the Military Orphan School, by Capt. Bocawen, under the nom de guerre of RAYARD. A duel had nearly taken place between the parties in consequence.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.—The Governor-General will hold a levee on Thursday next, at 4 p. m., preparatory to his Lordship's departure for the Upper Provinces.

The Governor-General and suite, embarked on the morning of the 21st instant, and proceeded via the Sunderbund route, to the Upper Provinces.

GOVERNMENT COURTESY.—The Uncovenanted Service Pension Committee, recently humbly solicited the Government to permit the letters connected with their fund to pass free of postage, in like manner as the letters of the Military and Civil Funds are allowed to be sent. With this request, the Government most magnanimously—most generously complied, but complied with the humiliating condition that these letters should be sent unsealed! Need more be said?

A WHIRLWIND AND WATER-SPOUT.—A few days ago, in the evening, after a shower of rain, a whirlwind and water-spout were observed to cross the road a little on this side of Hastings' Bridge, throwing down the puckah piers and railing of the Government Stores for about a hundred feet in length, and causing a violent agitation in the water as the column passed over the river. The Emily and another vessel were sufficiently in the track of it to be in some danger, and healed over very much.

THE MEERUT OBSERVER.—The Meerut Observer, has deceased.

A NEW PAPER.—A religious newspaper has been published in the Hindustani language, both in the Roman and Persian character, the price in either character two annas. The orthography of the Roman character is that of Mr. Trevelyan—the new system. The title of the journal is Khur-Khwahi i Hind; the motto, "Khuds ko aaman par tarif am zamin par salmati, aur admion se razmandi." The paper is printed at the Baptist Mission Press.

A NEW SOCIETY.—It is said, that a society has been established by Dewan Ramcomul Sein, for the purpose of preparing and sending a petition to England on behalf of the owners of rent-free lands, and for the improvement of the Bengally language.

CIVIL APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. F. C. Smith, of the Sudder Court, is to be appointed Superintendent of Police in Bengal, under the act recently passed. It is thought desirable to select an officer of high standing and character for the first re-organization of this important appointment.

The arrangements in the Secretaries' Departments are now completed. Mr. H. T. Prinsep, in addition to his duties as Secretary in the General Department, is to assume charge of the duties of the Secret and Political Department at the Presidency in the absence of Mr. McNaghten, and Mr. Mangles is to act for Mr. Macnaghten in the Legislative, Judicial and Revenue Departments. Mr. Halliday is to act for Mr. Mangles as Judicial and Revenue Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

CIVIL FUND MEETING.—A special general meeting of the subscribers to the Civil Fund was held at the Town Hall on the 30th ultimo. There were twenty-three members present, Mr. H. T. Prinsep in the chair. After a discussion which lasted about two hours, it was proposed by Mr. D. C. Smyth, and seconded by Mr. Bradton, that as it appeared that not above 150 subscribers had voted on the subject of the new rules, it was not necessary to come to any resolution on the changes. It was therefore resolved, that the Secretary should be instructed to call on each of the remaining subscribers to forward their votes to the chairman or to authorize some friends in the service, at the presidency, to vote on their behalf, and in the mean time the meeting was adjourned.

THE STEAM DESPATCH.—The Steam despatch of the present month, consisted of fewer letters than the last namely, 35 public and free letters, 876 paid Calcutta and 85 Mofussil letters, in all 996 letters and 101 newspapers.

NEW STEAMER.—The new steamer ordered to be built to receive the Enterprise's engines, is to be constructed by the Calcutta Docking Company for one lakh and forty thousand rupees, being about fifteen thousand rupees less than she would have cost at Bombay.

NEW PILOT VESSELS.—Orders have passed Council for the building of two pilot vessels for the Bengal Marine, at the Company's dock yard at Bombay.

VESSEL FOR ARRACAN.—The circumstance of very many surplus pilot vessels being now attached to Calcutta, we suppose, has induced the Government to despatch the Kishna for service on the Arracan coast, a duty for which she is unfitted.

CAUTION—LEPERS.—There are several native lepers in Calcutta, who follow the occupation of confectioners. The public should therefore be cautious in purchasing sweetmeats, or they will be apt to bring this loathsome distemper on themselves.

EXTENSION OF THE CUSTOMS ACT.—It is said, that the last act of the Governor-General before his departure was to sanction the extension of the Bengal Customs Act of last year to Bombay. This has been done with the knowledge that its application to that presidency will involve a considerable sacrifice of revenue, and after already sacrificing a very large sum by the abolition of the Transit Duties. The present state of the opium revenue has happily enabled the Government to make these sacrifices.

CUSTOMS COMMISSION.—The Customs Commission is to be abolished on the 1st of December next, and Captain T. J. Taylor, the Secretary of the Commission, will remain in charge of the records.

RIPE MANGOES IN OCTOBER.—The extraordinary hot weather experienced during the whole of this year—the shortness of the rains and other causes, have acted in a most strange way on all sorts of garden or vegetable cultivation in Bengal. Some articles have been retarded, others advanced considerably in their growth, more than usual in this time of the year; and ripe and sweet mangoes are now sold in the streets of Calcutta at the cheap rate of eight for the rupee; and a green mango, about half the size of a full grown one, was picked from a tree in a garden about two miles from Calcutta, and which, no doubt, had it been allowed to remain on the tree some time longer, would have been ripe in the end of November next.

SABBATH BREAKING.—To observe the 4th commandment and keep the Sabbath, we would inculcate on all. Observe the Sabbath by all means. But we can not for the life of us understand what clause of the 4th commandment justifies the authorities in issuing an order causing cattle to starve on the Sabbath. It is said that the authorities have interdicted cattle from eating grass on the Esplanade on Sundays! Why?

MR. WILBERFORCE BIRD.—It is said, that Mr. Wilberforce Bird is to be added to the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, as a third Member, in consequence of the infirm state of Sir Charles D'Oyly's health.

MR. SPEED.—Mr. G. T. F. Speed, is appointed head uncovenanted assistant to the Superintendent of Police in the lower provinces, at a salary of 500 rupees per mensem, with an additional allowance of 200 rupees per month, when out on a tour of inspection with the Superintendent.

THE BISHOP.—The Lord Bishop of Calcutta, in consequence of severe indisposition, was about to return to the presidency; but his Lordship's health being much improved, he gave up the intention of embarking in the steamer at Benares, and instead thereof proceeded in a pinnace as far as Patna, intending to spend the Sundays of 23d and 29th instant at Ghazepore, and the two following Sundays at Dinapore and Patna, where he hoped to find a steamer ready to receive him on the 13th November, to bring him down to Dacca and Calcutta.

RE-SALE OF OPIUM.—It turned out on the 19th instant, that all the lots of March Opium on the 1st for re-sale on that day, had been duly paid up, and consequently no sale took place.

COUNTERFEIT STAMPS.—About thirty-five counterfeit stamped papers, some for four others for two annas, have been discovered in the possession of two individuals residing at Burra Bazar; who, with the papers in question, are now in custody of the Police.

THE HERCULEAN.—The Seetakoond, steamer, was despatched lately to bring in the distressed ship Herculean, with the officer who had left her off Pipeley Sand; but not finding her there, the steamer was obliged to return to Calcutta, whence she proceeded again on the 16th instant in search of the distressed vessel, but her second search proved as ineffectual as the first, and it was conjectured that the vessel must have run aground on the rocks and stood out to sea again. The pilot despatch vessel was then sent to search for her; but in the interim the vessel was brought in to the floating light, taken in tow of the Seetakoond, and anchored safely off Colvin's Ghat.

CONTRABAND OPIUM.—Between six and seven o'clock on the morning of the 16th instant, Mr. McCann, the Deputy Superintendent of Police, proceeded to a house in Paunchee Dhubany's Gully, having previously received information that a quantity of Contraband Opium was concealed in it. The inmates pretended that the deputy was misinformed by people who had spite against them; but he searched the female apartments, and in the cook-room found several small bags, in four baskets, containing in all about five maunds of opium. The master of the house keeps a shop in Machua Bazar, which was searched, and a bag of opium was found there also, apparently of the same batch. The drug found in both places was secured and six men taken into custody.

DISUNION OF MADRAS AND BOMBAY.—The inhabitants of Madras and Bombay are about to address the Supreme Government of India, praying for a repeal of the Union; or in other words that the "Sixty Presidencies," may be emancipated from their dependency upon the chief presidency.

THE KIDDERPORE DOCK YARD.—The Government has at last settled with the Dock Company for the purchase of a part of Kidderpore Dock Yard. The long delay that has taken place has been occasioned by the title deeds, which the Government lawyers are still dissatisfied with; but Government has resolved to take the property upon a guarantee. The price to be paid for the ground taken, is about 65,000 or 70,000 rupees.

THE BORING EXPERIMENT.—The boring experiment in the fort has now been carried to a depth of 427½ feet, without having yet passed through the alluvial strata. The augur is still working in sand and more fossil specimens are occasionally brought up.

THE BOOK SELLERS' PETITION.—It is said some of the booksellers are about to petition not only for a law of copyright; but for the prohibition of all the American reprints.

MILITARY PASSAGE MONEY.—The Supreme Government have recommended to the favourable consideration of the Honourable Court, the prayer of the Directors of the Bengal Military Fund, that the benefits of the recent General Order, granting passage money to Regimental Captains of H. M. S. proceeding to England, and Regimental Captains and Subalterns returning to India, on medical certificate, should be extended to officers of the same rank in the Company's service.

THE TEMPLE OF DEOGUR.—The connection of Government with the shrine of Deogur, the most renowned in Bengal, has ceased for ever. The third of the profits of the temple which we inherited from our predecessors, the Mahomedans, was relinquished many years ago; but the appointment of High Priest was still considered as a part of the prerogative of Government. A vacancy in the office having now occurred, the public authorities have embraced the occasion of cutting the only link which bound them to any participation in the rites, by declaring that they would not interfere in the nomination of his successor.

A SHARK.—A shark, about six feet long, was on the 12th instant captured and killed by the fisherman, on Seelhpore beach.

MOFUSSIL.

DELHI.—Generals Torrens, Churchill and Lumley, and Colonel Dunlop of the Commissariat, have recently and conferred upon them a star and a ribbon! being the insignia of the Sikh order, instituted by Runjeet Singh, and called the "Bright Star of the Punjab." Sir Henry Fane, to whom the investiture was conferred, indulged in some very eloquent and complimentary language and very considerably mystified his audience, his subject, and, though last not least, himself.

At Delhi hot westerly winds continue to blow, and they are parching up every thing in the shape of vegetation. The continued drought has blighted the hope which was indulged of saving the kharreef crop; the little verdure which had hitherto been visible on the scanty stalks of the jowar and bajrah, is at length fast acquiring sea and yellow tints.

The cattle have already been sent to the banks of the Ganges, Jumna, Ghogur and Sutledge, and the inhabitants are emigrating in crowds.

The district of Rohituc has, as yet, suffered most severely; the residents of the largest villages have abandoned their homes en masse, and proceeded to seek a living and occupation elsewhere.

The pergunnahs of Pulwal, Horul, and Hutheen in Goorgan are said to be affected to almost as great an extent as Rohituc.

The Panniput division has also suffered very severely, but from the extent of its khadir lands and canal irrigation, there is a likelihood that its crops will not altogether fail.

All the other districts have, more or less, severely suffered.

On the 6th instant, a disorderly crowd assembled at one of the ghats about 12 o'clock, and commenced plundering some boats laden with grain previous to its exportation towards Agra. The Cotwal of the city immediately proceeded to the spot, accompanied by a many of his myrmidons as he could safely draw from the different thanahs, and vainly endeavoured to prevent the robbery; and when his efforts were found to be futile, the Commissioner called for the assistance of the troops; and, at night, three companies of the Sappers were ordered out. Unfortunately several Goojurs joined the mob and made a second attempt on the boats, in which the Mahajimns had placed some of their armed dependants, consequently an opposition was offered, tulwars were drawn from their sheaths, and some shots fired; one of the boat people was drowned, other wounded, and two of the attacking party were killed, after which they dispersed, not however before they had succeeded in appropriating grain to the value of some thousands of rupees.

It is said, that the Governor-General has positively refused to give the Brigadiership at Meerut to General Churchill.

It is asserted, that the Agent to the Lieutenant-Governor at Delhi, has recently issued a circular to all the Magistrates of the Delhi Territory, directing them to hear and investigate all complaints made by inhabitants of the British territories, of aggressions or injustice, perpetrated against them in foreign and independent states, and to report to him their opinion concerning them. The system is to supersede the old practice of complaining to the Agent, and confining the Magistrates to the business of their own districts.

The bridges of boats across the Jumna were finished on the third of October.

AGRA.—The poor inhabitants are nearly famished. The greatest distress prevails in consequence.

The weather continues dry and sultry, which may account for the cholera that exists among the artillery. It is also rife in the city, and jail. By a fatal coincidence the two first victims to it were the school-masters of the European Regiment and of the Artillery. Several hundreds of starving people from the Mynpooree district have arrived and have taken up their wretched abodes in the old ruins on the opposite side of the river. The Relief Society affords them a small assistance.

It is said that several boats laden with grain, which had been dispatched from Agra to the Allahabad and Mirzapoor markets, have returned; the high prices fixed by the owners being above the market rates at these places.

The Commander-in-Chief was to commence his tour on the 27th instant. He will visit in succession Delhi, Nasceerabad, Neemuch, Mhow, and Gwalior, and will arrive at Agra by the end of February. A squadron of the 3rd Cavalry, and a wing of a Regiment of Native Infantry, accompany His Excellency.

General Brown, it is said, is determined on terminating his gallant public career and returning to Europe in company with his old and esteemed friend, Sir Charles Metcalfe.

The festival of the Ram Leela was celebrated with great pomp and great expense by the Native officers and men of the 37th regiment Native Infantry, who must have expended nearly 3,000 rupees on this mummery. The figure of the demon monster Rawun was on a very large and hideous scale, and did ample justice to the horrors and absurdity of Hindoo mythology. The fire works were numerous and brilliant, but their uninterrupted play for more than a week, on so public a thoroughfare as the parade, was little short of a perfect nuisance.

Sooleeman Shukoo, brother of the deceased King of Dehlee, has returned to cautionments with his disorderly suit.

COTW.—Grain has risen to sixteen ~~seers~~ of eighty to-lahs per rupee in this town, and even at this price the holders are reluctant to sell. Cholera has made its appearance.

MEERUT.—On the night of the 12th instant, Meerut was visited by a tremendous hurricane and a considerable quantity of rain fell to the northward. In the course of that day numerous flights of locusts were observed. Grain is falling in price—wheat is selling at 18 seers per rupee.

MAZARRE.—The Court of Inquiry on a gallant Field Officer has terminated its labours, and the proceedings have been forwarded to the Commander-in-Chief. The subject of inquiry was, the conduct of the gallant Field Officer in regard to some pecuniary matters connected with the estate of a deceased Subadar. It is conjectured, that there will be soon some work for the Deputy Judge Advocate of the division. Rain has fallen in great abundance. The planters complain of having too much of it.

On the 5th and 6th instant, a tremendous gale of wind, accompanied and followed by very heavy rain, was experienced in this district. The kharreef crops have sustained considerable damage. Part of the rice had been gathered in; but what remained uncut, and the jowaree and bujeree crops, were generally beaten down by the violence of the gale, as if an army had marched over them.

The native River Insurance Companies of this place have come to a resolution to refuse all risks on goods belonging to Europeans. This hasty determination is owing to a decision lately given in the Court of Dewannee Adawlat against some of the fraternity.

A liberal, intelligent, enterprising and wealthy Hindoo merchant, of the name of Bunsidur, has placed in the hands of the Magistrate the sum of 12,000 rupees for the purpose of building a bridge over the Oojlah bundee, between the town of Mirzapoor and the celebrated place of Tung worship—Bindachul, on the old Allahabad road. Government have last sanctioned the construction of a new road between Mirzapoor and Chunar.

LOODERNAH.—Two sepoy of the 20th N. I. lately went to visit a nautch in the city, when one of them attacked the other and inflicted three wounds, one of them mortal. The murderer escaped, but warrants for his apprehension to all the district police, as well as Runjeet Singh's, have been issued.

The Reverend Mr. Newton has issued an address to the natives of this town and adjacent country, calling on them to bring in such children as were left destitute through the death or poverty of their parents. This proceeding reflects much credit on the Reverend Gentleman, whose charity is not defrayed from a large and lazily earned salary.

MUSKERABAD.—Great scarcity prevails all over the country in and about Muskerabad, with very little prospect of relief.

OUR REGIMENTS.—The two stations in Oude, Sultanpore and Setapore, have been quietly abolished, and the regiments now there have been ordered, one to Shajehanpore and the other to Alhwa. Some of the officers of the 48th at present stationed at Delhi, lose their bungalows, others more fortunate, share the loss with the officers of the regiment that relieved them at Setapore.

FUNNUCKABAD.—The rain which fell on the 12th has made the prospects of the districts a little brighter. This part of the country had previously suffered from drought, more perhaps than any other. The khureef crops are almost a failure, but another fall of rain would make the rubber crop a plentiful one. The most profitable crop of all will be the indigo seed.

SHAJEHANPORE.—Another system of spoliation has succeeded to the anarchy lately prevalent here. The thanadars, having, of necessity, been extensively supported by the Magistrate in quelling the insurrection, organized a most daring and sweeping system of intimidation, and by false accusations have extorted incredible sums of money from their victims. The Magistrate has fortunately taken decided measures to remedy the evil, and three of the villains are now in custody. The khureef crops are plentiful, and another fall of rain would tend to make the rubber more abundant than for many years.

MOORADABAD.—Grain maintains its high price in this and the Shajehanpore districts, though the prospects of an abundant rubber crop are very favourable. Numbers of people are supported by the charity of the civil functionaries both European and native. Mr. Okeden is foremost in this work, and his example has called into life the torpid humanity of many others.

NATIVE STATES.

SEEKUR.—Major Forster, and the Shekawattie Brigade, have recently had a brush with the adherents of the Majee at Seekur. These worthies, dissatisfied with the arrangements the British authorities had made with the Jeypore state, to check their depredations, got the Majee to head them, and collecting in great numbers, garrisoned the Fort, with 400 match-locks, relying upon her resources and strength, which had always before defied the Jeypore power. Under these circumstances, Major Forster received orders on the 2d instant to proceed from Jeypore with a part of his Brigade to Seekur, and endeavour to settle the existing differences. When he arrived there, he found the gates of the town shut, and every preparation made for a defence. He sought an interview of the Majee, which after two days' demur was granted, but without the desired effect, although he was six hours in darbar; at length, when Major F. got up to take his leave, and warned the Chiefs of the consequences that awaited them, the Majee reluctantly agreed to the wholesome advice offered to her. Major Forster demanded, that the armed men should be all turned out of the fort, excepting the old, usual personal guards. After much ado, she complied with this requisition also; however, when this intimation was made known to the parties, they instantly became clamorous for immediate payment of their dues, and as it was impossible to be given then, and they would listen to no reason, Major F. was compelled to draw up his company and prepare to drive them out et ex armis. At this moment, a four-pounder gun, with half a company, and some sowars, very opportunely arrived; this decided the business, and the fort was evacuated forthwith. Major Forster then took leave of the Majee, placing a strong guard of his men at the principal gateways. In the middle of the night, however, it was reported to the Major, that nearly the whole of the armed men, who had been ejected during the previous day, had found their way back into the fort, through some secret passages; this, the two principal disaffected vagabonds, Hunwant Ram and Dakoo, had effected. Major Forster forthwith turned out the line, sending detachments to the different gates of the town; where guns were, to seize them, whilst himself, with two companies, and a gun and some Sowars, proceeded direct to the Mahal in the fort, the gateway of which had been secured the day before. On his arrival he found every thing indicating a determination for a fight, the doors barricaded, match-locks at all the loop-holes, and the top of the Palace covered with armed men, well protected by parapets, whilst the troops below, with him, could find but little shelter. Having summoned the people to surrender, and after two hours' parley getting nothing but gross abuse and defiance, Major Forster directed a fire to be opened on the principal group, and in a moment its effects became obvious, though the match-locks were discharged at the party below very sharply, yet it being quite dark, the injury done by the enemy was comparatively slight. The Major then prepared to blow open the principal barricade, and enter the Palace. The Majee's party seeing his proceedings and having already suffered considerably in killed and wounded, called for quarter; and agreed to deliver up the two instigators, Hunwant Ram and Dakoo, and surrender the Palace to Major Forster, which was forthwith done, and thus tranquility was once more established. The several detachments, both horse and foot, of the Shekawattie Brigade, behaved in the steadiest manner; the simultaneous movements to seize the guns and to secure a party of fifty horse, placed by the disaffected clan to aid them, were gallantly performed, the latter were all surprized and taken whilst repairing to join the Majee's party in the fort, with the loss of only seven men of the Shekawattie Brigade. All is tranquil now: the fort and town in the occupation of Major Forster's troops.

LUCKNOW.—His Majesty the King of Oude, sent Capt McNease, together with the state horses, elephants and guards to the banks of the Ganges to escort His Highness Nawab Mountazimwood Dowlat Mundy Ally Khan to Lucknow. The party arrived at Lucknow on the 24th of September last, and proceeded to the Palace, where the King received the Nawab with great joy, and conferred on him a khilat of 21 articles in number, consisting of elephants, horses, palankeens, swords, ornaments and other valuables. The Nawab, after paying his respects to His Majesty, proceeded to the House of the British Resident to pay his respects to Colonel Low, who received him with every attention and kindness. When the Nawab was formerly Minister to the King of Oude, the subjects lived in comfort and ease; he discharged his duty to rich and poor with every care and such rigorous justice that none had to complain of him.

A report has been revived here, and is generally received, that the late King was poisoned, and that the crime was perpetrated by a party in disgrace with His Majesty. A favorite female of the King was the person, according to report, who had administered the poison. Grain is still very dear, and consequently much distress prevails throughout the city.

DEPRESSION.—The price of grain in this town is very high. Wheat sells at twelve seers. The Dhoulpoor district has been more fortunate, and has not yet been suffering from high grain prices.

This country is in a most deplorable condition, not a drop of rain having fallen since the 12th ultimo, and then but a shower. The wells are nearly dry, and it is supposed the Maharajah's camp (2,000,000 souls) and the Residency must by and bye go into Malwa.

Grain is here selling at the enormously dear rate of 7 seers per rupee, in consequence of which Scindia and nearly 200,000 persons are about to migrate to the southward, where grain is in greater plenty. The northern and western parts of this district are in a most deplorable state. The Maharajah's ministers, it is said, attempted to force the prices of grain with the bunnias, but they would not be bamboozled. In fact the traders "shut up shop."

JUERPOOR.—The sepoys in the pay of this state recently rose on the bunderah, and by the persuasive powers of blows and stripes forced them to dispose of their grain at a "reasonable price," i. e. thirty seers per rupee. Complaints being made against this violence to the Rawul Berre Sal, he agreed to protect the complainants, if they bound themselves to supply the city with grain at the rate of twenty-five seers of wheat and thirty-five of barley for a rupee, terms they closed with having no better. A moiety of the advalorem duty of 3 per cent. levied on grain imported into this state, has been taken off for the present.

RAMPPOOR.—The Nuwab has imprisoned his Dewan, who, in a moment of hurry or forgetfulness, had extended his rapacity from the unprotected ryot, to a Syud of some property. This to one of the privileged order was immediately pronounced an act of gross injustice; a party assembled and demanded the Dewan of the Rajah, who only appeased these redressers of wrong by imprisoning the culprit and promising to strip him of every rupee he possessed, the booty to be divided between the Raja and the complainants.

MUHUTPOOR.—The Rajah has, to prevent the rapid emigration of his poor subjects into other places, ordered rations of grain to be distributed wherever necessary, at his own expence. Wheat is now selling at sixteen seers per rupee.

ABRUNDABAD.—Rain fell for the first time this season on the 10th inst., and continued to fall for three days. This providential fall immediately reduced the price of grain.

KANDUHAR.—The Nazim of this province has commenced hostilities against his brother, Doost Mochumud, which are likely to cast the honest Afghan into fresh troubles.

MADRAS.

WARLIKE DEMONSTRATIONS.—The arrangements which have been long pending in Bengal for increasing the force in Arracan, have been brought to a rapid conclusion by the present state of things in Ava, and the Moulmein force will be strengthened by supplies of troops, &c. from this Presidency. Large preparations have been going on for some time past in the Commissariat Department, and in the Arsenal, and eight Native and two European corps are ordered to be in readiness to embark should their services be required.

THE CHOLERA.—Cholera continues with unabated violence in Madras: very many fatal cases have recently occurred in Vepery and its environs.

THE CROPS.—The state of the crops is now represented as less promising than a short time since.

RAIN.—A private letter from Bangalore states, that rain has fallen in considerable quantities, and that the crops are expected to do well.

CULTIVATION OF COFFEE.—The Mysore Commissioner is adopting a system likely to produce a considerable extension of the cultivation of coffee throughout that country. The only revenue to be derived in future from that article, will be a custom duty of one rupee per maund, payable at the first choice only. All other duties including the land tax are to be abolished.

THE CANARA INSURRECTION.—It is reported, on the authority of letters from Bangalore, that disclosures, it is expected, will be elicited by the Canara Commissioners, that will go far towards establishing a charge against certain Native Chiefs, of hitherto unsuspected integrity, of having been aiding and abetting in the late insurrection.

DEATH BY THE BITE OF A SEA SNAKE.—On the 9th instant, Mr. Hayman, of H. M. Brig Algerine, was bitten by a sea snake, and in about an hour and a half afterwards complained of faintness, sickness at stomach, and giddiness of head. He received prompt assistance from the Medical officers of the Reptus and Minerva, but the violent spasms from which he suffered rendered their efforts unavailing, and he died four hours after he was bitten. The only visible marks were some slight punctures, as if from a pin, between his thumb and the forefinger, and his hand was swelled as far as the wrist. Many of the ship's company had touched the snake with impunity, and the reptile is generally supposed to be poisonous.

THE INDIAN NAVY.—A spirit of discontent nearly amounting to insubordination, has recently been manifested in the Indian Navy, arising out of the change which is about to take place by its conversion into a Steam Flotilla for the general service of India, including the Steam Communication between Suez and India. One of the Lieutenants appointed to the Berenice has refused to serve and is ordered to be tried by a court-martial.

THE GOVERNOR.—The Governor proposed quitting Ootacamund on the 6th of October, and to return via Trichinopoly to Madras on the 12th Oct.

MURDER.—A horrid occurrence took place in the Artificers' lines outside the fort on the 19th September. An Artificer, named Mackenzie, employed in the Arsenal, suddenly left his work on that morning saying that he was required at home, proceeded to the house of another Artificer, named Johnson, where he seized a sword and cut Johnson's wife dreadfully over the head and arms. The screams of the woman attracted his own wife to the spot, whom he instantly brought to the ground by a severe cut over the head, he then rushed out of the house and ran into his own, where he murdered two of his own children, a boy four years of age and an infant, whose heads were completely severed from their bodies. By this time the alarm had been given at the Arsenal, and some of the Artificers on arriving found the unfortunate man cutting at some goats in his yard: he was luckily overpowered and seized without further accident. The women were immediately conveyed to the Garrison Hospital, where their wounds were dressed and found to be of a very dangerous nature. Mackenzie's wife is not expected to recover; but he himself appears perfectly unconcerned.

BOMBAY.

THE BERENICE.—The Berenice did not receive the slightest damage in her hull or any other part of her works excepting the engine shaft, in her late attempt to make the Red Sea in the monsoon. The Atalanta, in her trip to and from the Gulf, got considerably damaged, although she had not an equal force of the monsoon to contend against.

THE PACKETS BY THE ATALANTA.—The Atalanta started on the 25th ultimo, on her voyage to the Red Sea. The number of letters forwarded by her was 4,929, and of newspapers 40. This exceeds the August mail by some hundred letters.

PRESENT TO THE ASSISTANT ENGINEER OF THE BERENICE.—Three gentlemen who were passengers on board the Berenice, when she was obliged to return from the breaking of her intermediate shaft, Messrs. Grey, Burne and Captain Grant, have subscribed the sum of 80 rupees; the two former 30 rupees each, and the latter 20 rupees, and presented the same to Mr. John Brown, the Assistant Engineer, who was on watch at the time, as a mark of their sense of the presence of mind which he displayed upon the occasion of the accident.

THE ENGINES OF THE TIGRIS.—It is in contemplation to form an expedition for the purpose of proceeding to the Euphrates to try if the engines of the steamer Tigris, which was upset in a squall, can be rendered serviceable, the vessel having been made over by Her Majesty to the Indian Government.

TRANSIT DUTIES.—The Transit Duties, have at length been abolished and the Bonding System substituted.

PLANTING TIMBER IN THE DECKAN.—Government have sanctioned a proposal made by Dr. Leuah, to plant the acacia arabica, or babool, in the Deckan for timber, whereby the country is likely to be much benefited.

CHOLERA.—Cholera is now extending its ravages through the districts round Sholapoor, and is advancing westward in the direction of Poonah with slow but certain steps. It has already found its way to Punderdoor, in which place it is said to have numbered one thousand victims within eight days. Its progress along the greater road is, as usual, rapid.

ROBBERIES.—Midnight robberies have become extremely rare in Bombay.

VENERAM, THE LATE GUICOWAR MINISTER.—Veneram, who lately left Baroda on a mission to Calcutta, has promised to return within three months to his master; and his successful return is anxiously looked for by His Highness, who has kept the minister's post open till that time. It is said that there were some other reasons besides the service of his master that rendered the minister desirous of quitting Baroda.

NEW STEAMER.—Orders have been received from the Bengal Government to lay down the keel of a steamer of 800 tons to receive the engines of the Enterprise. Two pilot schooners are also to be built.

BURMAH.

MAULMAIN.—The H. C. schooner George Swinton, has returned from Rangoon to Maulmain bringing over the escort of Bengal sepoy attached to the residency for the purpose of being sent on to Calcutta. The Resident himself remains at Rangoon, though it was at one time supposed he would have come over in the George Swinton, in order to avail himself of some of the opportunities which have offered for Calcutta. There appears to be nothing stirring at Rangoon. A second Ye-won arrived there on the 10th by name Moun Ngau. His character is not described as being of the best; on the contrary he is charged by the Burmese as being the most prying inquisitive, meddling officer that ever lived. They say that no one at Rangoon can lay an egg but he finds it out. He is said to have paid 2,000 ticals to some of the king's followers for his appointment. All reports from the capital describe the king as openly expressing his determination not to abide by the treaties entered into with the late Government. He has refused to confer with any but crowned heads, and, it is said, waits only until he has collected a sufficient force, to commence hostilities against the English.

Dr. Richardson returned on the 25th of August to Maulmain, having been delayed a considerable time at Rangoon from want of a favorable opportunity of crossing over. He has thus completed a most interesting journey, and, no doubt, brings back with him a mass of information on hitherto unknown countries. He left all quiet at Rangoon. The Resident, Colonel Burney, had some idea of taking an early departure to Calcutta, on account of the state of his health. There was a report that the old governor of Bassen, Moun-theo-gale, who was being conveyed to Ava in irons, had effected his escape to Arracan.

AKYAB.—Letters from Akyab to the 7th instant state, that weather had become much more favourable, and the healthiness of the climate was duly improving. Great exertions were making by the acting Commandant and the other Officers on the spot, to render the Local Corps in all respects an efficient force; and it is said to be a great object with the Government, and this corps should, if possible, be made so effective as to be sufficient for the defence of Arracan, and thus to do away with the necessity of exposing their Indian troops to a climate so inimical to the health of the sepoy.

RA COON.—Advices had been received from Ava at Rangoon that both the Woundocks were to remain there; but on the 5th of August, an order came from the King, directing him to go and take charge of Bassen as Governor, and appointing the Woundock Moungh Shoy Meng, sole chief and governor of Rangoon. An order was also received, directing the former Ray-woon of Rangoon, a Tsa-re-do-gyee, Moungh byo, and the governor of Bassen to be sent up to the King in irons. The last mentioned, Moungh-Thoo-gale by name, is an excellent man, very popular with the people, but he once had the hardihood to go to law with the present King on some disputed account, which was decided in his favor.

MYEOW.—The want of rain and the lateness of its setting in this year, have caused much sickness in this place and greatly retarded the grain cultivation. The people are still at work in the fields, sowing their seed. Upwards of a hundred and fifty people have been carried off by the small-pox since it first broke out in March or April last. The demand for sapan wood this year, appears to exceed the supply. About 38 boats have gone up the river to collect it at 6. G. and though 7 is now offered, men are not to be obtained.

PENANG.

Penang papers to the 30th of September have been received during the month and deserve the attention of the Board of Opium, and of all interested in the opium trade. The grant of the Opium bonus is likely to involve the authorities here in some difficulties they did not contemplate when they decided on granting it, although their mode of proceeding was well calculated to produce such a result. With respect to the Opium in the Straits, for example, the Board have in excluding the Straits' opium dealers, acted on the information of a gentleman from China, Mr. Braine, who stated, that on the 1st of June there was no Opium of the first three sales in the Straits being fully persuaded of the accuracy of that statement; but Mr. Braine having been quite mistaken as respects Penang, the Chamber of Commerce of that Island, have held a meeting, at which it was resolved, that the Chairman should forward an address to Government, appealing to be placed on the same footing as purchasers for the China market have been, on the ground that Mr. Braine's information was incorrect as to Penang, and that the protest proposed by Messrs. Ferguson and Cockerell, is particularly applicable to the importers of Opium into Penang.

Another attempt was to be made for the recovery of Mrs. Bresley, an European detained by the Rajah of Soankraa. The latest paper records the very unusual occurrence of an earthquake, the second shock of which is described as having been a very smart one.

The Rajah Mooda of Pedier, had been committing depredations on the Malays again, to the detriment of the trade of the coast, and had had a vessel of his burned.

SINGAPORE

Singapore papers to the 31st of August also state that the Rajah Mouda of Pedier, was again committing depredations on the Pedier Coast and illegally extorting tribute from the inhabitants, and that in consequence of his proceedings the trade was at a stand. The Singapore Commission and Sir J. P. and Lady Grant, had safely arrived at Singapore.

CHINA.

Canton papers to the 19th of August, have been received during the month. The tone of the local authorities of Canton, as exhibited in the correspondence relative to the matter of the Hing-tao Hong, appears to be increasing in insolence, but there is nothing in that which ought to surprise us. A specimen of Chinese humanity is afforded in the account of the melancholy fate of Mr. Everard, who was drowned by the upsetting of a pleasure boat. A Chinese man-of-war boat was close at hand when the accident happened, but laughed at the appeals for assistance of the people struggling in the water, and suffered Mr. Everard to drown. Such are the civilized people of the celestial empire, who boast of their mercies towards "distant foreigners."

The state of the trade remained unsettled.

The survivors of the Fanny's crew had reached Canton. The whole of these men were to be sent to Nankin for trial. There is a letter from Capt. Biden on the subject of these mutineers. A new edict had been promulgated against opium, and the measures adopted to put down the trade are increasing in rigour. The trade was very dull. The English in China had got up a neat little Amateur Theatre, at which they had performed Sheridan's Rivals. The veteran artist (hitherto, played Mrs. Malaprop to Captain Biden's Captain Absolute. Mr. Chinnery's acting seems to be regarded as the Chef d'œuvre of the evening. Several other gentlemen known in this community also sustained parts. The Honble Mr. Drummond, Mr. Dalrymple, Mr. Hume, Mr. Rawson, and several others. The play appears to have gone off with great spirit.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From the Bengal Hurkaru Price Current, 28th November, 1837)

INDIGO—We have nothing particular to add to our report of last week. We have more estimates drawn up with great care by three different individuals much interested in the trade, and all agree in making the probable output 90 000 maunds.

RAW SILK—Considerable shipments going forward, and no good silk to be had in the bazar.

SILK & SICE GOODS.—A purchase of 1 000 pieces Consumbarai corahs is the only transaction reported with the occurrence of the week.

The prices of the assortments show a slight reduction on Consumbarai Corahs.

COTTON—Accounts from China, per the Compass Family, state the market firm for finer qualities their being very little imported. Of Bengal and Madras there is none in the first hands. The quotations on the 19th August were,

Bengal, ... old or inferior } 7 5 a 11 nominal superior and fine }
Bombay, ... ditto, } 7 0 a 11 "

SALTPETER—Has engaged attention during the week for the English, French and American Markets, but we have no change in prices to notice.

SUGAR—The business in this article continues on a limited scale, and the prices have slightly given way since our last.

SMALL LAC.—A purchase for the American Market is the only transaction reported.

LAC DYE.—A few purchases are reported.

DRY GINGER.—Is quoted at a reduction in price. We have heard of no transaction during the week.

HINDI, BORN, AND SAFFLOWER—Without report of purchase.

GRAIN—Operations in this branch of the trade consist chiefly in Moonghy Rice and Wheat for the Mauritius.

OPPIUM.—The transactions reported during the week are for immediate shipments per the Ann for China. She is engaged to start on the 1st September, with about 500 chests. The quantity in the Company's Warehouse last evening consisted of Paina, ... 3 595 Chests. } Total 3 916 Chests.

Bewares, ... 1 330 Ditto.

Accounts from China to the 15th August, per the Compass Family, are very gloomy, they state that the trade at Lisua had been almost completely stopped. The Government having taken more rigorous measures than heretofore for the purpose of effectually putting down smuggling, and the only out-let of the drug was the East Coast, it is also reported that the proprietors had burnt some of the boats, from apprehension of rigid measures on the part of the Mandarins. The deliveries to the 15th consisted of

Patna Old 17 New 3. — Benares Old 11 New 8 — Mylwa 1018 } total 1230 chests. The prices are as and are quoted

Patna	old	...	Sp	Dira	790	} Nominal
	n w			670
Benares	old	...			740
	new	...			660
Mylwa	old	...			520

STRETCH OUT—A sale has been effected.

Accounts to the 15th ultimo, from Singapore, state that this article has been in good enquiry for the market, and a lot consisting of 800 peculs had been purchased at Sp Dirs 1 90 for shipment to this place per Bingind.

MACE AND NUTMEGS.—A few sales have been effected.

PEPPER—A few sales of black Pepper are reported at a slight reduction in prices. Accounts from Singapore quote black Pepper at 5½ a 6 Sp Dirs per picul. About 500 Peculs Long Pepper are stated to be on board the Nederlander which vessel was to sail from Singapore on the 26th ultimo for this place.

BLOCK TIN—The Metal is reported to be in great demand at Singapore, chiefly for the Bombay Market, and considerable purchases were made at Sp Dirs 1½ a 15½ per Picul. The accounts from China are also stated to be favorable, Straits being in demand at Sp Dirs 18 per picul, and there is no immediate prospect of the price being below Sp Dirs 15 per picul at Singapore.

CHINTZES—The Market continues dull for all descriptions of Colored Goods, from the absence of demand from the Upper Provinces.

WHITE COTTONS, of lighter fabrics viz Jaconets, Lap-pets and Malis have improved about 2 a 5 per cent. on last month's prices.

WOOLLENS—Of coarser descriptions continue only to be enquired for, but the sales during the week show a shade of decline in prices.

MULTIPLY—A sale of 60 bales averaging No. 40, is the only transaction in this article reported since our last.

TURKEY RED AND OTHER DYEY YARNS.—Sales of a few bales Orange Yarn have been effected during the week, at a slight improvement on the price.

COPPER—Sales to a fair extent principally in 14lb. Tins have been effected since our last.

IRON.—The transactions during the week in this metal, shew the market to have improved in a slight degree both as to demand and prices.

SALTETTER—A sale has been effected.

TIN PLATES AND QUICK SILVER.—Without sale. The latter is in very good enquiry.

ADDRESS TO LIEUT. COL BURNEY

We have much pleasure in publishing the following address presented to Lieut. Col. Burney, on his quitting Rangoon, together with the reply returned by that officer.

Rangoon, 10th October, 1837.

To COLONEL H. BURNEY,

Resident at the Court of Ava, &c. &c. &c.

SIR,—Having heard that it is your intention to proceed to Calcutta, where doubtless your opinion will be demanded as to the best mode of re-establishing our relations with the Burman Court on the most solid and durable foundation, the undersigned merchants, traders, and residents at Rangoon, therefore, avail themselves of this opportunity not merely to express their warmest thanks for the repeated beneficial effects which they have experienced individually and collectively through the judicious exercise of your influence at Ava, and at Rangoon, but to express their feelings of gratitude for the protection which you readily afforded to their property, and to many of them in person, during the recent revolution at Ava, on which trying occasion the value of your public and private character was tested and proved. In this order you were seen bleeding foresight with humanity, coolness of temper with a just sense of national dignity, and spirit with judgment, regardless of danger to your health or person or popularity, conduct that at once commands our respect, and we submit, must afford the best guarantee to every reflecting, unprejudiced individual in both countries, that you possess the requisite experience and necessary qualifications to enable you to suggest to the government of either country the best mode and means through which the political and commercial relations, that heretofore happily existed, may be improved and secured on the most permanent foundation, to the mutual advantage of both countries.

In conclusion, we beg leave to offer our best wishes for your health and prosperity, and speedy return, and to remain,

Your most obedient servants,

Signed by 109 English, Armenian, Parsee, and Mogul merchants, traders and other persons residing at Rangoon, including the American Baptist and Italian Catholic Missionaries.

REPLY.

To the Merchants and other Gentlemen residing at Rangoon, who have signed an Address to Lieut-Col. Burney, Resident at Ava.

GENTLEMEN,—I receive, with undisssembled pleasure, this public expression of your good opinion and acknowledgment of the services which I have had the good fortune to perform.

Having never, during my residence in this country of nearly eight years, been actuated by any other desire than how best to aid every class of my fellow creatures, to promote good feeling between the English and Burmese nations and to improve wherever practicable, the political and commercial relations subsisting between them, your present address, inasmuch as it assures me, that my exertions to accomplish these objects of my desire have been well directed and sometimes successful, must afford me very high gratification. Many of you have long resided in this country and possess an intimate acquaintance with the language and character of the Burmese, and several of you, also, were with me at Ava and witnessed my proceedings there during the late troubled times. I must consider you then eminently qualified to form a correct judgment whether the manner in which I have, on all occasions, performed my public duty, deserved this honorable tribute of your approbation.

Be assured that I shall always cherish the most lively interest in the welfare of every one of you, and neglect no means or opportunity which I may ever possess, of promoting your comfort and prosperity, and keeping the English and Burmese on terms of peace and friendship, satisfactory and profitable to both nations.

I have the honor to remain, gentlemen, your very faithful servant,

Rangoon, 10th Oct., 1837. (Signed) H. BURNEY.

REPORTS.

1. On Dr. Jackson's motion made at last meeting to allow each Committee to procure such standard books, as might be useful in coming to an opinion on questions submitted to their consideration.

The committee recommended the adoption of Dr. Jackson's motion, and it now resolved,

That Members of Committees will send in the names of books required to the Secretary, who will procure them on the authority of the Committee of papers.

Resolved,—That the Committee's report be adopted in regard to other points therein referred to.

2. On the motion of Captain Carter, touching a premium for the domestication of bees in the plains.

The Agricultural Committee, to whom this question was referred, recommend that the proposal be allowed to lay over until they shall have collected more specific data.

Resolved,—That the Committee's recommendation be adopted.

3. The Secretary read the report of the Nursery Committee, which described the Nursery to be in a promising condition, the sugar-cane plantation progressing both in vigor and extent from multiplying the plants by cuttings, &c. The Committee express a desire to have the number of members increased both on the Nursery Committee and Committee of papers.

Resolved,—That the Nursery Committee's report be adopted, and with reference to the request of the present Committee, that the following gentlemen be solicited to give their assistance.

The President proposed the following.

Dr. Hufnagle, W. F. Gibbon, Esq., and Captain Leach, additional Members of the Nursery Committee, and

W. Craicraft, Esq., M. A. Bignell, Esq., and W. K. Ewart, Esq., additional Members of the Committee of Papers.

4. Report upon specimens of Caoutchouc forwarded by Dr. Heller and by Captain Jenkins, the latter made under the directions of Lieutenant Vetch.

The Committee had submitted some of these through R. Watson, Esq., and the following extract from Mr. J. E. Wainwright, to Mr. Watson, dated Duntail, 5th November, 1837, will exhibit the result.

"I am sorry to say that although three or four of my best cattanias tried to reel off the Assam cocoons they were unable to succeed. It appears to me that Captain Jenkins sent them in a cutch state, as the chrysalis have eaten their way out of some of the cocoons, and in those they have remained, the cocoons not being properly dried the fibres have rotted. When I failed in the filature reel, I tried to wind them off on the latta (on which the gootee-mal is made) but with no better success."

Motions submitted to the meeting.

Proposed by the President, in reference to increasing correspondence and labors generally of the Secretary, that a salary be awarded to Mr. Bell of 300 rupees per month.

The President read a letter to his address dated 30th October, 1837, from Mr. W. Anderson, Wallisley Street, Calcutta, forwarding some printed copies of Scott's Compendium, and suggesting with reference thereto, the formation of a "Joint Stock Association for the promotion of agriculture."

The following communications were read.

From Captain Bogle, of Arracan (without date) received October 3d, speaking most favorably of the soil of Arracan, as well adapted for producing all the staples of India, and desiring a supply of seeds for experiment. Alludes to specimens of wood, sent up by the H. C. M. Mermaid which have been received.

Note.—As nothing is said by Captain Bogle, as to whether these specimens were designed for this Society, being sent from the vessel without advice, the Secretary addressed a note to Mr. Seppings, who in reply supposes they are intended for this Society, but there is no paper of reference.

From J. Little, Esq., Secretary to the Bombay Society, dated 30th September, advising the dispatch per Scobion of a box commissioned by Mr. Bell, containing 4 vine plants and four dozen cuttings of the same.

From Major J. A. Moore, of Hyderabad, dated 21st September, advising the despatch of six grafts of the Nonpareil apple tree, and from S. Jameson, Esq., Masulipatam, dated 23d October, intimating the shipment of these grafts per Barque Scobion.

From T. O. Crane, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural Society at Singapore, dated 26th September, advising the despatch per "Empty Jane" of 16 mangosteen plants commissioned by Mr. Bell, which have been received and are submitted for the inspection of members. The plants have arrived in excellent preservation. Mr. Crane reports favorably of the sea-land and Bourbon cuttings, and promises in due course to forward a report of experiments made in that island by Mr. Almeida and himself.

From Messrs. Cantor and Co. dated 20th October, forwarding a quantity of area silk and cocoons, just then received from Captain Jenkins of Assam.

Memorandum.—The specimens have been submitted to the silk committee, and in accordance with a resolution, Mr. R. Watson has taken a small portion of the cocoons to see if they can be wound off.

From E. Bantall, Esq., of Dinagore, dated 16th October, presenting a piece of cloth, made of silk, spun by the worm which feeds on the castor oil plant.

No. 2. Dated 14th October, enclosing a memorandum of plants and cuttings that can be supplied from the Society's Nursery:

Memo.—These have been adventured, and many applications have been met.

No. 3. Dated 14th October, forwarding specimens of thread and cloth, and a small quantity of seed, the produce of hankin cotton shrubs grown at Mr. Manby's garden at Keerpooy, from seed originally received from the Botanical garden.

No. 4. Dated 16th October, forwarding for the purpose of being laid before the Society, a report by Mr. W. Griffith, on the tea plant of Assam.

No. 5. Dated 24th October, forwarding with reference to the above communication, 2 drawings and 3 maps belonging to Mr. Griffith's report.

No. 6. Dated 2nd November, forwarding for presentation 3 specimens of caoutchouc, prepared under the guidance of Assistant Surgeon Scott, of Gowhatti.

From Dr. A. Campbell, of Nepal, dated 3rd October, transmitting for comparison, four samples of maize, viz. two, the produce of American seed of the Canadian and Bostonian species received from the society, and two of the white and yellow maize of Nipaul, and giving some information regarding them.

From the same dated 6th October regretting his inability to send the promised plants of the "Frangass," owing to the whole of the plantation having through inadvertence been destroyed. Forwarding to the name of Mr. Hodgson a small supply of red clover seed.

Stating that in his opinion the climate of Nipaul is well suited for acclimating European seeds before establishing them in Bengal.

From Dr. Huffleagle, dated 23rd October, giving cover to a note from Colonel L. R. Stacy, to the address of the Secretary, forwarding two packets containing several varieties of melon seeds.

From Lieut. H. Bigge, of Bissanath, Assam, dated 6th October, intimating the favorable progress of their branch Society, and soliciting a supply of seeds.

From His Excellency, Monsieur Berteer, Governor of Chandernagore, intimating his intention of shortly quitting that settlement for the Isle of Bourbon, and offering his services to this Society during his residence there. Expressing regret at not having been able to devote more time to the objects of an institution in the welfare of which he feels the deepest interest; enclose a printed circular and regulations of an Agricultural Society which was established by him at Bourbon some time ago.

From Major Sleeman, dated Simlah, 17th October, enclosing copies of a correspondence between Lieutenants Charles Brown and himself, on the subject of exchange to be made to applicants for the Otahite cane from his Jubbulpore plantation, and requesting that the same may be brought to the notice of the Society.

Memorandum.—The Secretary had anticipated the concurrence of the Society, and had written to Major Sleeman, stating that, in as far as the Society's demands upon the plantation were concerned, there could not be the slightest objection to the moderate charge of four pice per cane, the rate at which it had been already sold, to keep up the stock of one of the most useful establishments in India.

From G. M. Adam, Esq., dated 30th October, on the subject of two bags of Tinnevely cotton seeds received since, through the kindness of this gentleman and of which a considerable portion has been already distributed, to Captain Jenkins, Assam, to Mr. Blundell, Maulmain, and various parts of the interior of Bengal.

From W. Cracroft, Esq., dated 31st October, forwarding three samples of caoutchouc. One in its original state produced at Penang, the other two prepared in England from South American produce.

From Lieutenant Hanyngton, dated Puralia, 12th October, acknowledging Secretary's letter of the 18th September, offering to send an assortment of seeds, suggests the translation of such circulars to offer premia, into the vernacular languages.

Note.—This has been already done through the suggestion of Mr. Walters, at least in Bengalee, and the Hindee translation is now in press.

From Capt. Harkness, Secretary to the Committee of Agriculture and Commerce of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, dated 11th May 1837, intimating in reply to Mr. Bell's Circular Letter of the 4th April 1836, a mutual wish on the part of the Committee to correspond with this Society.

Stating that the Committee have forwarded to the Government of Bengal, specimens of the lichens used in Europe for dyeing, and requesting the assistance of the Society in transmitting specimens of the same description of article employed in India or any other of the products of this country which may appear adapted to the same object, for the purpose of being submitted to experiment.

From Jas. Prinsep, Esq., Secretary to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, dated November 2nd, giving cover, for the information of this Society, to copy of a letter addressed to the Right Hon'ble Lord Auckland, by the Secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain, in the part of the committee of Agriculture and commerce, transmitting several specimens of lichens above alluded to, and stating that the specimens of this kind with chemical tests, have been deposited in the Asiatic Society's Museum for the inspection of Members. Forwards for the use of this Society five copies of the 1st part of proceedings of the committee, which contains some information regarding the lichens.

Memorandum.—The Secretary has opened a correspondence with the committee by transmitting samples of the products of the valley of Nipaul recently received from Dr. Campbell.

Mr. Marshman presented in the name of the author a copy of Review of the Doctrines of the Ricardo, or new School of Political Economy by Major W. H. Steeman.

Some copies of proceedings of the Committee of Agriculture and Commerce, have been received through Messrs. Thacker and Co.

From Dr. Wallich, dated November 7th, forwarding an interesting extract of a letter to his address, received from Dr. Wight of Madras, bearing dates the 20th and 23d October.

Dr. Wight, speaks very favorably of his experimental plantations of cotton from American seed and promises to favor the Society, when he shall have perfected his different modes of treatment, &c. "The sea-island grows well and luxuriantly, but produces little or no cotton, owing to almost every pod being perforated by some insect, and rendered the nidus for its young to the certain destruction of the produce." Again, "I may however mention, that so far as my experiments have yet extended the Uplands promise to prove by far the most productive soil, the grey, loamy and clay soils, such as are found about Madras, and along extensive plains bordering the sea coast, between the sandy coast soils and the ferruginous and kunker soils which prevail in the more hilly districts whether near the coast, or in the interior."

Dr. Wight regards the Upland Georgia grown in such soils, as promising to be more productive than the Bourbon, adding that for one corp of Bourbon cotton two corps of Upland Georgia are obtainable.

Dr. Wight puts a startling question to Dr. Wallich "Have you any genuine Egyptia? What I got as such raised, it was said, from genuine seed in Madras, has grown and prospered, but is evidently a mixture, I should say, of Sea Islands and Uplands, and upon this supposition Dr. Wight pronounces the one to be Sea Island and the other Upland Georgia, from the circumstance of which he suspects by the latter producing enormous pods and the few that have blown, according with his Uplands.

It would be interesting if Dr. Wight would point out what he considers "Genuine Egyptia," for we seek in vain for historical accuracy to enable us to determine whether the cotton plant is a native of Egypt. Herodotus informs us that cotton cloth was in use in India in his days, but makes no allusion to its existence in Egypt, from which it may be inferred that the seed was originally carried from Persia, where cottons were manufactured upon the authority of Strabo. We learn from Pliny that cotton was grown in Upper Egypt in his time, but it does not appear to have been an article of any commercial importance until 1821, when the enterprising Pasha began to cultivate it extensively. After various experiments, it produced cotton inferior only to the sea-islands. In 1827 or 1828, the Pasha procured and planted a large quantity of seed from the Sea-Island cotton in Bourbous and produced cotton superior to any save the Sea-Island. We are left to conjecture, upon what seed the Pasha made his experiments in 1821, but it seems more than probable that it was Sea-Island, and that from the success obtained in the first years, the Pasha was ambitious to extend his resources by importing seeds from America. The character of the genuine Egyptian cotton may therefore be truly said to be between Sea-Island and Uplands—by trans-plantation to a soil congenial to a medium staple superior to the one, from the influence of the soil and climate, and inferior to the other from being deprived of sea air.

Dr. Hufnagle presented specimens of the second crop of Upland Georgia Cotton seeds, and some pods from acclimated seeds. The cotton was considered of very superior quality.

Mr. Ewart submitted a memo. on experiments made by him at Leeds on a cask of American Upland Georgia cotton seed weighing 1 cwt. 1 qr. 14 lbs. net which produced.

Of Oil....	0 3 20
Cake.....	0 1 4
	1 0 24
	18 loss.
Cwt.	1 1 14

1. The production of oil is not more than half of what the same quantity of rape seed would have produced

2. The loss is considerable, owing it is supposed, in part to the seed being in an unusually soft state

3. This seed would not yield its oil at all without warming, or so little as to be of no practical use.

4. The heat applied was about the same as is used in crushing rape seed.

5. The seed yields its oil more tardily than rape.

6. The oil is more glutinous than rape oil.

7. It is more difficult to combine it with soap.

8. For these reasons it is thought not to be applicable to the uses of the mechanics or manufactures. It is thought it could not be refined.

In the event of its proving a drying oil, its colour would prevent its being used except for the most common purposes.

The cake has a different appearance from rape cake, but cannot say how far it would be equally valuable as a food, or a manure.

Some specimens of Maize were presented by W. Martin, Esq., the produce of Kishnaghur, grown by A. Macarthur, Esq., of Bamundee Factory, of Candian seed sent from this Society.

Two plants of the Fungus Tribe were presented by D. Mac-Kelaine, Esq., some time ago, and omitted to be recorded before. They are more generally known by the name of Neptune's cup.

Mr. Bell will be happy to supply any member who takes an interest in the propagation of fruit trees with a plant of the Mirogostean of which he has received several as a present from Mr. Crane of Singapore.

A notice was put in by Mr. Bell, as competitor for the silver medal and premium for a cultivation of ten beegahs of Guinea grass which question was left to the decision of the Society, on a report from a committee consisting of Dr. Jackson, Captain Leach and W. F. Gibbon, Esq., who agreed to meet and visit the cultivation.

Mr. Bell is also a competitor for the highest premium, on the production of one maund of guinea grass seed.

The quantity sent into the Society by Mr. Bell, already amounts to one maund and twenty-one seers of well dried seed silted from all stalks and impurities, which he presented to the Society, whether a successful competitor or not, and this quantity is sufficient to introduce this superior grass throughout all India, if the sample rules laid down by Mr. Bell for sowing and planting be observed.

Applicants are invited therefore to lose no time in sending for what quantity they require.

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be offered for all these communications and presentations.

NURSERY COMMITTEE'S PROCEEDINGS

A Meeting of this Committee took place at the Botanical Garden on Friday evening, 20th October, 1837, at 5 o'clock.

Present, Dr. Wallich, Mr. Storm, Mr. Bell.

The Committee proceeded to visit the Nursery which continues in a thriving condition.

The Otaheite sugar cane is doing well, and with reference to its having been planted out of season, and at different periods as received, is throwing out vigorous and numerous suckers. These the Committee would have ordered to be cut out had the quality and size of cane been a desideratum, but as the object of the society is to have abundant plant in distribution, the Committee have deemed it expedient, to cut down some of the largest cane in order to extend the cultivation, and these cuttings have been planted out in square holes, after the West India method.

The original beds are still susceptible of pruning and the Committee have resolved to extend the cane piece as far as there is space on the same plot without encroaching on the Upland Georgia and New Orleans cotton beds, when, if there still remains a surplus, the Committee have resolved to appropriate two plots now ready dug adjacent to the tank for the greater facility of irrigation. Before going further, your Committee are happy in being able to record the favorable opinion of a gentleman, whose practical experience in the West Indies, and his observations in the Mauritius, is the best guarantee for the accuracy of his judgment.

Mr. Guildings, who has been an active practical planter in the West Indies upwards of 20 years, has visited the Society's Nursery, and pronounces the Otaheite sugar-cane, to be looking very healthy, in with reference to the disadvantages under which the canes (not plants) were received, that the produce is very satisfactory. Mr. Guilding is, at present, absent on a tour of observation, but your Committee doubt not, he will on his return to Calcutta, corroborate what he has expressed verbally, in writing.

Next to the Otaheite cane stand in importance the canes received from Dr. Montgomerie, of Singapore.

It is hardly possible to form any opinion of the comparative size and quality of this cane, with that of Otaheite, until they attain maturity; but your committee have seen sufficient to convince them, that they are superior to the former. The plants received some months ago, having grown up most luxuriantly, the Committee have resolved to extend the cuttings as soon as the largest canes are fit to put into plants, leaving a few in their original condition to see the effect upon the size of the cane by thinning. The character of this cane is, in its present stage, difficult to determine. It appears to your Committee to be a link between the China and Otaheite species, partaking of the former as regards the number and closeness of shoots and of the latter in the graceful bend of the leaf, in the centre of which is a broad white rib which gives it, in Mr. Guilding's opinion, much the appearance of "Guinea cane."

The last importation of this cane is still in the hopper and the cuttings have sent forth numerous roots, but no appearance of the eyes germinating is yet perceptible.

The China cane is exceedingly luxuriant, and the numerous shoots from plant, admit of it being well thinned in order to extend the cultivation for distribution to those who wish to try it in contrast with other kinds.

Before taking leave of this subject, the Committee beg leave to record their obligation to Dr. Montgomerie, of Singapore, for the prompt measures he has adopted in meeting the wishes of the Society, as expressed to that gentleman by the Secretary, and it must be gratifying to Dr. Montgomerie to be assured, that his attentions are duly appreciated.

COTTON.—In conformity with a Resolution of the Committee passed at the last meeting in the Nursery, the New Orleans and Upland Georgia Cotton plants in Plot No. 1, had been cut down, and it is now resolved not to disturb the roots, unless the premiums offered for sugar-cane, should put the Society in possession of large supplies, and circumstances render it necessary to devote all the land dug up, to the reception of canes. The roots are left with a view to ascertain the proportion of seed which the shoots will produce.

Resolved, that the Egyptian Cotton, which is still flowering and fruiting, be allowed for the present to remain, and with reference to what Mr. McCulloch, the English Gardener, to the Pasha of Egypt, has stated to the committee this evening, as to the method observed in Egypt, that every alternate plant be cut down so soon as the present crop of seed is gleaned.

The Tinnevely cotton, from seed received from Dr. Wight, has sprung up but sparingly; the beds were ordered to be well weeded, and the soil loosened about the roots of the plants.

Since the last committee Meeting, it has been deemed expedient to advertise.* Several kinds of plants and cutting for distribution, and they are happy to observe, that several applications have been already made, and complied with.

Mr. Bell reported that in consequence of many Members having neglected to send for their quotas of vegetable seeds in due course, and the number of mallies who were supplied being greater this year, he had felt himself called upon to purchase a small consignment per Perfett, from Messrs. Boyd and Co., amounting to 260 rupees. These seeds were shipped by and on account of Messrs. Tredgold of the Cape.

The committee approve of the steps taken by the Secretary, as necessary, to prevent disappointment, and recommend, that in order to guard against the like contingency in future, the Secretary be directed to fix by advertisement a period of six weeks from the arrival of seeds being publicly announced, within which if not applied for by members, the surplus shall be sold.

The Secretary informed the committee, that he had sent his annual indent on Mr. Villet, at the Cape, for supplies of vegetable and flower seeds, and with reference to the increasing number of members he had ordered a greater quantity and variety.

The committee, before closing their report upon the Nursery, think proper to observe, that from the date on which Mr. Griffin's last letter was received by the Secretary until the special Committee's report was read, and presented by the last General Meeting of the Society, not a blade of weed was touched or removed with their sanction or knowledge, or by their orders, either individually or collectively, on the contrary, the Committee continued their visits to the garden, but on each occasion, strict orders were given not to touch any thing in the Nursery, though several suggestions were made, as usual, for its improvement, when they should feel themselves at liberty to carry them into effect.

Your committee are desirous, since the charge brought forward by Mr. Griffith, has now been set at rest, that the number of members, both on the Nursery Committee and Committee of papers, be increased, and your Committee being anxious that the utmost publicity be given to their proceedings, have resolved, that their Reports be published monthly in the Journals of the Presidency along with the Secretary's report, if it be not too long, and the Editors will kindly afford space.

The Secretary read the proceedings of the last Quarterly Meeting and the following Report.

COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

Owing to the intervention of the Doorgah Poojah holidays, the present Quarterly General Meeting has been convened on the last instead of the 2d Monday as prescribed by the Fund rules.

The Committee report that Mr. Superintending Surgeon Thomas Tweedie, now on furlough, has intimated, through his constituted attorney Mr. George Hill, his intention to retire on one of the Annuities declared this year, and that he having furnished the prescribed affidavit of age, Mr. Tweedie will be admitted an Annuitant on the usual terms.

Lieut.-Colonel Thomas Hall, of Her Majesty's 49th Foot, has also applied for an annuity to his brother Mr. James Hall, a retired Surgeon of this Establishment, but the Affidavit of age from Mr. Hall not having been furnished, the same has been called for, preparatory to his being admitted as an Annuitant upon the usual terms and under the penalties laid down in the Regulations.

Mr. Surgeon F. E. Baker, of the 10th Light Cavalry, at Kurnaul, likewise applied for one of the declared Annuities, but as he specifies certain conditions of acceptance he has been informed that his conditional application cannot be entertained.

The circular offering the Annuities declared this year to subscribers of upwards of 17 years' service in India, fixes the date for receipt of their answers by the committee agreeably to Section XXVII to-morrow the 31st instant.

Assistant Surgeons Augustus William Steat and John Ranford having applied to be admitted Subscribers to the Fund, since last Quarterly General Meeting, and having assigned satisfactory reasons for the delay in making their application for admission, the Committee have conditionally admitted them and will submit their names, conformably to the proviso of Section III of the Fund Deed, for the votes of the Subscribers, together with the undermentioned names of those admitted since the 31st day of October 1836, the time limited by the above Section.

The Committee announce that Mr. George Hill has been elected by a majority of votes of more than half the numbers of Subscribers in India, Secretary to the Fund in the room of Assistant Surgeon John T. Pearson, resigned in consequence of obtaining an appointment in the North Western provinces.

No regular sets of Books of Accounts having been at any time kept in the office of the Secretary to the Fund, the present Secretary has been directed to open the necessary Books, and to furnish each Subscriber with an Account Current of the state of his Accounts with the Fund brought up to hand. The Committee anticipate that the arrears of Accounts at all have been brought up before the next Quarterly General Meeting, and every Subscriber furnished with his Accounts, in which will be exhibited the interest accruing on his payments.

The Committee beg to notice that under the New Post Office Act their Secretary is permitted to send and receive communications on the "Fund Service" free of postage, all future communications therefore to that Officer may be addressed direct to the Secretary instead of under cover, as heretofore, to the Secretary to the Medical Board.

The Committee report that on the 3rd instant they requested the Accountant General to favour them with an Abstract Account of Assets of the Fund on the Government Books, with the interest accruing on the monthly subscriptions and yearly balances, not only with the view of ascertaining the precise amount at credit of the Fund but to have the same inserted in Treasury Notes, together with subsequent realization. Mr. Accountant General Morley has obligingly acceded to their wishes and expects to furnish the required statement in a couple of months. When the balance at credit of the fund on the 30th April last shall have been invested, and the Fund Books brought up, the precise Assets of the Fund can be ascertainable to the day.

Statement exhibiting Receipts in Government Treasuries to credit of Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, from its commencement on the 1st of January 1833 to 30th October 1837 inclusive, as far as ascertainable.

With reference to the rejection by the last Quarterly General Meeting of the two Propositions submitted by Mr. Superintending Surgeon Ludlow and other Subscribers at the station of Agra, the Committee of Management beg to Notice that the second of the above Propositions has been resubmitted in a letter dated the 7th September ultimo, from Mr. Ludlow and seven other Subscribers, with a request that, in conformity to Section XX. of the Fund Deed, it be submitted to the judgment and decision of the Subscribers at large. The Committee annex the letter and proposition.

Dr W. B. O'SHAUGHNESSY,

Officiating Secretary of the Medical Retiring Fund.

Sir,—In reply to Mr. Pearson's letter of the 20th ult., the undersigned Subscribers to the Medical Retiring Fund, stationed at Agra, beg you, without delay, to submit this letter to the Committee of Management.

The force of several of the objections brought against our 2d proposition we must readily admit; and though still of opinion that its advantages would, in all probability, be more than sufficient to outweigh them, yet in deference to the sentiments of the Committee and general quarterly meeting, and from a desire to avoid causing unnecessary expence, we shall cease to urge its further consideration.

To our first proposition, we cannot, however, permit so unmerited a fate. Against it a rash and groundless condemnation, we apprehend, has been passed. No cause whatever, of the emphatic "disapproval" so peremptorily pronounced upon it, would seem to have been adduced; nor alter the faintest reconsideration can we imagine the possibility of disavowing or devising any that shall prove sound, when applicability to the general service is kept in view.

We enclose, therefore, a copy of that proposition with our original remarks, verbatim, disencumbered merely of such allusion as is necessarily contained to the other, with which it was in the first instance associated, and request, in conformity with provision 20th of the Fund Deed, that it may be forthwith submitted in the form now forwarded, and of course with the appended remarks, for their judgment and decision to the subscribers at large.

Without any indication of the dissent or mark of the displeasure of the meeting, we regret to perceive that Mr. Raleigh has thought fit to bring himself to your notice by an implied vindication of our motives, as groundless as it is absurd. It behoved him rather we should think he has aimed at establishing the disinterested propriety of his own, in the eager and indiscreet hostility which he permitted his opposition to assume. To him, indeed, promotion may be no object of desire: to nineteen twentieths of the service it is of first rate importance.

A reference to the names of the proposers, or even a moment's consideration might have enabled that gentleman to perceive that they could have no interest apart from those their professional brethren not resident in Calcutta. Any proposition therefore originating with them, must have aimed at furthering the interests of the whole

Medical subscribers. In so doing they could not be otherwise than conscientiously correct, however faulty in application or erroneous in judgment their suggestions might have subsequently appeared.

The interests of every member of our service, and the pale of Calcutta, are clearly identical. Our feelings and perceptions, then, would alone have been sufficient for misleading us. But in order to correct those impressions (if any they had committed) the speakers themselves, without vouching any proof, specimens of which does not appear to us the sensible, the judicious, or the prudent course of procedure.

In bringing forward these propositions, we exercised not the privilege which the Fund deed confers upon us; nor, in any way, did we stretch the strict bounds of decorum. Our tone, temper and purpose were altogether unexceptionable. Was the reception of our propositions by Messrs. Raleigh and Garden, we would ask, in the same spirit?—We shall only take occasion further to observe that when a proposition is respectfully laid before the managing committee, common sense, and a regard for the general good, to say nothing of courtesy, require we humbly conceive, that the reason or reasons of the disapproval passed upon it should be carefully assigned.

We have the honor to be, Sir,

PROPOSITION.

Proposed that Reg. XXIII of the Fund Deed be thus modified, viz. to exchange the concluding clause, "nor to accept double such annuity as the sum of his subscriptions and other sums of money which he may have paid into the said fund, together with compound interest thereon as aforesaid may be sufficient to procure, according to the rate contained in the table of rates hereinbefore contained," and to substitute the following words:

"Or to accept an annuity of £150, together with such additional annuity as the sum of his subscriptions and other sums of money which he has paid or may pay into the said fund, together with compound interest thereon as aforesaid may be sufficient to procure, according to the rate contained in the table of rates hereinbefore contained. Provided always the aggregate amount of such annuity do not exceed the aforesaid sum of £300, and provided also that no sum or sums of money once paid into the said fund be afterwards withdrawn therefrom."

The following remarks are submitted in support of the above proposed modification of Reg. XXIII. The year the Medical Retiring Fund has commenced its operations by declaring three annuities out of a large number as a result of the numerous subscribers who have manifested seventeen years' service, and only a few are found able or willing to accept the fund pension on the terms offered.

That this unexpected result is in some measure owing to an expectation of obtaining the bonus is certain; but it is equally certain that there are many who would gladly accept the annuity were they not prevented by their inability to fulfil the required conditions.

It would therefore appear that the Medical Retiring Fund, even presently constituted, does not entirely suit the requirements of the persons for whose benefit it was designed.

The fund offers yearly 6 annuities of £150 each; provided that members pay into the fund a sum sufficient to secure an additional annuity of an equal amount. This is an undoubted privilege to all who possess the means and are willing to invest the requisite sum in a life annuity; for our fund receiving from Government 5 per cent. interest (the whole benefit of which goes or ought to go to the annuitant) is thereby enabled to grant annuities on much more favourable terms than any insurance office at home. But if the retiring member be either unable or unwilling to avail himself of this privilege in purchasing an additional annuity of £150, why should we refuse to give him the full amount of the pension which we are prepared gratuitously to bestow on other members, and by so doing reject steps that might otherwise be obtained at the usual price? The step of the one class of men is equal in value to that of the other, and ought in justice and policy to be purchased at an equal price unless it can be satisfactorily shown that to do so would involve a serious loss to the fund.

If a Subscriber relying on the diminished annuity here proposed, live a shorter time than the estimated number of years, the fund will gain less by his death, than it would have done had he been forced to buy up the full annuity; and on the other hand if he live longer than the expected time, the fund will lose proportionately less. For example A, an annuitant on £200, lives 4 years less than the expected time the fund gains by his death £800 or £400 less than it would have done if A had taken the full annuity B, an annuitant on £200, lives 4 years longer than the estimated time, the fund loses by him £800 or £400 as much as would have been gained had B taken the full pension. If therefore an equal number of "good and bad lives" were to retire on the diminished annuity, it appears to be a matter of indifference to the interest of the fund, whether they do, or prefer purchasing the full annuity; for suppose 20 "good" and 20 "bad lives" were to take the diminished annuities then the average losses on the long lives, would be counterbalanced by the average gains on the short lives; and if they die early, then the fund would pay gratuitously pensions of £150 to the whole 40 annuitants, for periods equal to the average duration of their lives, and the sum set aside for the additional pensions, would on the average serve for the purpose for which they were deposited, and this is precisely the expected result of the full annuities.

But it may be argued that bad lives will generally prefer the diminished, and "good lives" the full pension, and that this will deprive the fund of a portion of the money required to meet losses in another quarter. For example C, an annuitant on £200, dies 4 years sooner than the expected time, the fund gains by his death £800 or £400 as much as would have been lost had C taken the full annuity. D, an annuitant on £200, lives 4 years longer than the calculated time, the fund loses by him £800 or £400 than it would have done had D taken the full annuity. If therefore an equal number of "good and bad lives" were to retire on the diminished annuity, the result will be reversed;

thus E, a full annuitant, dies 4 years sooner than the expected time, the fund gains by his death £1200. — F, an annuitant on £200, lives 4 years longer than the calculated time, the fund loses by him only £800 or £400 less than it gained on E. Now in all these cases the society out of its own funds, deposits precisely the same amount on account of premium to the retiring officer.

As the fear that a greater proportion of "bad" than of "good lives" will prefer the diminished annuity seems to be the only objection of weight which can be made to the proposed alteration, it is necessary to consider it at some length.

That a subscriber in bad health would generally prefer a bonus is probable, the temptation to do so being greater to all who doubt the value of their own lives. Such persons would at once carry off a large portion of the society's funds, no part of which could ever return to it. But he who has only the power of taking the diminished annuity is in a different situation, he can carry away none of the funds, and has consequently much less inducement to follow this course on the single ground of presumed bad health. It is seldom that any one is disposed cordially to agree with his friends or Medical advisers in the opinion that he has only a few years to live, unless indeed this opinion be backed by the prospect of some immediate gain. A dying man resigning the service to secure a bonus, would gain a considerable advantage for his heirs, an incalculable loss to the fund, — but what object could such a person propose to himself by declaring for the diminished annuity? For the same reasons therefore we are of opinion that other motives than a consciousness of being a "bad life" would generally influence subscribers in their determination to accept the reduced pension such is want of funds, a desire to settle in some of the colonies, where a certain command of ready cash is so necessary to insure success, a laudible disinclination on the part of fathers of families to sink their whole capital in a life annuity, &c. &c. But admitting that some undue proportion of "bad lives" were to take the diminished annuity, and so cause some loss or more correctly speaking some diminished gain to the fund, it is contended that this disadvantage would be more than counterbalanced by the accelerated promotion caused by enabling many to leave the service who under the operation of the existing regulations are precluded from doing so. If we were a common Insurance Company calculating on deriving a certain profit to ourselves on the result of our transactions, it would then be inadvisable to permit any member to take the proposed reduced annuity, but as we profess to serve no gain, our only concern should be to guard ourselves against a loss, or we may insure a certain extent of risk of loss, to obtain a greater benefit in the shape of accelerated promotion.

Government which pays the 6 per cent interest might reasonably object, if we were to propose to allow all members to lodge money to procure higher annuities than £300, but it cannot object to their being satisfied with smaller pensions.

It is especially to be kept in view, that the proposed alteration cannot of necessity continue to have effect more than a limited number of years, because in the course of time, members will have paid up their minimum subscriptions, before getting the offer of the fund pension; its effect must therefore decrease in extent year by year, until, at last, it dies a natural death.

Our present experience clearly proves that something must be done fairly to compensate the operations of the fund, as a scheme intended to accelerate promotions &c.

it can hardly be doubted, that out of about fifty subscribers at this moment, having the offer of the pension, there are many, who would willingly recur to their native country in a consolidated annuity of about £350 (namely, the fund premium, annuity and Company's retiring pension) but who find themselves forced to remain in India from want of means to purchase the remainder of the fund. This is a condition, which, if not proved to be necessary to prevent serious loss to the fund, must be admitted to be crucial to the individuals so situated, as it is impolitic with regard to the general interests of the members.

Agra, 15th May, 1837.

The Committee will submit the preceding proposition to the subscribers with the proceedings of this meeting, but the Committee adhere to the grounds of the objections stated at length at the last quarterly meeting held on the 10th July last, and they recommend that no alteration be attempted to be made in the fundamental rules, until the capacity of the fund treasury, and applicability or otherwise of the rules as at present established, have been ascertained from the experience of its working.

The Committee beg to submit to this meeting certain tables of calculations as to the resources of the fund submitted by their Secretary consequent on their call upon him to report on the practicability or otherwise of the preceding Agra proposition, with a short summary drawn by that officer explanation of them. Deputy Military Auditor General Captain Henderson and Colonel Tennant's opinions on the same subjects are also submitted, together with their colleague Dr. Jackson's minute.

The Committee notice that although the present rate of subscription is not sufficient to meet the payment of the respective annuities, and to keep up the engagement of the fund of providing for each year's six annuities, yet as the fund has sufficient capital to pay all probable demands on the institution, the Committee with reference to Section V of the Fund Deed recommend, that the rate of subscription shall continue unchanged until such time as a further capital may be requisite for current purposes.

By order of the Committee of Management,

GEORGE HILL, Secretary, Medical Fund.

Resolved,—That the report of the Committee of Management just read, be confirmed and adopted by this meeting, and that the same be printed, and a copy thereof with the several documents referred to in the said minute para, be sent to each subscriber conformable to Section XXI. of the Fund Deed.

Resolved,—That as it is highly desirable to place the "Bengal Medical Retiring Fund" on a sure and sound foundation, it appears advisable to this meeting that a professional Actuary of a London Assurance Office should be consulted, and that as Dr. A. R. Jackson is about to proceed on furlough, this meeting recommend it to the general body of subscribers to authorize that gentleman to take the necessary steps on his arrival in London to carry the object of this resolution into effect, and that he report the results to the Committee of Management."

Resolved,—That the remarks of the Agra subscribers respecting the conduct of Messrs. Gordon and Raleigh appear to this meeting uncorrected and confirmed by any thing said by those gentlemen at the last quarterly general meeting.

Resolved,—That the thanks of this meeting be voted to William Henderson, Esq., for his conduct as Chairman of his colleagues.

(Signed)

W. Fraser, Chairman.

The Secretary has the honor to circulate for the consideration of the Committee of Management, Captain H. B. Henderson's opinion of the fund generally, as stated in the Agra proposition, together with a tabular statement drawn out by himself after Captain Henderson's suggestion. This table supposes that 100 subscribers join the fund on admission into the service at the average age of 24 years, that in the fourth year the survivors attain the second, and in the eighth year the third grade of Assistant Surgeons assigned for regulating amount of subscription by Section IV. of the Fund Deed; and that with 13th year they become Full Surgeons. The period of service is taken at 20 years to allow for 3 years furlough.

In Volume XX of the Asiatic Researches certain tables of mortality for British India are given, which have been compiled from statistical results obtained by the Committee of the once proposed Government Life Insurance Office. Table XXV of these published tables gives the decrement and expectation of life deduced from average mortality of Officers of the Madras Army for a period of 20 years, viz from 1814 to 1833; and from this table the Secretary has calculated the average of decrement as exhibited in the third column of the accompanying table. Of 100 subscribers joining, at the end of the 20th or commencement of 21st year 4317 are supposed to survive, vide column 2nd. The accumulated amount of subscriptions and donations at 6 per cent compound interest during the period embraced in the table is Rs. 4,92,563 28 (vide column 6th) giving to each of the survivors Rs. 10,225 41 (vide column 7th) of this accumulation, but of such survivors each of them has only contributed in actual cash payments, as per margin, Rs. 2,456, which is further increased by the operation of compound interest at 6 per cent. to Rs. 7,256.87, (vide column 8 of accompanying table.)

After 20 years' service the average age to which the preceding survivors attain is 44. An annuity of Rs. 300 or £300 per annum at that age, according to the Northampton average of life, is valued at Rs. 30,705.

By existing rules of the Fund, one moiety of this valuation minus accumulated subscriptions and donations at 6 per cent, compound interest is payable by the annuitant, and the remaining moiety, viz Rs. 15,352 5 is borne by the Fund, hence it appears that although the income derivable to the fund in 20 years out of 100 subscribers joining, provides only Rs. 2,980 64 to each survivor, the fund is able to make up 15,352.5 to him, besides returning him his contributions with compound interest by deducting their aggregate from the purchase money for the full value of the annuity. Its means of fulfilling this obligation would appear to be derivable from income alone; a deficit therefore in each individual annuity is quite of its kind. 12,182 86 appears to result against the fund in the computation exhibited in my tabular statement.

From the preceding explication it will be seen, that the present means of the fund are not equal, on sound principles, to its engagements; and by consequence less equal to the increased liabilities the adoption of the Agia proposition would inevitably cause.

The Secretary begs leave to attract attention to two other signed statements that he has the honor to submit herewith, marked A and B. The one marked A exhibits the appropriation of the annual assessments and other income of the fund in annually granting its promised six annuities, and meeting its other expenses, and the result exhibited by this process at the end of the 6th year is, that the fund falls short in its income by Rs. 1,940 to answer its liabilities. Statement B supposes that 6 annuities are taken up every year, and exhibits at the end of each year for a period of 6 years the amount that is required to be withdrawn annually, agreeably to provisions of Section XXXVII. of the Rules, from unappropriated to "Appropriated Fund," to maintain an equilibrium between the amount of the latter, and the annual valuation of the several annuities according to the increasing age of each annuitant. This, therefore, is an additional drain on the current funds, not taken to account in statement A. As the Secretary has confined his calculations in Statement B to the number of annuitants coming on the fund in six years only, he has made no allowance for the per centum decrement with reference to the shortness of the period, and the small number of annuitants taking the fund in that time.

As then the only source of permanent income to the fund is derived from lapses, to improve its revenue in that particular, it would appear advisable to raise the amount of monthly assessment, but this is a question for your Committee to decide with reference to its practicability.

If the fund is to be considered as founded on Tontine principles, the amount of each annuitant's contributions with compound interest, and his average share of profits resulting from lapses, should be allowed to accumulate till they reach the value computed at his age for the annuity the fund is to grant him before he is declared an annuitant. Had this rule prevailed the Agia proposition could be granted without incurring risk. The only sure course of proceeding is what has just been stated; but as profits are not desired beyond covering liabilities of the fund, so as to obviate taxing the pockets of the members beyond their fixed contributions, a professional actuary's experience of years would enable him to suggest a middle course, by adopting which the fund may be able with safety to relax its strictly annuity principles in admitting its annuitants to the benefit it holds out.

Before Mr. Hill's election to the office of Secretary to the fund, he never had occasion to turn his attention to his annuity calculations; he is therefore, he need scarcely say, a mere tyro. But as it is highly important, with the view to ensure confidence and to dispel any doubts that may be lingering in the minds of some of the subscribers, that the basis of the fund calculations should be founded by an experienced professional person, he would accordingly beg respectfully to suggest the expediency of your delegating to your colleague Dr. A. R. Jackson, who purposes to proceed on furlough this season, and who will, no doubt, cheerfully undertake the trouble, the duty of consulting an actuary of any London assurance office. The expense will not, the Secretary imagines, exceed £50.

Secretary M. R. F.

Calcutta, 17th October, 1837.

GEORGE HILL, Esq.,

Secretary Bengal Medical Retiring Fund.

My dear Sir,—I do myself the pleasure to send you my opinion on the question you have submitted to me respecting the proposition from Agia. But I need scarcely assure you that I am by no means competent to decide on such questions. When employed in the Audit Office to report upon the different Retiring Funds, and when subsequently the Secretary of the Government Life Assurance Committee, I was obliged to turn my attention to the subject of assurance and annuities, but beyond the consideration of them necessary for the occasion, I have never particularly made a study of such matters, and offer my present opinion with some doubt and reluctance.

But I can have no hesitation in endeavouring to be useful, as far as my little information goes, and I shall be happy to afford it whenever you find it necessary to refer to me.

Yours faithfully,

H B HENDERSON.

9th October, 1837.

It must be contemplated, I presume, that a subscriber's contributions, at compound interest should, after a given term of years, accumulate to a certain amount, which amount increased by its share of lapses among his brother contributors should altogether reach the value of an annuity of £300

2d. In other words his own subscriptions at interest should amount to half the value of the annuity (say 15,000 Rs.) while the fund from the lapsed contributions of deceased subscribers should be able to give the remainder, or 15,000 Rs. more

3d. All the present contributions of a surviving subscriber are engrossed therefore for his own benefit, and so to make up the 15,000 Rs. which he is called upon to make good.

4th. Further, it is evident, that the funds for meeting its share, or 15,000 Rs. can be derived only from the lapses of others, and the compound interest on the same, accumulating during the period that the surviving subscribers' contributions have been reaching also 15,000 Rs. The required sum can come from no other source except possibly a few contingencies such as early withdrawal from the service, dismissals, fines for arrears, &c. As for benefit from individuals not taking the annuity when entitled, the fund has not yet reached that point.

If the above view is correct, the Agia proposition is asking for a benefit which the fund has not present capital to give, and cannot grant without forestalling the means for future annuities.

N.B. It will be seen the above opinion denies the existence of any present spare annuities at all, and involves an important question for the consideration of the fund.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society, held at the Asiatic Society's Apartments, the 4th November, 1837.

Letters from the following gentlemen were read :—

From James Burt, Esq., Surgeon, Her Majesty's Service, requesting, that his name may be withdrawn from the Society as he is leaving India for Europe.

From Dr. Ranken in reply to the Secretary's notice on the subject, stating, that the Medical Board were willing to frank the Society's Communications, but they did not consider that they were entitled to extend the same privilege to the quarterly periodical.

Dr. Strong stated, that he was empowered on the part of the Calcutta Public Library to offer free room for the Society's books, in the building now occupied by them, and the services of Librarian, in case it should be determined to remove these books from the Asiatic Society's apartments.

This proposition was not approved by the Meeting, but thanks were voted to the Public Library Committee for their handsome offer.

The proposition made last Meeting of moving the Society's Library to the Medical College, was then discussed at some length, and it was finally determined to withhold the proposition.

In this discussion Dr. Goodeve and O' Shaughnessy stated, that they would take no part in the question, the proposition had been made without reference to them, and they declined voting upon it, but they said, that they should of course regard the transfer of the books to the college as a great advantage to their pupils, and should the members decide upon placing the library in their charge, they would pledge themselves to preserve the books with the utmost care, and return them, if possible, in better order than they received them, whenever the Society called to them to do so. At the same time, Drs. Ranken and Stewart altogether denied any intention of transferring the Society's property to the Medical College, by the change they had proposed. They stated that their sole object in wishing this transfer which had been so grossly and wilfully misrepresented, was to place the library in a situation where it would be more useful, and where the expense of a librarian would be saved. They never, for an instant, intended to make a gift of the Society's property to the College, or any other institution, public or private.

Dr. Goodeve gave notice on the part of his colleague Dr. O' Shaughnessy, and himself, that they intended at the Annual Meeting for the election of office bearers, and the alteration of the Society's rules, to submit a proposition, that in future, all elections of office bearers should be referred to the Members at large.

A very interesting paper, containing the account of a curious case of fever which occurred at Howrah, was presented to the Meeting, by Mr. W. A. Green, it was subsequently read and discussed.

A series of the Calcutta Christian Observer was presented by the Editors in exchange for the Society's Quarterly Journal, which they had expressed a desire to receive.

ASIATIC SOCIETY

The monthly meeting of the Asiatic Society last night, exhibited a good indication of the growing interest of the public in the labors of this society, five new members being elected and four more proposed. Among the exhibitions of the evening were the two gold medals sent out by the London Geological Society to be presented to Captain Caulfeild and Dr. Falconer, the whole of Dr. McClelland's splendid zoological drawings and descriptions of his collection, when on the Assam expedition, and two beautiful journals presented by Lieutenant Kinnear, of his march to Goomur, illustrated with a number of admirable drawings of objects noticed on the march, a fine collection of fossil bones from the Sewalik range presented by Conductor Daw. (It is worthy of remark that several of the best contributors to research in India have been in the ranks of Sergeants and Conductors), and Dr. Custer's catalogue of fishes and snakes, a portion of the collection in the museum. The society took the opportunity of Dr. Custer's approaching departure for Europe to send duplicate sets of their collection for the Company's museum and also for some of the continental museums.

A set of specimens of lichens used as dyes in Europe was exhibited, with a communication from Lord Auckland, which stated that His Lordship had received them from the Agricultural Committee of the Asiatic Society, with a request to be supplied in return with specimens of lichens used for similar purposes in India. It was in consequence resolved to send home immediately a portion of a large collection of Himalaya lichens presented sometime ago by Mrs. Siddons.

The Curatorship of the museum is not to be filled up at present. At least until the arrival of Mr. Coombs de Koroos who has the offer of it and is coming down to Calcutta. In the meantime the living will go to augment the funds applicable to increasing the stock of the museum.—Calcutta Courier, Nov. 2.

Read the following letter from the Secretary to the Asiatic Society of Paris in reply to the Society's address.

Monsieur J. Princep, Secrétaire de la Société Asiatique du Bengale.

Monsieur le Secrétaire,

Le conseil me charge de vous faire connaître que la Société Asiatique de Paris a reçu la lettre que Monsieur le très honorable Président de la Société du Bengale et M. le Secrétaire ont bien voulu nous adresser en réponse à l'offre que la Société Asiatique de Paris avait fait à la Société du Bengale d'être un de ses intermédiaires pour la vente des ouvrages saisis aux quels le gouvernement avait refusé de conti nuer ses encouragements, et dont la Société du Bengale avait entrepris l'achèvement. Le conseil a été vivement touché des expressions de sympathie et d'estime dont la Société dont vous êtes le digne organe a bien voulu se servir à l'égard de la Société Asiatique de Paris, et il me charge de vous prier de vouloir bien exprimer à votre illustre compagnie nos remerciements les plus sincères. Le conseil est fier de l'impressionnement avec lequel la Société du Bengale a bien voulu recevoir ses offres, et il espère le besoin de donner à ce corps célèbre les assurances les plus vives du désir qu'il éprouve de faire pour le succès des plans arrêtés par la Société du Bengale tout ce qui est en son pouvoir. Veuillez être assez bon Monsieur le Secrétaire, pour renouveler à la Société Asiatique du Bengale l'expression de ces sentiments, et pour recevoir en même temps l'assurance des sentiments de véritable estime avec lesquels j'ai l'honneur d'être

Votre très humble et très obéissant Secrétaire,

LUIGI BURNOUR.

Paris, le 12 Juin, 1837.

The Secretary read a reply from M. Cooma de Koron to the announcement of the Society's desire to confer upon him the office of librarian.

M. Cooma expresses his sense of the high honor done him, and states his intention of immediately proceeding to Calcutta, where he will give a definitive answer.

Read extract of a letter from Dr Royle Secretary to the Geological Society, transmitting under charge of Captain H Drummond, the gold Wollaston medals awarded to Dr. Hugh Falconer and Captain P. G. Cautley for their fossil discoveries in the Sandak range.

Dr. Royle quoted the following extract from Mr. Lyell's address delivered at the Anniversary meeting of the Geological Society on the 17th February, 1837.

ORGANIC REMAINS.

"Gentlemen, you have been already informed that the Council have this year awarded two Wollaston medals, one to Captain Proby Cautley of the Bengal Artillery, and the other to Dr. Hugh Falconer, Superintendent of the Botanic Garden at Saharunpore, for their researches in the geology of India, and more particularly their discovery of many fossil remains of extinct quadrupeds at the southern foot of the Himalaya mountains. At our last Anniversary I took an opportunity to acknowledge the present, consisting of duplicates of these fossils, which the Society had received from Captain Cautley, and since that time other donations of great value have been transmitted by him to our museum. These Indian fossil bones belong to extinct species of herbivorous and carnivorous mammals, and to reptiles of the genera crocodile, gaval emys, and trionyx, and to several species of fish with which shells of fresh-water genera are associated, the whole being entombed in a formation of sandstone, conglomerate marl, and clay, in inclined stratification, comprising a range of hills called the Siwalik, between the rivers Sutledge and Ganges. These hills rise to the height of from 500 to 1,000 feet above the adjacent plains, some of the loftiest peaks being 3,000 feet above the level of the sea.

"When Captain Cautley and Dr. Falconer first discovered these remarkable remains, their curiosity was awakened, and they felt convinced of their great scientific value, but they were not versed in fossil osteology, and being stationed on the remote confines of our Indian possessions, they were far distant from any living authorities or books on comparative anatomy to which they could refer. The manner in which they overcame these disadvantages and the enthusiasm with which they continued for years to prosecute their researches when thus isolated from the scientific world, is truly admirable. Dr. Royle has permitted me to read a part of their correspondence with him when they were exploring the Siwalik mountains and I can bear witness to their extraordinary energy and perseverance. From time to time they earnestly requested that Cautley's works on osteology might be sent out to them and expressed their disappointment when, from various accidents, three volumes failed to arrive. The delay perhaps, was fortuitous for being thrown entirely upon their own resources, they soon found a museum of comparative anatomy in the surrounding plains, hills, and jungles, where they slew the wild tigers, buffaloes, antelopes, and other Indian quadrupeds, of which they preserved the skeletons, besides obtaining specimens of all the genera of reptiles which inhabited that region. They were compelled to see and think for themselves while comparing and discriminating the different recent and fossil bones, and reasoning on the laws of comparative osteology, till at length they were fully prepared to appreciate the lessons which they were taught by the works of Cuvier. In the course of the labours they have ascertained the existence of the elephant, mastodon, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, ox, buffalo, elk, antelope, deer, and other herbivorous genera besides several canines and felino carnivora. On some of these Dr. Falconer and Captain Cautley have each written separate and independent memoirs, Captain Cautley, for example, is the author of an article in the Journal of the Asiatic Society, in which he shews, that two of the species of mastodon described by Mr. Cuvier, in fact, one, the supposed difference in character having been drawn from the teeth of the young and adult of the same species. I ought to remind you that this same gentleman was the discoverer in 1833, of the Indian Herculeanum or buried town near Behat, north of Saharunpore, which he found seven feet below the surface of the country when directing the excavation of the Doab Canal."

"But I ought more particularly to invite your attention to the joint paper by Dr. Falconer and Captain Cautley on the Sivatherrium, a new and extraordinary species of mammalia, which they have minutely described and figured, offering at the same time many profound speculations on its probable anatomical relations. The characters of this genus are drawn from a head almost complete, found at first enveloped in a mass of hard stone, which had lain as a boulder in a water-course, but after much labour the covering of stone was successfully removed, and the huge head now stands out with its two horns in relief, the nasal bones be projected in a free arch, and the molars on both sides of the jaw being singularly perfect. This in itself must have approached the elephant in size. The genus Sivatherium, say the authors, is the more interesting as helping to fill up the important blank which has always intervened between the ruminant and pachydermatous quadrupeds, for it combines the teeth and horns of a ruminant, with the hip, face, and probably proboscis of a pachyderm. They also observe, that the extinct mammoth-like genera of Cuvier were all confined to the Pachydermata and no remarkable deviation from existing types had been noticed by him among fossil ruminants where the Sivatherium holds a perfectly isolated position like the giraffe and the camels, being widely remote from any other type."

Resolved, that due acknowledgments be addressed to the Geological Society for their courtesy in entrusting the Asiatic Society with the honorary medals awarded to two of their associates, and that they be immediately forwarded with appropriate congratulations to Spharupai.

Report of the Committee of Papers on the Museum reference of the 6th Sept. 1837.

The questions submitted to our consideration on the present occasion is simply, how we may best dispose of the Government grant of 200 rupees per mensem (which it has been resolved to accept) towards the maintenance and improvement of the Society's museum? Whether a successor to Dr Pearson shall be appointed, or any other mode of superintendence adopted?

The following considerations have induced us to recommend that the curatorship shall not be filled up for the present.

The object that had accumulated in the museum prior to Dr Pearson's nomination having been once arrived at by him, there will evidently be little to employ success or, unless additions could be made on an enlarged scale through purchase or otherwise, for which sufficient funds do not exist.

On the other hand, by employing the money now granted us in purchasing and collecting specimens for the preservation of which our present establishment is sufficient, we shall in a year or two have amassed material to give full occupation to a professional superintendent, whom we may then appoint on our former scale should not the Government at home in the mean time place the museum on a more comprehensive footing. We therefore propose that the 200 rupees be carried to the general account, and that in consideration of this accession to our resources, opportunities be sought of adding to our museum by purchase, and of promoting physical or antiquarian research by such other means as may present themselves from time to time. We would in the mean time place the museum under a special committee of three annual members subject to re-election, as in the committee of Papers, and three ex-officio members, viz the vice president, the secretary and the librarian. We would further suggest—

That this committee should hold meetings at their rooms not less than once in the week; that their orders should be carried into effect, and their proceedings recorded by the Secretary as in the committee of Papers; and that all expenditure should require audit from the latter committee with exception of the ordinary contingent, which may be fixed at 100 rupees per mensem.

That this committee should give in an annual report of the progress of the museum, at the anniversary meeting in January, and that they should be entrusted with a general discretion for the disposal and exchange of duplicate specimens for the benefit of the museum.

For the committee of committee.

Asiatic Society's Rooms, 20th Sept. 1837. J. FARRER, Secretary.

Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Craicraft and resolved,

That the Report be adopted in all its provisions; and that three gentlemen be elected to act with the Secretary and Librarian as a Committee for superintending the museum.

Dr. Corbys spoke at some length in favor of renewing the curator's appointment. He concluded by moving the postponement of the question until a better meeting could be assembled, which was negatived.

It was then moved by the Secretary, seconded by Mr. Hare, and resolved, that Mr. William Craicraft, Dr. G. Evans, and Dr. McClelland, be requested to act as the museum committee.

Dr. Evans and Mr. Craicraft being present, signified their acceptance of the office.

Antiquities, Literature.

Major Pew forwarded the promised facsimile of the inscription on the broken Dathi Idol, now in Mr. Fraser's grounds.

Manaton Ommunney, Esq., C.S. forwarded a copy of a Sanskrit inscription on three plates deposited in a temple at Multaye, near the source of the Tapti river.

Dr. Alexander Burn, transmitted facsimiles of the contents of two copper-plates found in the town of Karna (Gujarat) in the same character as those deciphered by Mr. Wathen in 1835.

Boboo Conoyal Tagore sent for exhibition to the Society, a copper-plate in excellent preservation, lately dug up in the chur land of a Zemindaree belonging to him in pergunnah Idilpore within Bahergumy.

A letter was read from F. Church, Esq., dated Singapore, 15th August, 1837, presenting to the Society specimens of some ancient tin coins discovered up at that place.

Dr. T. Cantor presented some Scandinavian antiquities of copper and brass, a knife, an arrow head, pincers and a key.

The Rev. Dr. Mill presented two stone alabs for the museum, which had been last year brought to him from the west of India and the Red Sea by Captain Roche.

Mr. W. H. Wathen forwarded, on the part of Lieut. Potans, an account of the fine temple at Badranr, and the ruins of Badranagar in the province of Cutch, with a drawing of the image and plan of the temple.

Mr. T. Wilkinson brought to the Society's notice a translation of the elements of Euclid into Sanskrit in the time of Raja Siwat Jaya Singh, of Jaspur, in 1780, called the Rishia ganita.

Colonel Stacey drew attention to a calisthety presented by him from the Panjab, naming the type of the Indo-Syathic across with that of the Indo-Mussalmanic of Kashabad.

Mr. D. Liston transmitted two servitude bonds, obtained by cultivators in the Gorakhpur district, showing personal bondage to be there practiced openly at the present day.

Received from Lieutenant Kintee, 6th Regt., 1st Bengal, a manuscript journal kept by himself on a journey with his regiment to Kustuck, and then to the Road to the interior country.

Parasitæ

Mr. Secretary Mangels presented on the part of the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal, a copy of Dr. Richardson's journal of his last visit to the Snow Mountain in Mountmain, in two parts.

Mr. Jules Des Jârdins presented 7th Report and Resume of Meteorological observation made by the Natural History Society of the Mauritius.

Dr. W. Bland gave a note on Mr. Hodgson's description of the Nipal woodpeckers.

Colonel McLeod brought to the meeting several more fragments of fossil bone from the fort boring now at 423 feet. One a small caudal vertebra of a lacerta animal, the other testudine. The tanker pebbles and quartz and felspar gravel accompanying them are increasing in size and bear the appearance of having been rolled.

Mr. C. B. Greenlaw presented on the part Mr. Alford Bond, Master Attendant at Balesore, a series of tide registers at Bichamghara in full, for the year, 1834.

Read a letter from Dr. T. Cantor, presenting a catalogue of serpents and fish in the Society's museum.

Resolved, that especial thanks be returned to Dr. Cantor for the valuable service he has rendered to the Society in arranging and classifying these objects.

The Secretary obtained sanction for purchase of 31 objects of natural history prepared by Mr. Monteiro and varnish, at 81 rupees.

Mr Shaw, 3rd officer of the Ernaad, presented a tetradon, remora, and some insects from the Persian Gulf.

Dr. McCosh presented the skeleton of a Tapir, which he had commissioned from Malacca.

The skeleton had unfortunately been ruined by an unskillful hand, the whole animal having been chopped up butcher-wise to be packed in a cask, in spirits, but the head and some bones were uninjured.

Read the following letter from Lieut. Thomas Hutton, 25th N. I. dated Simla, 27th August and 4th September.

Simla, 27th August, 1837

Sir,—At a time when the attention of the scientific bodies of Europe, is turned to the valuable discoveries of our fossilists in the Sub-Himalayan ranges, it may not be thought impertinent in me, to suggest that the discovery made some years since by the late Dr. Gerard in the Spiti valley, and other places in the interior of these mountains might advantageously be followed up, by farther and more complete research.

Little, save the existence of these fossil beds, has hitherto been noted, and the rigorous climates which they are found in, renders it more than probable that few, if any subsequent travellers will be inclined to venture into these inaccessible regions, when the thermometer, in the month of October, stood in the morning, (as noted in the Dr.'s memoranda), at 10°, 15°, and even 10°.

Through the liberality of Captain P. Gerard residing at Simla, I have had an opportunity of perusing the Dr.'s memoranda, and am of opinion that research in the localities he alludes to, would give to science some valuable additional information on the subject of these interesting deposits of the antediluvian world.

Subsequent to Dr. Gerard's discovery, and wholly dependent on that gentleman for his information, M. Jacquemont, I believe, visited the valley of the Spiti, but whether he succeeded in penetrating to the fossil locality, or was deterred by the rigours of the climate, is unknown.

I shall we, however, allow the riches of our dominion to be brought to light and raised by foreign Societies.

They send out travellers to glean in the cause of science through every clime, while we alone, the richest nation of them all, sit idly by and watch their progress.

I had contemplated an expedition to Spiti, this year, but, straitened circumstances and family affairs, have obliged me with reluctance to relinquish the undertaking.

Should the society deem the Dr.'s discovery worthy of being followed up, I would humbly offer, under their patronage, to undertake the trip, the expenses of which if necessary, I would gladly share.

In those climates, the best, and I may say only, season for successful research would be during the summer months, i. e. from May until the end of September or October, and I should calculate the monthly cost at about one hundred and fifty rupees (150 Rs.)

Dr. Gerard notes the bed of marine fossils, or solid shell rock to be no less than one mile in depth, while loose fossils of various species were lying about on the summits of the ridges at an altitude of 10,000 feet above the sea.

He had, at the time of this discovery, no leisure to prosecute research, as the season was too far advanced, and his health too much impaired to admit of his exposing himself longer to the bitter cold which was fast settling in, nor did the Dr.'s pursuits or knowledge of the subject permit his making the most of the discovery.

Other branches of the Natural History of these Hills, might at the same time be pursued with advantages, and according to the Dr.'s memoranda, there are many objects of value and interest in this department to be met with.

Should the society be inclined to lend a favorable ear to my suggestion, nothing would be requisite but the permission of the Governor-General for my being appointed to the undertaking, and from the anxiety His Lordship has ever shown, to forward scientific research, little doubt need be entertained as to the result, if solicited in that effect by the Asiatic Society.

I have broached the subject thus early in order that every preparation may be made for the successful accomplishment of the undertaking.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

THOMAS HUTTON, Lt. 37th Regt. N. I.

To JAMES PRINSEP, Esq., Sec. As. Sec.

Resolved, that the society feels much indebted to Lieut. Hutton for his disinterested proposal and will derive great pleasure in furthering him for the thorough explanation of the Spiti valley, and the neighbouring regions of the Himalaya, by placing one thousand rupees at his disposal for this object, provided he is enabled to prosecute the journey; and on the conditions suggested by himself, that the objects of natural history, recent and fossil, collected in the trip, shall be deposited in the society's museum.

Monsieur Fontanier, French Consul at Buxtehde, forwarded under charge of Capt. Esler, Ship John Adam, various objects of natural history, from the Persian Gulf.

1. Mineral specimens from the island of Orma, consisting of gneiss, granite, ferruginous and calcareous sandstone and marlstones.

2. Zoophytes and sponges of several species, from Bussora, also a curious Didymopora (Didymopora tiketika) with a note descriptive of them.

Mr. D. MacLeod presented a series of rock specimens from the Sutpara range commencing with Sooty Chert; the specimens are numbered with reference to a map of the district accompanying.

Dr. MacClelland exhibited a descriptive catalogue of the zoological specimens collected by himself in the late tour in Assam, together with copies of his anthropological drawings, of which the original about 180 in number, have been transmitted through Government to the Hon'ble Court of Directors.

The fossils presented by Mr. W. D. D. of the North Canal Establishment, had arrived and were much admired. — Calcutta Courier, November 25.

CIVIL FUND MEETING.

At a Quarterly General Meeting of the Subscribers to the Civil Fund, holden at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 30th day of October, 1837.

Present—Messrs. H. T. Prinsep, W. Braddon, Crockett, Walters, McFarlan, Millett, McClintock, French, F. J. Harvey, Tucker, J. P. Grant, W. W. Bird, and J. T. M. Reid.

Read the Proceedings of the last Quarterly Meeting.

Resolved,—That the Proceedings be confirmed.

The Secretary laid before the Meeting the Quarterly Statement of Receipts and Disbursements of the Civil Fund.

Read an application from Miss Tilghman on behalf of the five children of her brother the late Mr. R. M. Tilghman, also a statement of the case by Mr. W. W. Bird, one of the Executors to the Estate of the late Mr. Tilghman.

Proposed by Mr. W. W. Bird, that the Estate of Mr. Tilghman be computed for the purpose of estimating whether the children are entitled to assistance from the Fund, at the rate of income derived from it at present as invested by the Executor in the Funds of England and India, Rule 46 not being applicable to the case of children.

Seconded by Mr. Walters.

Amended by Mr. Millett, seconded by Mr. Grant.

That the income of the Children derivable from the Estate of the late Mr. Tilghman be calculated on the principle laid down in Article 46 of the Rules for the calculation of the income of widows, there being no other rule for the calculation of income derivable from capital.

This Amendment being put to the vote,—the Ayes were four. Noes six.

A second Amendment was then proposed by Mr. Grant, seconded by Mr. Tucker—

That the income of the children be computed upon the invested funds of the Estate at the rate yielded by them at the time of Mr. Tilghman's decease.

Ayes seven.—Noes four.

A third Amendment proposed by Mr. T. J. Harvey, viz.

That the income be computed at the rate which the funds would at this moment yield if invested in the public funds in India, the amount at the date of decease being continued on by re-investment of stock of loans discharged, instead of allowing a lower rate of interest for the portion of the Estate remitted to England, was not seconded.

Resolved,—That as there are not nine concurrent votes on any of the above propositions, the questions be submitted to the next quarterly meeting.—Mr. Bird's Statement of Mr. Tilghman's case being included in the proceedings.

Resolved,—That as the case of the family of the Hon'ble Mr. F. J. Shore, on the same precise point, viz. the mode of computing the assets of a deceased subscriber, the determination of it be suspended until the decision of the above questions be known.

H. T. PRINSEP, Chairman.

MADRAS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Second Half Yearly Report of the Committee of the Madras Chamber of Commerce read at a General Quarterly Meeting of the Chamber on Monday, the 18th October, 1837.

The Committee follow up their proceedings from the date of their last report which was laid before an all-journed Quarterly Meeting on the 13th April.

The progress of the several questions that formed the subjects of that report and were at that time pending is briefly as follows.

Sugar Duties bill.—On this subject the Committee have received a letter from the Secretary to the London East India and China Association, stating, that, copy of the petition of the Chamber had been forwarded to the Chancellor of the Exchequer with a letter from the association and that the petition had been placed in the hands of Mr. Grote, Member of Parliament for the City of London, for presentation. The Committee observe by the public papers that the petition was presented to the House of Commons by that gentleman on the 27th May; they learn also from the same source, that in a Committee of ways and means about the end of June, the Chancellor of the Exchequer advanced to the House some entertained by the Madras and Bombay Associations that the provisions of the Sugar Bill should be extended to them, in proposing a resolution for the continuance of the existing Sugar Duties for the ensuing years, which was agreed to. This need not, however, preclude the just claim of the presidency being taken into consideration and the prayer of the petition complied with in the ensuing session, if the subject is kept alive, as the Committee trust it may be, through the exertions of the East India Association, whose attention has been called to the petition in a late letter.

Opium.—The Chamber will remember the position in which this subject was left at the last half yearly Meeting, that the Government of India had declined to comply with the application of the Committee for an extension to this presidency of the privileges enjoyed by Bengal and Bombay, and that the Committee were instructed to take such further measures as they might think advisable and best calculated to carry their point. The only course open to the Committee to pursue was, to endeavour to place the matter before the Honorable the Court of Directors in as forcible a light as possible, and they saw no means of doing this more effectually than by respectfully requesting the Government to bring their former application with such of the correspondence as might be necessary, prominently to the notice of the Court; and by placing the whole of the correspondence in the hands of the East India and China Association, with the request that they would give the weight of their influence and exertions to the claim in such manner as they might deem expedient.

Warehousing Act.—It will not be necessary to remind the Chamber that previously to the date of their last Report, the Committee had addressed the Collector of Sea Customs on this subject, expressing their opinion that the introduction of the act with the clause providing for a reserved duty, or on any other footing than that of a free bonding system, would be nugatory. They have not received an official reply to this communication, but they are aware that the Collector, concurring in the views of the Committee, represented the subject to Government and recommended that the wishes of the Committee should be complied with, by exempting from duty all foreign goods imported in bond on re-exportation. In this form the subject, as the Committee understand, was referred to the Supreme Government. The introduction of the act in its original form, only a few weeks since, is the only intimation they have had of the result of that reference. It is to be apprehended, therefore, that the Committee's request for an extension of the operation of the act and the establishment of a free system, has for the present at least been set aside, and an instance brought to the notice of the Committee of its practical operation, shews that their reasonable request supported by the recommendation of the local authorities, has been altogether unheeded. It will therefore be incumbent on the Committee you may this day appoint to take up the subject again and endeavour with vigour to effect an object so obviously desirable for the interests of the port and Government of Madras.

Post Office.—The Committee have to congratulate the Chamber on the passing of the new Post Office Act, since the period of their last report, and on the manner in which the convenience of the public and especially of the mercantile community is met by that act.

Among the matters referred to in the Committee's last report, it will be remembered, was a recommendation to the Post Office Committee that ship letters on export should be charged two annas instead of four, and that all letters of moderate weight should be charged at that rate. The Committee have much satisfaction in finding that a provision to this effect has been introduced into the act; all letters up to three tolas weight being charged at two annas each.

Another subject referred to in the Committee's report, was the means of expediting the dak between Madras and Calcutta. Such general suggestions as the want of specific information on a variety of points, enabled the Committee to afford, were offered to Government; and more detailed information requested at their hands. The Committee were informed in reply, that the subject had frequently had the attention of the local Government, and was then under the consideration of the Post Office Committee; and also that the Government had in contemplation a practical experiment on the western road, which would determine the rate and expense at which the mails might be conveyed by horses or carts, and thus the Committee's suggestions have for the present been disposed of.

The Currency.—The assimilation of the Currency at the three presidencies formed an early subject of the Committee's deliberations, and the course they had adopted for this object, was mentioned in their last Report. They subsequently addressed a letter to the Government of India, submitting for their consideration the expediency of recalling the promissory notes of Government now outstanding, and expressed in sicca rupees. In reply they were informed, that objection existed having reference to the original terms of the different loans which precluded the adoption of the course suggested by the Committee. The Accountant-General in Bengal made no difficulty in acceding to the Committee's request that the fee for renewal of bonds should be changed from one sicca to one Company's rupee, and the change is now in operation. The Government were addressed in May last respecting the inconvenience arising from the want of small coins and the absence of the new Company's rupee. Their reply stated that the mint had been prepared for the execution of a copper coinage (which has since been abundantly issued) and that a remittance in Company's new rupees had lately been received from Calcutta. The latter coin, however, is not yet in that free circulation that the commercial interests require, and the Committee recommended that the subject may be prosecuted until a further supply and free circulation of that coinage as well of the smaller silver coins is attained.

Transit Duties.—The Chamber are aware, from the last report, that the Committee left this important subject in abeyance, (although disposed to take it up with their best exertions) in consequence of the representation that the Board of Revenue had the matter under consideration and intended to communicate with the Committee when they had fully considered the subject. No communication has been received from that Board, or from Government, and the Chamber are aware that a partial measure has been adopted, by which some few articles have been relieved from the duty, but which leaves the impost on the most important articles of commerce, and which is therefore by no means such a measure of relief as to satisfy the wants, and as it will now conclusively appear, the just rights of this presidency; for Bombay has lately obtained the same relief that has been granted to the provinces of Bengal and Agra; and thus to leave the burthen exclusively on this presidency. The petition of the Bombay Chamber to the Supreme Government, which the Committee were instructed to support by every means in their power at the General Meeting in April last, contained a reference to the town and transit duties and prayed for their abolition, and was supported by the Committee in a letter to the Supreme Government bearing date the 14th April. A copy of the reply to that petition was furnished to the Committee, and that reply admitted in general terms the vexatious nature of the duties, the advantage to the population that would be derived from their repeal, and the probability that the loss of public revenue would eventually be more than replaced by improvements in the general resources of the country. It admitted, moreover, that the Madras presidency must have felt the burthen to a more vexatious and oppressive extent than either Bengal or Bombay. There was, not, however, the smallest intimation of any specific intentions on the part of the Government for the repeal of the duties, although it was stated that the views of the Government of India, and the report of the Committee of Customs, had been referred to the Government of Madras; with what effect the Committee have not learnt, unless the late imperfect measure of repeal can be taken as the result of that reference. Under all circumstances the Committee have thought it right to make these duties the subject of a formal representation to the Court of Directors in a memorial, which it will be necessary to refer to at more length in another place.

Steam Communication.

The Committee were in frequent communication with the Bombay and Bengal Chambers on the subject of the arrangements under this head, during the period that the communication was irregular; but it is unnecessary to detail the particulars of their correspondence since the establishment of a regular monthly communication has been recently ordered, and will, it is hoped, henceforward continue in active operation. There is one point, however, connected with the steam question, which has occupied their attention and has only become the more important in consequence of the establishment of a regular communication, and the confinement of that communication to the port of Bombay. The Committee allude to the subject of expresses. They some time since wrote to the Bombay Chamber, requesting the favour of their assistance for the purpose of putting a stop to the inconvenience experienced by all classes, in consequence of a portion only of the overland mails received at Bombay for transmission to Madras, being forwarded by express, the remainder being left to come on by the regular dak; and this without reference, as it appeared to the Committee, to any fixed principle of arrangement. The Committee requested the Bombay Chamber to use their influence to get the whole of the Madras packets forwarded by express, additional runners being laid for the purpose; their reply stated, that a set of runners for expresses was constantly kept up, and that additional runners could not be employed without great expense; which, during the uncertainty that then existed in the arrival of overland mails, the Government did not think it right to incur; at the same time, it was stated, that when a regular plan was laid arrangements would be made to meet the wishes of the Committee, and they trust, that such will be found to be in operation on the arrival of the next mail. On the other hand the establishment of a regular communication made the Committee alive to the advantage that would result from that communication being at all times open to the last hour, and they addressed the Madras Government with the request, that arrangements might be made that would give the community an opportunity of sending their letters by express, which should be dispatched to Bombay at the latest possible period; mentioning at the same time, the express that is usually forwarded with the dispatches of Government, and which, it was presumed, might under certain arrangements be opened to the public. The Government declined to comply with the Committee's request, on the ground that the express mail could only carry a limited number of letters and that the public would have cause to complain if a portion only of the community enjoyed the accommodation.

The Committee respectfully repeated their solicitation and suggested that if Government were unable to make arrangements by which the whole of the community might have the benefit of expresses, although such a plan appeared to them both practicable and free from any great expense, the merchantile community at least

(their correspondence being of a peculiar and usually urgent nature) might be permitted to enjoy that advantage; and finally requested, that if the local Government could do nothing to meet their wishes, the subject might be submitted to the Government of India, and to the latter it has been accordingly referred. The Committee have requested the Bengal Chamber to use every exertion to carry this point, and their reply is shortly expected.

Roads.—The Committee beg to recall to the Chamber's recollection, a resolution passed at their Quarterly Meeting in April last upon a letter from the chairman of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, enclosing resolutions of that Chamber, to the effect that a petition should be forwarded to the Supreme Government, praying for the abolition of the transit duties in that presidency, and that a fixed sum might be annually set aside from the revenues of the country for the purpose of improvements in the roads.

The Committee were authorized to support the Bombay petition in the strongest manner and the Chamber pledged themselves in the event of the application proving unsuccessful to use every means in their power to obtain the fulfilment of their wishes by an appeal to the proper authorities at home.

The petition of the Bombay Chamber was strongly supported in a letter to the Supreme Government referred to above under the head of transit duties. The reply given to the application respecting the appropriation of a part of the revenues to the purpose of improvements, was simply that the subject must be referred to the Court of Directors, and that it had been so referred.

The result of this reply was, the proposal by the Bombay Chamber of a petition to be addressed to the House of Commons, praying that those provisions of the late charter act which took away from the Governments of Madras and Bombay the independent powers exercised by them previously to the passing of that act, might be repealed. This petition has been adopted by the Chamber and forwarded to the Bombay Chamber for transmission overland in company with their own petition to the same effect. A memorial has also been drawn up by the Committee addressed to the Court of Directors, in which, besides a prayer for the entire abolition of the transit duties, the above proposal for the application of a fixed annual sum for the construction of roads, is strongly recommended to their notice, and the restoration of their former powers to the Governments of Madras and Bombay earnestly prayed for. This memorial, which will now be read to you the Committee strongly recommend for your adoption in pursuance of the course resolved upon at the General Meeting above referred to. In the event of your adopting this memorial, it should be forwarded to the Government of Madras with the request that they will be pleased to transmit it to the Court of Directors with their favorable recommendation.

Experimental Farm.—The Committee have been in communication with Doctor Wight of the Madras Establishment, who has been appointed by Government to enquire into and report upon the capabilities of the country for the production of several objects of commercial importance, on the subject of an Experimental Farm, to be established in some convenient locality, where the capabilities of the soil for agricultural purposes, under efficient management and with the advantages of European skill and tools, might be practically tested. The Committee have not yet been able to come to any conclusive measure in respect to this question, but they beg to draw the particular attention of the Chamber to the able communications of Doctor Wight, which are now upon the table and which it is proposed to publish, together with such other documents as may be worth printing in an appendix to the report.

GOSPEL SOCIETY—DIOCESAN COMMITTEE.

At a special General Meeting of the Madras D. C. of the Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel on 6th Oct. 1837:

The Archdeacon of Madras, V. P., in the chair.

It was resolved,—

1. That this meeting, before proceeding to any other business, feel themselves called on to record with deep sorrow the sudden and untimely death of their late esteemed Secretary, the Reverend F. J. Darrah, M. A.

At a moment when he was on the eve of retiring from an office, the duties of which he had discharged with great zeal, ability, and faithfulness, the Committee have been deprived by the Divine dispensation, of the pleasure they would have felt in rendering him that tribute of respect and gratitude, which, in accordance with a notice on the books, it was their intention to have offered. They can now only have the melancholy satisfaction of thus recording their sense of the many and valuable services rendered to the S. P. G. F. P. by their late much lamented Secretary.

2. That the foregoing expression of the Committee's sentiments be communicated to the family of the deceased with the Committee's sincere condolence on the calamity, and that it be also brought to the especial notice of the Parent Society.

The Venerable the Vice President having requested the Reverend A. C. Thomson to assume charge of the Secretaryship in compliance with the vote of 25th July last, it was resolved—

3. That a Select Committee, consisting of the Bishop, the Archdeacon, all Chaplains of the Church of England at the presidency being Subscribing Members of the Committee, and four other Members, be appointed to transact the business of the Committee, who shall meet the Secretary for that purpose on the last Tuesday in every month, and as often as they may be convened by the President, Vice President, or Secretary.

4. That any three of the said Committee together with the Secretary, so assembled, shall be competent to act, that they shall pass all accounts, and that all orders up on the Treasurers shall be signed by the Secretary, and countersigned by two Members of the Select Committee.

5. That the foregoing law shall be without prejudice to the existing members of the said Committee.

6. (Moved by the Rev. G. Trevor, seconded by P. Cator, Esq., and carried unanimously.)

That, with a view of securing to the poor of the Vepery Mission congregations the full extent of the benefits now derivable to them from the bequests of the late Mr. Genicke and Mr. Falcke, this Committee do recommend to the Christian Knowledge Committee, that a number not exceeding 17 of poor boys under the age of 14, to be nominated by the Select Committee of the M. D. C. S. P. G. F. P. on the recommendation of the missionaries, be maintained and educated in the school gratis, the expence consequent on such arrangement to be borne by this Committee.—Madras, Thursday Budget, October 19.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY.

About a hundred and fifty Scotch and other gentlemen, assembled at the Town Hall, on the 30th ultimo, to celebrate the anniversary of St. Andrew's Day by a festival. His Royal Highness, Prince William Frederick Hendrick, of Holland, and the Officers of the Bellona, graced the assembly with their presence. The following gentlemen were Chairman, Croupier and Stewards on the occasion:—

Chairman.—W. P. Grant, Esq. Croupier.—Col. D. McLeod.

Stewards.—J. F. Leith, Esq.; J. P. Grant Esq.; Col. D. McLeod; Col. Jas. Young; W. P. Grant, Esq.; Wm. Storm, Esq.; R. S. Thomson, Esq.; Capt. W. N. Forbes; Capt. Jas. Thomson; H. M. Low, Esq.; John Allan, Esq.; Alexr. Colvin, Esq.; Robt. Davidson, Esq.; Edwd. Whyte, Esq.; and A. H. Sim, Esq.

The wines and viands did credit to Messrs Spence and Co., and whiskey and haggies, were plentifully provided. At half past seven P. M. the party sat down to dinner and on the cloth being removed, the Chairman said,

Gentlemen,—the first duty we owe to our country, is to express our gratitude to the Government under which we live, and to our sovereign, who especially commands our respect and veneration. This is the first occasion of this kind in this part of her dominions, since the accession of her Majesty to the throne, on which we have met to express our feelings of respect and loyalty. Esteem and reverence, and all that can be said of our attachment to her, are terms by far too cold for the expression of our feelings, in wishing long life to Queen Victoria. These feelings, which we inherit from our Saxon ancestors, we should exhibit with more than usual warmth on the present occasion. It is not only a feeling of respect and loyalty, but a chivalrous feeling, which pervades us while drinking to our young and amiable Queen, who has been suddenly launched in a glorious and not undangerous career. Gentlemen, long life and happiness to our amiable and youthful Queen, whom we will unite to protect to our last hour. Deafening cheers. Air—"God save the Queen."

Chairman.—Gentlemen—I have now to call your attention to another toast, which on the present day, most concerns you, and which has been observed among us from the earliest times to the present day: I mean the pious memory of St. Andrew, who came to Scotland, from a distant land, when our country was in a state of barbarism, and the whole world nearly sunk in ignorance and darkness, to instruct and enlighten our ancestors, in religion and morality, by his own bright example. I have, gentlemen, to propose to you the pious memory of St. Andrew. Drink in solemn silence. Air—"Caledonia."

Chairman.—Gentlemen,—I have to give you another toast, in which all who have done us the honor to be our guests on the present occasion, will, I feel certain, most cordially join and drink with as great enthusiasm as ourselves—the land of cakes. (Cheers.) To explain this to Scotchmen would be supererogatory; to attempt to explain it to Englishmen, who do not enter into our peculiar national feelings, would be useless: I therefore, gentlemen, without further preface, give you the land of cakes. Drank with much cheering. Air, "Auld Lang Syne."

Chairman.—Gentlemen,—the toast I am now about to give you, I am sure will be drank with all the honors. It is the worthy head of this government—the Governor-General of India. Cheers. Air, "Over the hills and far away."

Chairman.—Gentlemen,—I beg to give you next that, without the aid of which we would have had no Government here. Gentlemen, I propose the Navy of England, with all the honors. Drank with deafening cheers. Air—"Rule Britannia."

Captain Blake, of her Majesty's ship Larne.—Gentlemen,—it is a pity, and I regret very much, that the duty of returning thanks for the Navy has not fallen into better hands than mine. I am not much of a Scotchman—indeed no body would suspect me of being one, and as a stranger here, I felt glad at being invited; and I have met with that hospitality from you, which I shall never forget. Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking, yet I feel it to be my duty to express my sentiments on this occasion of so handsome a compliment being paid to the British Navy. I assure you, Gentlemen, that I feel most strongly the honor done me and the service to which I be on; but being, as I have said, unused to speak in public, I cannot in an adequate manner give utterance to my feelings; I must, therefore, conclude, with drinking all your very good healths. Cheers.

Chairman.—Gentlemen,—I beg to give, with all the honors, the other branch of our forces, to which we owe so much,—the Army. Loud Cheers. Air, "The British Grenadiers."

Chairman.—Gentlemen,—I have now to request, that you will fill your glasses to a special bumper. Gentlemen, I propose that we should drink the health of our illustrious guest His Royal Highness, Prince William Frederick Hendrick, of Holland, who has done us the honor—attending on this occasion. (Deafening cheers.) We owe much to the family from which he is descended, and any person coming among us from the family of Holland, we have great reason to respect. As Englishmen, we must ever be proud to show our gratitude to them. I have, therefore, gentlemen, the honor to give you the health of this Royal Highness and the family from which he is descended.

The Prince, in a low tone of voice, returned thanks for himself and his family; and expressed his regret at being unable to express himself in suitable terms.

Mr. J. F. Leith next rose and said:—Gentlemen, I have been requested to propose the next toast, which is one that will carry us back in mind to the early period of our National History, so full of poetry and melancholy romance, when our country was without a king or a governor for the space of nine years, and when our brave ancestors fought and bled on many a memorable field to bequeath to their children that blessing which we are now enjoying—"For," as was then said by our lords and nobles, "it was not glory, it was not riches, neither was it honour, but it was liberty alone, that they fought and contended for—which no honest man will lose but with his life." (Cheers.) Gentlemen, among these the names of William Wallace and Robert Bruce, the subjects of our toast, stand prominently forward. Their names and their deeds of noble daring, are as familiar to us as household words; they are recorded in the page of history, they are interwoven with our legends and our ballads, and the memories of Wallace and Bruce are embalmed in the heart of every Scotchman. Our infant lips were taught in nursery tales to lisp their names, while our minds dwell with delighted wonder on the almost super-human powers and achievements of these great men. In our maturer years we revere them in proportion as we understand and appreciate the obstacles they had to overcome—as men who asserted, fought for, and established the independence of our native land. (Cheers.) And we still wonder how they, stepping in advance of their countrymen, and the age in which they lived, could, with almost unassisted energies, keep together and lead to victory, the undisciplined and poverty-stricken, army which they had to mould, torn and distracted as it was with intestine feuds and heart-burning jealousies, against the bravery and chivalry of civilized England. Gentlemen, this proves, if proof were necessary, that "there are no true sinews of war, but the sinews of the arms of valient men." (Loud Cheers.) To our English guests, I deem no apology necessary for our dwelling so long on the part of our separate history, for they are too far removed by time from the scene of action, to experience any other feelings on this occasion, than those of wonder and admiration in common with ourselves—now happily united to them as one people—at the inborn greatness and nobleness of soul of a Wallace and a Bruce, whose memories will be revered and honored in every country and among every people, where patriotism, liberty and national independence are cherished as something more than empty names. (Cheers) Let us drink to the memories of those two, pillars of Scotland, William Wallace and Robert Bruce (Loud and repeated cheers.)

Mr. R. Scott Thomson, sang "Scots wha hae wi Wallace bled" in a very feeling manner, accompanied by the band.

Chairman.—Gentlemen,—the next toast I have to give you, is that of a gentleman who, but for severe indisposition, would have been among you to night. Indeed up to a late hour this afternoon he fully intended to be here, but was prevented by sudden illness. I have the honor to give you, gentlemen, the President in Council. Drank with cheers. Air, "Is there for honest poverty."

Chairman.—Allow me, gentlemen, to propose to you the health of a gentleman not entirely unknown in the circles of Calcutta, and whom, I regret to say, we are about soon to lose from among us. I propose long life, health and happiness to Col. Rehling, the Governor of Serampore. (Cheers.)

Col. Rehling returned thanks.

Chairman.—Gentlemen,—I am sorry to observe signs of insubordination among my colleagues to night; other wise I would not have kept you waiting so long without a glass of wine. I have now to propose to you, what I, as a Scotchman, never fail to drink with all my heart. I give you, in a bumper, the Kirk of Scotland. Cheers Air, "My ain kind dearie O."

The Croupier gave the civil Service, but we could not catch a word of his brief speech. Air—"Todin hame."

II. T. Prinsep, Esq.—I do not know whether I am the proper person to return thanks for the civil service, to which I have the honor to belong, nor indeed can I say, as from this situation I cannot command the whole table, whether there is a senior present. But rather than that no body should return thanks, I cheerfully impose that duty on myself, though I am sure there are many here more capable of doing justice to it. I know of no reason why you should love the civil service, but that you have many of the sons of St. Andrew in that service, and in it they have risen to the top and signalized themselves. I will therefore conclude, by returning you their thanks as well as my own.

Mr. Cochrane.—It falls to my lot, Mr. Chairman, to propose the memory of Walter Scott; a name deservedly most dear to us all, were it only for the honor he has done to the literature of our land. There is not, I will venture, Sir, to affirm, in any author, pages where virtue dwells more unsullied than throughout his own. He has pursued the noblest means of inculcating the principles of humanity by appealing to the predilections and the feelings of his countrymen. His works—the monuments of intellectual power—reflect not honor alone on the memory of him dead, but add lustre to the living, and cast a glory on our common country. Cheers. Who is there amidst assembled nations that would not be proud of such a man? Trophies and monuments alike decay and crumble into dust; but the productions of this man's genius will stand out from the wreck of time—immortal. Loud cheers.

The whole earth, said the noble Athenian in other days, is the sepulchre of illustrious men; and it is not the inscription or the marble on their tombs that perpetuates their memories, but the recorded recollection of all men in all countries. Such sentiments, Sir, are not only just, but in truth, prophetic, and as long as the Scottish name or nation shall exist—as long as virtue and intelligence reign in that land where freedom has fixed her throne—the sacred soil of Britain—shall the memory of this man, in common with those you have this night commemorated, live in remembrance—eternal. And with justice will it be so, for genius and public liberty flourish and die together. Indeed, were it not deemed too bold an assertion, I might venture to declare, that the last misfortune that could befall a land, would be the loss of the reverence of genius and public virtue. In such sentiments, I mean in the love of all, that is great or noble, our countrymen, and, indeed, the whole British Empire, have been ever distinguished. It is this, that has contributed to the grandeur and the glory of our land. It is this that will maintain it. Cheers. Entertaining, therefore, as I know ye do, such feelings in common with your countrymen, I now call upon you, amid the silence of all that reigns around me, to fill your glasses while in all reverence I propose what in commencing I named—The memory of Walter Scott. Drank in solemn silence—Air “The land of the Leal.”

Croupier.—Gentlemen,—I give you the health of Sir John Peter Grant and the Chief Justice of Calcutta.

Sir Edward Ryan.—Gentlemen, I return you my best thanks on behalf of Sir John Peter Grant, who is prevented by adverse winds and tides, over which we have no control, from being present here. I believe he greatly regrets his absence from you, and I am sure you do not regret it the less. (Cheers).

Mr. Leith rose and said.—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen,—I will not say that there has been treason, but I will say that there has been insubordination in the camp; for I have just this moment been informed that one of our worthy Stewards, and a particular friend of mine, who shall be nameless, but whom I have now in my eye (laughter), has insisted upon being relieved of the duty assigned to him of giving the next toast. This I regret for your sakes, gentlemen, as I have been compelled to become his substitute. Fortunately, however, for me, your sympathies have been long since drawn towards the subject of my toast, and it is one most appropriate for this our national festival, for none of the heroes of whom honorable mention has been made this evening, or any of our statesmen, reflect more honor upon Scotland than Robert Burns—the Peasant Poet, who amid poverty, untoward fortune and cold and heartless neglect, exhibited the true nobility of nature. To describe, even had I the talent, the beauties of his poetry, or the influence which it has had and still preserves, wherever it is read, is an unnecessary task, and would be but to weaken early impressions made by the force and beauty of his poetry on your hearts and which must be ever dearly cherished. (loud cheers). I shall, without further preface, give you, the Memory of Robert Burns the poet of Scotland, our own poet. Drank in solemn silence. Air, “The Flowers of the Forest.”

Sir E. Ryan.—Gentlemen,—I am about to propose a toast to which I am sure you will all drink a bumper. I regret exceedingly that Sir J. P. Grant is not here to-night; but in his absence I am glad to see the chair, which he would have otherwise filled, so well accupied by his son on this occasion. I propose the health of Sir J. P. Grant.

(Here the pipers went three times round the room playing the Rothiemurcus Rant.)

The Chairman.—Sir Edward Ryan and Gentlemen,—I should be to blame if, after the handsome manner in which you have drank to my father, I did not return you my sincere and heartfelt thanks. The instruments that you hear may to some strangers appear as uncouth sounds; but to the ear of Scotchmen who understand them, they create a feeling beyond expression. They rouse in my heart emotions, greater than I think I may trust myself in expressing. Gentlemen, I return you and Sir Edward Ryan sincere thanks, for my father and myself, for the honor you have done us. Cheers.

Chairman.—There is, gentlemen, another toast on the list, which I am sure you will all drink with cordiality. It is a body in Calcutta whose health has not yet been drank to-night, but who are worthy of remembrance on all such occasions of conviviality—I mean the Commercial community of Calcutta. Cheers. Air, “Money in both pockets.”

The Prince of Holland at this time—half past ten o'clock, left the table, and was attended to his conveyance by the Chairman and many other gentlemen of distinction.

Croupier.—Gentlemen,—I beg to propose to you the health of our worthy Chairman during his absence. Drank with cheers.

Mr. Allen.—Gentlemen,—I return you thanks for the Commercial community of Calcutta, who, I am sure, will feel grateful for the handsome compliment paid to them, and, I hope, ever deserve the esteem of the community of Calcutta.

The Chairman.—It has been just intimated to me, that during my absence, in consequence of the duty I had to perform, you have, gentlemen, contrary to all rule, done me the honor to drink my health, and, therefore, instead of, on my return, drinking wine to wet my throat, I am obliged to try it still further by speaking. I who know so little of Calcutta, have to preside at a meeting of Calcutta gentlemen; but though I am a stranger in Calcutta, I am not so among Scotchmen, and I will say, that I can manage to keep the good fellow-feeling of Scotland among them. I am sure you all have that feeling, in which I will drink a full bumper. The best way to inform one whose health has been drank in his absence, is to fill his glass to the brim; but here the bottle even, has been so drained, that I cannot squeeze a bumper out of it (laughter). Gentlemen, I return you my thanks for the compliment you have paid to me during my absence.

The Chairman.—There are yet, gentlemen, some toasts on the list, and the next one I have to propose, is one you would be sorry to pass over. It is that of my friend Mr. Charles Prinsep and our English guests, with all due honors. Cheers. Air, "Roast beef of old England."

Mr. Prinsep.—Gentlemen,—I am quite at a loss to know why I should have been singled out by my worthy friend as the representative of the English, when there are so many here who can better represent that nation. As the two sister kingdoms have now for ages been united in the closest bonds of friendship, it is scarcely necessary to pay us this separate compliment. We should rather drink to our foreign guests, some of whom are now seated besides me—I mean those gentlemen who came with our illustrious guest, and to whom we should shew courtesy. It was to Holland that we first looked for religious and civil liberty at a time when England was in little better than a state of slavery. I do look to that country as the one which set us the example of liberty. The kingdom of Holland, gentlemen, that kingdom from which our guests have arrived. I give you our foreign visitors from the kingdom of our ancient ally. Cheers.

Lieutenant Hope, of H. N. M. S. Bellona.—Gentlemen,—I cannot make to you a speech in your language; but I can say to you, that myself and all my brother officers, wish to England, Scotland, and Ireland united, all happiness and prosperity. Much cheering.

The chairman.—Gentlemen,—I am quite sure you will believe me when I tell you, that I singled out my friend Mr. Prinsep in order to bring him out from his lurking corner; which I did by a poke in his ribs, and I am glad to perceive it has had its full effect.

The Croupier.—Gentlemen,—I beg to propose to you the Members of the Calcutta Bar, whether English, Irish, or Scotch. Cheers.

Mr. Prinsep.—The gentlemen of our profession, you know, are men of but few words. The leader of our bar, who has the greatest command of words, and who has always been the foremost in promoting the interests of this community, is now absent from Calcutta. I wish he were here—I am sure he would have done ample justice to the duty now imposed on me, of returning thanks for the bar. Allow me, gentlemen, to drink to St. Andrew, most devoutly praying that he may keep his sons in the enjoyment of every happiness. Cheers.

The Chairman.—I have but one more toast to propose, which I am sure you will appreciate. I beg to propose the healths of Mr. Curmin and our Irish guests. That gentleman has, it is well known, at very considerable personal sacrifice, taken much trouble for the benefit not only of the army but the people of India at large. There is no man whom I love and esteem more.—I therefore give Mr. Curmin and our Irish guests.

Mr. Curmin returned thanks, hoping he would be here on many more similar occasions.

[Here the pipers again entertained the company with the national music of Scotland, and puffed away, under the statue of Lord Cornwallis, in a style that seemed highly delighting to the sons of St. Andrew.]

The Chairman.—Gentlemen,—I beg to give you the health of my worthy friend and assistant on this occasion, who is at the other end of the table—Col. McLeod. The pipers played again.

Col. McLeod returned thanks for the honor done him, and intimated that he had rewarded the pipers with a glass of whisky each.

About this time many of the company having left the room, those who remained, at the suggestion of the Chairman, drew close together. The conviviality of the evening continued unabated.

The Chairman.—Gentlemen, I have to trespass once more on your attention, and I hope to be heard in silence by all the sons of St. Andrew who are yet here. I have to give the health of one who is now, unfortunately, on the bed of sickness. I am sure every son of Caledonia will cordially join me in wishing him a speedy recovery. I mean Mr. Wilson, our former president, who, if he had not been sick, I need not tell you, gentlemen, would have been here. I beg, gentlemen, you will drink a bumper, not in silence, but with our sincere wishes for his speedy recovery, health and long life, and that he may be amongst us on the next anniversary of St. Andrew's day. Cheers.

The Chairman.—I have one more toast to propose—it is the health of the gentleman who now sits beside me, whom I feel it my duty to single out from among our countrymen—I mean my worthy friend Mr. Leith. Long life, health and happiness to him.

Mr. Leith.—Gentlemen,—I feel extremely obliged to you for the handsome compliment you have paid to me, though I feel myself unworthy of the honour you have conferred on me, who am so humble an individual. This honor, gentlemen, is wholly undeserved by me; but I am not the less grateful for your conferring it on me. I do not know of any virtue in me that should induce you to drink my health, but that of being your countryman. It is a source of gratification to me, to meet you here, and I hope it will not be the last time that I will meet you here under the auspices of my worthy friend who now presides. When I meet you here, my countrymen, (excuse me Englishmen) I cannot suppress my feelings. Ours is deemed an inhospitable soil—not an uninhospitable one, gentlemen, for we are not wanting in hospitality, I trust, to our guests; but now that we are transplanted to, though not a better yet a warmer soil, we may be expected to feel more warmly those attachments by which we were bound in our native land. (Cheers.) It is, indeed, a matter of regret that we do not meet oftener in such convivial parties, to renew the recollection of those left behind.

The Croupier proposed the health of Col. Thackwell and Her Majesty's 3d Dragoons, who have just arrived among us.

The Colonel returned thanks.

Mr. R. S. Thomson gave "the memory of James Hogg, and drew the attention of the Chairman to the debt which Auld Scotland owed to a poet gifted by nature, as the Ettrick Shepherd was, with all the wild and beautiful imaginings peculiar to his native land. At a meeting like the present, and when the memory of Burns and Scott had been given and received with so much feeling, that of Hogg ought to rank with them, side by side. Much cheering.

Several other toasts were drank, and the company separated at about one in the morning, apparently quite happy.—Herkura, December 2.

MOONGHYR.

JOINT MAGISTRATE'S COURT, OCTOBER 26, 1887.

An illegal source of Revenue.

A case was decided to-day which brings to light a wide-spread evil that requires the speedy interposition of Government, who, it may be, have been sedulously kept in ignorance of it or have been wilfully blind to it. The evil to which we allude prevails probably in all the districts comprising the British Indian empire; as the many we have personally been in, did not present a single exception to the fact. We have reason to be certain that the unwarrantable source of revenue in question is not backed by any of the Regulations of Government, but on the contrary is expressly prohibited by a resolution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, in which authority, under the Government, the supervision of fines and pecuniary penalties is doubtless vested. We always understood that where there were no regulations guiding the Mofussil Courts in any matters that fell under their Jurisdiction, the orders of the Sudder Nizamut stood on the same footing as the Regulations of Government themselves, and its Resolutions as imperative. It is of considerable importance to ascertain in the first place, whether the following resolution recorded by that Court is known to Government; in the second place, whether the Mofussil authorities have been put in possession of it; and in the third place, how the sums realized have been appropriated. The abovementioned Resolution, (passed on the 28th of March 1807,) runs as follows:—

"The Court are of opinion that no fine can be levied by the Police Officers from the owners of stray cattle under the existing Regulations, but that the owner of the crop has an undoubted right of impounding stray cattle when found trespassing on cultivated fields, whether of indigo or of any other kind of cultivation; and that the expense incurred in feeding and attending the cattle whilst impounded, should be defrayed by the owner, besides making compensation for the damages (if any) previously to the cattle being released from pound."

It will appear from what we have just said, that we allude (and what we shall advance without hesitation,) to the universal practice, although unauthorized by existing laws, and positively objected to, if not expressly interdicted, by the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, of levying fines on cattle trespassing in the fields of cultivators without exception; for there is no distinction made between the cultivators of indigo plant, and other classes of cultivators of the soil, but all are, by the Resolution, equally entitled to impound cattle trespassing on their fields and doing damage to their crops. The indigo planters being a superior order of cultivators of the soil, though in many of the districts ignorant of the existence of such a Resolution in their favour, as well as in the favor of cultivators in general, have been in the habit of assuming the privilege, of merely levying a small pecuniary amount (which they denominated fine) on each head of cattle impounded for damaging their plants, though they thereby, not only did not infringe on any of the Regulations of Government, but in reality, though unwittingly, were borne out by the fiat of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, but from ignorance, lost the benefit of exacting the full amount of expenses incurred by them in having the impounded cattle tended and damages sustained by their plants being destroyed by them. Now if the Resolution under consideration had been given publicity to, they would unquestionably have availed themselves of the means of saving themselves from losses which their being kept in ignorance of its existence had occasioned them.

In the district of Bhugulpore, one of the former judges and magistrates, (far we refer to the times when the offices of collector and magistrate were not united) coming to a knowledge of the fact that the indigo planters were in the habit of compelling the owners of cattle doing damage to their crops to pay only a small fine of eight annas a head for bullocks and cows, and two or four annas for goats, being incidentally brought before his Court, displayed his want of information so far as to put a stop to the practice, directing the indigo planters to proceed in the Civil Court against owners of cattle against whom they had any claims to advance on the score of injury done to their fields. Mr. Lang, the Magistrate of Monghyr, also flies into an official passion on a similar occasion very recently, (only two years ago) which harries him into the indiscretion of issuing an ishtahar to be proclaimed in the place and spot where the heinous offence of impounding cattle, and laying damages had been perpetrated by the owner of Sisonnee factory, who has the pleasant mortification of hearing the drums beating and the crier shouting the general prohibition about his factory, and in his premises. But the satisfaction of Mr. Lang was not of long duration, for the resolution of the Sudder Nizamut was submitted to his astonishment, and in his turn he had the pleasurable duty of ordering a counter ishtahar to be made on the very spot, and restoring the privilege of exacting damages to those whom it may concern. Now what shall we say to the culpable ignorance of law and Regulation of such high officers of Government to whose custody the distribution of justice by "equity and good conscience" has been consigned?

In how many other districts such a spectacle has been exhibited it is impossible to say; but the fact that the generality of cultivators of all grades, excepting the indigo planters, not daring to exercise the privilege conceded by the Regulations under consideration, have been either compelled to bear the losses sustained by them by their crop being damaged by stray cattle, or endeavoured to procure the prevention of them by conveying them to the Police thana, when they could do it without fear of being subjected to personal harm from owners who happened to be powerful enough to rescue the beasts ere they reached that seat of redress. In the event of succeeding so far as to consign them to the thana, the owners verily had to pay a fine for the release of the cattle, (probably some hundred per cent. more than authorized) but not a pice of it ever found its way into the hands of the parties sustaining loss. It is quite plain then that redress was to be obtained only by those who had resolution enough to act independently of the interference of the police, and possessed at the same time the means of doing so; while such as were incapable of doing either, by the rules of "Holston's choice," necessarily submitted to the grievance.

Are Government ignorant then of the universal illegal practice of levying fines by the Police thana officers, who are under the authority of the Magistracy? And if Government are not aware of its existence, what have the Mofussil authorities to say in defence of their neglect, not to call it by a harsher name, in not making them acquainted with it? Or the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut no less. What has that paramount judicial authority to urge in defence, for not placing the circumstance before the Supreme Council. If we may judge from the following substance of a correspondence, however, that has a little while ago passed between it and a late magistrate of this district, it would seem that they had done it.

The magistrate informs the superior Court, that upon a reference being made to it by the senior judge of the Moorshedabad Court of Circuit, it recorded its opinion on the 28th March, 1807. What that opinion was we need not repeat; but the application of the Joint Magistrate of this district was not before the 16th April, 1828, just 2 years after the passing of that opinion; and it was doubtless made with a view to elicit instruction; but which to us appears to be unnecessary, since the superior Court had already recorded a resolution, which it was his duty to be guided by. He probably thought that the resolution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut was not sufficiently legal to authorize him to regulate his proceedings in a matter of such considerable importance. But by such thoughts he called in question the discretionary power vested in it to command implicit obedience to all their circulars, and Resolutions. He evidently overlooked that circumstance, and confiding in his own wisdom, he recommends a legislative enactment authorizing the Police Darogahs to levy a fine from the owners of stray cattle found trespassing in cultivation upon petition (more money in the public coffers by the sale of stamps and promotion to the zealous officer that opens a sphere for it!) being presented to them by the owner of the crops, supported by the testimony of two or more witnesses. The Nizamut Adawlut's Resolution is the very antipodes of the law suggested by the Magistrate, if he did not mean to provide at the same time that the proposed fine or whatever else it might be denominated, should not go into the pockets of Government. If he did, the equitable feature of the act, would have rendered him worthy of a souvenir, scarcely less conspicuous than that which celebrates the career of Sir David Ochterlony. But weak, had Government any notion of the resolution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut? In as much as no legislative enactment resulted from it, Government must be content to be told that there can be nothing more convincing than this, that it is much to the credit of their wisdom that a whole country has been during some 50 or 60 years labouring under a lamentable series of oppression in proof of its paternal solicitude for the welfare of the people whom providence has placed under their political sway. This observation of course will apply only if they have been applied by the Nizamut Adawlut for the enactment of some regulation on the subject. And then they must bear the imputation of winking at the illegal source of revenue laid upon, and probably occupied during more than half a century. We have reason to believe, that Government was informed of what was happening in the Mofussil, and that the Sudder Nizamut had recommended the enactment of a regulation on the subject under consideration. We have good grounds for the assertion, as the following extract of the reply of that Court to the letter of the Magistrate of Monghyr, recommending an equitable regulation will show.

"The subject of your communication is one of great difficulty and importance, and has long been under the consideration (yes, long enough to occupy 21 years) both of this Court and of the Government, and that the Court are not prepared to adopt the suggestion of vesting the Police Darogahs with such powers as those you propose, or at present to apply any other remedy (what, not after a deliberation of 21 years?!) to the evil complained of, or to promulgate any new rules with a view to its suppression, in addition to those contained in the Court's letter (a circular we suppose!) dated the 28th March 1807, to which allusion is made in the second paragraph of your reference." This letter of the Sudder Nizamut's is dated 2d May, 1828.

Government then have had the question long under their consideration, and we shall venture to believe (though we do violence to our understandings) that the resolution of the Sudder Nizamut was known to the local authorities; but we are lost in conjecture as to the object there had in view in suffering the Police Darogahs to levy fines on stray cattle, and carry the proceeds to the account of course of Government. The Nizamut Adawlut say you shall not do so, "but we shall" is the language of the fact; and this every where. Did the Nizamut know that its orders were being set at naught by the Mofussil authorities, and that during nearly 20 years if it did not, Government could not. So then, while the necessity of enacting a regulation was acknowledged, the evil was suffered to be perpetrated by the Mofussil powers, in direct opposition to the order of the higher Court! But n'importe, the evil did no harm to the revenue!

It now remains to be asked, did Government know that the country had been laid under a wide system of contribution? How have the proceeds of it been appropriated? What does it amount to annually? It is due to the people who pay the fine to be made acquainted with the reasons of this unwarrantable exaction; we say unwarrantable, because it is illegal in the strictest sense of the word, and those who have been deprived of the benefits of the resolution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, have an unquestionable right to demand the repayment of the fine levied from owners of cattle doing damage to their crops. But where is it? Past recall, in the coffers of the state, conveyed thereto by the Mofussil authorities, without rhyme or reason. And this we must believe the Government entirely unacquainted with? Our Paternal Government might as well open their eyes a little and see, if they cannot discover a means of applying some remedy to the evil, of pocketing the money demandable by owners of the crops and cultivations. It is enough that some lac of rupees have already flowed into the public treasury from this illegal channel. Let the poor husbandman, and other cultivators of the soil at length, obtain some remuneration for losses sustained by the hoofs and teeth of the brute creation. Is there any body prepared to question the probability, that the thanna people have taken advantage of the existing state of things, and encouraged the depredation of cattle in the fields of the husbandmen, seeing that their returns show a hundred or two per cent. by profit and loss more than the books of the Magistrate could boast of.

The case decided this day originated under the following circumstances: Mr. Muirhead, the proprietor of Muijpaul and other factories, impounded several heads of cattle for trespassing in his indigo plantations, and demanded damages for the loss thereby sustained by him, with the expenses he had incurred in having them taken care of. The owners refused to comply with his demands, though it was made, backed by the aforementioned resolution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut. A long time having elapsed since the impounding of the cattle without his legal demands being complied with, he presented a durkhaat to a former magistrate, praying that he would direct the daroga of the thanna to take charge of the cattle, and compel the owners to pay him the damages he claimed, or sell the cattle for that purpose. Had he retained the cattle he would not have acted contrary to the privilege granted him by the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut; but he rather wished to obtain the damages he had a right to demand, and therefore resorted to the above mode of procedure. The magistrate directed the daroga to furnish a report of the accuracy or otherwise of the purport of the durkhaat of Mr. Muirhead. He sends in a kyffaat corroborating it, of which the magistrate took no notice during several months, till it was brought to the consideration of the late Assistant to the Joint Magistrate, Mr. Ramsay, (who we understand has struck his colours in the Company's service, or is about to do so,) to whose investigation, not the complaint of Mr. Muirhead, but that of the owners of the cattle, had been referred for trial. These complain that Mr. Muirhead had caused their beasts to be driven away to his factory from waste lands, wherein they could have done no damage, and who had ever since (about eight months) detained them in his custody. Mr. Ramsay proceeds to try the case. Mr. Muirhead's pleader takes an objection to the trial of the counter-prosecution before the application of his client had been disposed of. He quoted the resolution of the Snadder Nizamut A lawlut, and justified the right of his client of impounding cattle and levying damages for the injury sustained by him. He contended that it was incomprehensible to him, why the application of his client should have stood so long undecided; while that of the parties whose complaint was now under examination, should be proceeded on, and begged that the former might have the preference, or at least that the papers connected with it might be read and taken into consideration. The Court would not agree to the reasonable suggestion, but ordered a fresh tatahar to be taken from the prosecutor's mooktarkars sine voce, which was done accordingly. The Court then directed his witnesses to be called, and called on Mr. Muirhead's pleader to reply to the charge of the complainant. The pleader said, that although he did not think he was obliged, ere the witnesses had been heard, to answer to the complaint of the prosecutor, as he considered the proceedings irregular; but as the Court required it, he would do it, though he did it reluctantly. He then said, that he would (though the Court did not desire it) also produce his witnesses to refute the statement of the prosecutor. Here the case was postponed. Some days afterwards the witnesses of the prosecutors appeared, and corroborated his statement. The Court decided the case against Mr. Muirhead, and fined him 30 rupees for detaining the cattle of the prosecutor.

The pleader of Mr. Muirhead presently appealed the case. The superior Court reversed the decision of Mr. Ramray this day, and remitted the fine. But what was singular, three witnesses produced by Mr. M's. pleader deposed to the fact of the cattle having been carried away from fields of indigo wherein they were doing damage. Here there are two sets of witnesses in a confident manner, with the objects of their worship in hand, contradicting each other as to the plain matter of fact. The inferior Court would not wait for Mr. M's witnesses, although no particular date had been appointed for their appearance. To decide a case on ex parte evidence would be no very great attribute of a child; but some sound wisdom is required to be expended in detecting a fact in the midst of a heap of conflicting testimonies to it. It is wisdom, we allow, to keep clear of such vexatious shoals, and run before the wind with the flying colours of "equity and good conscience" to beat down all troublesome law and regulation, rule, and resolution, ready at hand, especially as the Superior Court was very conveniently in the way to submit to the trouble of reviewing the decisions of its inferior. — Hurkaru, November 14.

SUPREME COURT.

OCTOBER 31, 1837.

In the goods of Russey Doss

The deceased died leaving no relations surviving, bequeathing her property, which is considerable, both in money and land, to one Nursing Doss, of Calcutta. Application was made for probate before the Chief Justice in chambers, but his lordship directed, that the application should be made in open court. Several witnesses were examined, one of whom, the gomasta of Nursing Doss, swore, he read the Will to the deceased, when she was alive and in her senses; other attesting witnesses were also examined, but one Rampersaud, who wrote the will, was not forthcoming, nor was his absence satisfactorily accounted for by the witnesses examined. The Chief Justice refused probate, leaving the applicant to prove the will in solemn form.

Hajah Burrodacaut Roy, v. Bissnoondary Doss.

This case came on for further directions. Postponed till to-morrow. — Englishman, November 1.

NOVEMBER 13, 1837.

In the goods of John Robinson, deceased.

The deceased gave instructions to one James Taylor, in October last, to draw out his will, and afterwards approved and executed the same. He died on the 12th instant, leaving him surviving a widow and three children by different mothers. Application was made to prove the will in the usual form, but at the suggestion of the registrar, it was proved in open court. Probate granted to the widow.

Mahomed Ally v. Muttylall Seal.

This was an action brought to recover the sum of Sa. Rs. 470, being the balance alleged due by the defendant, for work done by the plaintiff in rigging the barque, "Christopher Rawson."

The particulars appeared as follow:—The plaintiff is a serang or boatwain, and the defendant is a banian, and was the banian of the late Mr. W. Smithson in his life time. The "Christopher Rawson" was built by Messrs. J. and N. Thomas, of Howrah, for the late Mr. Smithson. The same parties, it appeared, agreed to build two vessels for the late Mr. Smithson, and it was arranged that they should be paid Rs. 1,100 for rigging both. The plaintiff completed the rigging of one of the vessels, and not having received from the Messrs. Thomas (who were in embarrassed circumstances) the full amount due to him, refused to commence rigging the second vessel, unless the balance due to him on account of the first was previously paid. It was sworn that defendant went over to Messrs. Thomas's dock-yard, and told the plaintiff to go on with his work, and he, the defendant, would pay him.

The action was in the first instance brought in the Court of Requests, but the proceedings were removed by certiorari to this court.

The defence set up was, that Muttylall Seal was merely the servant of Mr. Smithson; but the court gave a verdict for Rs. 470. — Englishman, Nov. 16.

FRIDAY, NOV. 17.

The King v. Thomas Ferguson.

The Advocate General, with reference to a notice on a former day, stated, that it was his intention to have moved this day for a new trial, but a communication that he had received since he came into court had induced him to defer moving—if he troubles the court at all—till to-morrow.

Chief Justice.—I have referred to Mr. Justice Malkin's notes, and it appears to have been his opinion that the verdict was against evidence.

The Advocate-General.—The grounds for a new trial are several. The verdict was against evidence, and against the direction of the judge.

Chief Justice.—If you move for a new trial, it must be an order nisi to be made absolute on the first day of next term.

Mr. Clarke.—I believe I can save my friend some trouble by stating, it is not my intention to oppose his rule absolute, neither do I intend to move to bring Mr. Ferguson up for judgment. My clients are perfectly satisfied with the proceedings as they stand, and do not intend to give the court any further trouble in the matter.

Chief Justice.—Then I suppose, Mr. Advocate-General will not move. However, we shall see, what course he will take to-morrow.—Englishman November 18,

Rex on the Prosecution of Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co. versus Thomas Ferguson.

This being the last day of term, the Advocate-General moved on behalf of the defendant to enter a verdict of Not Guilty, or for a new trial in the event of the Court being of opinion that the verdict could not be set aside.

The learned Counsel moved on the following points first as to the grounds on which he was entitled to set aside the verdict, and enter a verdict of not guilty.

1st point. That the learned judge who tried the case (Sir B. Malkin) had in his summing up, made a misdirection to the jury, there being no evidence upon the indictment to go to the jury. The jury found the defendant guilty upon three only of the counts in the indictment; upon the other eight counts, therefore, the defendant was entitled to an acquittal. Now, in all the three counts, upon which the verdict was found, the injury charged, was an intent on the part of the defendant, by the publication of a libel, to injure the prosecutors in their mercantile capacity, as partners in business. The learned judge distinctly told the jury that there was no evidence of publication of the libel to any but the parties themselves and it was for the jury to consider, whether the sending the letters in question to one partner was proof of the publication of a libel on the two others, and whether such publication, if publication they held it to be, was likely to injure the character of the prosecutors as merchants. The Advocate-General contended, that according to the form of the indictment, such a direction ought not to have gone from the judge to the jury, and that upon the authorities cited at the trial, the judge ought to have told the jury there was no evidence whatever of publication, and no case in fact for them to decide; because, it was impossible, that a publication of a letter to the three partners only, could, in the words of the indictment, operate as an injury to their characters as merchants, inasmuch as nobody but themselves could know whether or not such a libel had ever been written and such a publication the indictment considered was not in point of law any publication at all, and ought not therefore to have gone to the jury. Upon this first point, therefore, of a misdirection on the part of the judge, the Advocate-General, moved to enter a verdict of not guilty.

The Chief Justice, as we understood him, intimated that he thought there was a great deal in this point; and that it was very questionable, whether or not the learned Judge who tried the case, had not put too limited a construction upon the authorities which had been cited to him at the trial.

The 2nd point was, that the jury found their verdict against evidence, and that they overstepped their province, in finding a verdict on matters not left to them by the Judge, the learned judge who tried the case having distinctly told the jury, that there was no evidence of publication to any person but the parties themselves; whereas, the verdict was found, the jury being satisfied that there had been a publication of the libel to Mr. Grant, the defendants clerk and assistant; by which finding the jury constituted itself a judge of what was in point of law evidence of publication, which they had no business to do, the learned judge having charged them upon this point, that in point of law there was no evidence of a publication of the libels to a third party.

Upon these two points the learned counsel contended, that he was entitled to enter a verdict for the defendant of not guilty; and should the Court be of opinion that the verdict must stand, he then upon these two same points moved for a new trial.

On the first point, it appeared from Sir B. Malkin's note of the case, that the verdict was expressly contrary to the direction of the judge.

And, on the second point, there was no evidence whatever of any publication with the intent charged in the indictment, that is to say, to injure the prosecutors in their business as merchants.

Chief Justice.—Take a rule nisi on these grounds, the prosecutors to shew cause on the first day of next term, the defendant's recognizances, in the meantime, to be respited to that day.—Hurkaru, November 20.

MONDAY NOV. 20.

This was the first day of sittings after fourth term. There were ten causes down on the plea side and two on the equity side of the court.

C. W. Bastard v. M. M. Manuk.

On the motion of the Advocate General, referred to arbitration.

Govindhunder Bonnerjee v. C. Trower.

Struck out by plaintiff's attorney.

Doe on the demise of Behee Bachar v. Jaun Behee.

Ejectment, to recover possession of certain lands in the neighbourhood of the Circular Road. Defended in forma pauperis. The details are not of interest.—Englishman Nov. 21.

SITINGS AFTER TERM.

(Before the Chief Justice.)

Gleason versus Mortimer.

The Advocate-General, with whom was Mr. Clarke, stated, this was an action to recover the sum of Co.'s Rs. 1,033-12 to 12 for flour and sonjee supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant at his demand. Mr. Gleason is the keeper of the House of Correction and sells the flour and sonjee ground by the prisoners, for Government, taking a commission on the proceeds. Witnesses were called, who proved the delivery of the goods. The defendant had pleaded the general issue, by which the contract was put in issue, that is denied.

Mr. Prinsep, with whom was Mr. Leith for the defence, contended—1st. that the plaintiff was out of court, the having failed in proving a sufficient property in the plaintiff to entitle him to maintain his action, the flour belonging to Government, and being ground by the labor of the Government prisoners.

Chief Justice.—Mr. Prinsep, I am quite satisfied on this point; the plaintiff has the charge of the flour, and a commission on its sale, and the contract besides, as proved, was made with him; according to your plea you now can only shew, that the contract made by your client with plaintiff was different from the one now set up by him.

Mr. Prinsep then stated that he would shew that the demand made was a great deal more than was due, and that the prices charged were unfair, and beyond the trade price.

Chief Justice.—Then why, Mr. Prinsep, did you not pay money into Court, and shape your plea differently; you then would have had a verdict, and the costs. As it now stands, you must have a verdict against you, and you can only shew in reduction of damages, that the rates charged, are more than agreed upon by the contract, which is proved against you, and which is the only line of defence left to you from the mode in which you have chosen to plead.

Mr. Prinsep, then called witnesses to cut down the rates charged in the plaintiff's bill of particulars; but, after some time, the defence knocked up, and the Chief Justice directed a verdict for the plaintiff to be recorded for Co.'s Rs. 1033-12.

Chief Justice.—This is a case, in which I will certify that execution shall issue immediately.—Hurkaru, November 24.

FRIDAY NOV. 24.

Bagshaw and Co. v. C. A. Cavoris.

Mr. Leith opened the pleadings.

Mr. Prinsep stated the case for the plaintiffs. The action arose out of transactions extending from 1832 to 1835, in which the firm of Bagshaw and Co. made advances on indigo to the defendant, consigned to Fletcher, Alexander and Co., of London, and various consignments by the firm to their corresponding house at Bordeaux and Havre. It turned out, when the indigo was sold, that instead of a surplus remaining, there was a considerable deficit. The learned counsel here referred to various letters, which had passed between the plaintiff and defendant, from which it appeared, that the whole advance was about one lakh of rupees. The rates of commission to be paid to Bagshaw and Co. and Fletcher, Alexander and Co. were also set forth. It was left in the discretion of Bagshaw and Co. to send the indigo either to London or Bordeaux or Havre, the firm here or the firm in London guaranteeing the foreign house. On the final accounts arriving in July 1836, the deficit was found to be £3,768. Plaintiffs then informed defendant of the exact amount of the deficiency, and requested an adjustment. Defendant replied, he would communicate with his friends at Kishnagur who were interested in indigo; afterwards he alleged, that some of the parties were ill or dead; and, finally, the plaintiffs were compelled to employ Mr. Henderson, and bring the matter into this court.

Much correspondence was put in and read, and Mr. N. Alexander was examined as to the custom as to advances on indigo, the rates of exchange in 1836, and as to the value of government and private bills at same date. Copies of various letters admitted under order of the court were also put in. But the case was stopped by the parties agreeing to allow a verdict for the plaintiffs, with damages Rs. 80,000, and that all matters in dispute, both at law and equity, be referred to the arbitration of Petrus Johannes Sarkies, Esq., on the part of the defendant, and Benjamin Harding, Esq., on the part of the plaintiffs, with power to them if they cannot agree to refer to an umpire. Award to be made on or before the next ensuing term. All costs to be in the discretion of the arbitrators or umpire, with power to enlarge time.—Englishman, Nov. 25.

BOMBAY SUPREME COURT

The fourth term of the Supreme Court commenced yesterday and the amount of business to be transacted appears exceedingly light, the cause board not exhibiting on the plea side more than 6 causes, some of which were struck out soon after the sitting of the Court, and on the equity side only 4, and the questions to be discussed on the latter not being of much importance. We believe there are some cases also in the Ecclesiastical branch, but still the business of the term cannot, it is thought, occupy many days to dispose of it.—Bombay Courier Nov. 4.

INSOLVENT COURT.

FRIDAY, NOV. 24.

In the Insolvent Court yesterday Olliwallah Khan was brought up, heard on his petition, and declared entitled to the benefit of the act. One Lutchman Doss was opposed by the Advocate-General. The Insolvent was examined touching various debts on his schedule, which he swore were joint with his brother, but which not agreed forth, and this the learned Judge held was sufficient to remand the prisoner. But the Advocate-General proceeded, and the case was adjourned, the insolvent being remanded, and the opposing creditor allowed his costs.

The following dividends were declared—Estate of Joseph Savigny, Co's rupees 14, per 100 Sa. rupees, R. A. McNaghten 10 Co's rupees 12 sa. per 100 Sa. rupees, T. Philpot 10 Co's rupees per 100 Sa. rupees, and H. Heberlet 10 Co's rupees per 100 Sa. rupees.

In the matter of Captain R. A. McNaghten, the order was made for a final discharge from all liability as to the debts on his schedule.—Oriental Observer, Nov. 2.

SUDDER DEWANNY ADALUT.

August 22, 1834.

Present H. Shakspeare, and W. Braddon, Esqrs. Judges.

Although the following construction of law may be considered somewhat out of date, we deem the subject of sufficient interest to induce pleaders and others to warrant its insertion even now.

A difference of opinion having arisen as to what suits are now cognizable by the court under regulation XLIX. 1793, under the receipt of the circular of the 15th November last, regarding suits referable to the revenue authorities, I shall feel obliged by your obtaining for me the opinion of the court on that point.

2 The third paragraph of that circular refers cases of dispossession of ryots by landlords to the collector, and I wish to be informed whether that includes all disputes for possession, between landlord and tenant, and whether regulation 49, 1793 is hereafter to include only disputes between proprietors of different estates, and between proprietors and holders of rent free and other fixed tenures within the estate.

3 As a case in point. A jagheerdar dies, by which all tenures held from him lapse, and the government make a settlement with the proprietors of the village, who not being able to get the terms they require from the ryot, or from some private reason, perhaps, oust the ryot from the lands he held by pottah from the Jagheerdar. The question as to the right to hold the lands at all, or on what terms, may be referred to a regular suit in the civil court, but in the interim if the ryot wishes summarily to regain possession, and hold the lands on the former terms, until that point be decided, is his suit cognizable by the court under regulation 49 or referable to the collector under that circular? Rent is in this, and must in every case between the landlord and tenant, be the cause of dispute and therefore, in my opinion, it comes within the intention of the circular in question, and is referable to the collector.

4. If it were not so, a ryot might be placed in an awkward predicament, by the court upholding his possession on the former terms by regulation 49, and the revenue authorities decreeing a higher rate of rent, and ousting him or the payment of it, or giving power at the time of resumption to the proprietor, to make his own arrangements with other ryots.

5 In this district resumptions by government are constantly taking place, and cases similar to the above may frequently occur, it is therefore desirable that the parties, who are often Indigo Planters, may know to what authority they must apply for redress if they are ousted, in addition to which, it will prevent any clashing of authorities, a thing always to be avoided, if possible.

PROPOSED LETTER.

To the Judge of the Zillah Tirhoot.

Sir,—I am directed by the court to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th of May last, requesting to be informed what suits, since the issue of the Circular order of the 18th November last, are cognizable by the judge under regulation 49 of 1793; and in reply to inform you that as the regulation in question has not been rescinded, parties forcibly dispossessed have still the option of resorting under its provision to the civil court, any thing in the circular order notwithstanding.

I was at the same time directed to add, that as the particular case mentioned by you does not include violence, it is cognizable by the collector under the circular order of the 6th December last, regulation 49 of 1793, under the construction No. 39 of the printed construction book, being applicable only to "cases of dispossession by force, amounting to a breach of the peace."

SUDDER BOARD OF REVENUE.

SEPT. 12, 1837 CIRCULAR NO. 74.

To the Commissioner of Revenue for the Division of—

Sir,—I am directed to transmit a copy of a letter from the Officiating Secretary to the law Commission, regarding the practice of holding estates under fictitious names, and to request that you will call upon each of the collectors subordinate to you to furnish an immediate answer in as few words as possible, on each of the points stated at the conclusion of that letter, and that after you have received their replies, you will submit them to the Board with your own sentiments, and any additional information which it may be in your power to furnish.

I have, &c.

(Signed) C. E. TAYLOR, Additional Secy.

To Secretary to the Sudder Board of Revenue at Calcutta.

Sir,—I am directed by the India Law commissioners to request that you will lay the following communications before the Board, for the consideration of the members.

2d. The India Law commissioners have had before them certain correspondence between the Calcutta and Allahabad Sudder Courts and Government on the subject of the rules which have been issued by those courts for preventing subordinate judicial officers from acquiring landed property secretly, or holding it under forged names. This correspondence was laid before the India Law commissioners by the Government of India in connection with the more general question of the expediency of rendering all land liable to forfeiture, which have been purchased under fictitious names by any parties, whether native officers of Government or others. The commissioners are fully impressed with the inconveniences, which result from the common Indian practice of purchasing and holding property in fictitious names, but they feel that it would be unsafe to make a general change in the existing law on so important a point without a fuller knowledge than they now possess of the circumstances under which the practice has sprung up in every part of India. With this object I am directed to request that you will obtain the opinions of the members on the following points:

1st. Is the practice of holding landed property under fictitious names common in the provinces under the jurisdiction of your Board?

2d. If so, when did that practice originate, and what were the circumstances that induced it?

3d. Are there any advantages in the continuance of that practice, and if there be, what are those advantages?

4th. In case of its being determined to prevent the continuance of that practice what provisions of law would most easily, and conveniently, and with least risk of injustice to individuals effect that object?

I have, &c.

BEFORE JAMES PATTIE AND HENRY WAITERS, Esqrs., JUDGES.

Consultation 6th, 13th, and 16th September and 3d October, 1837.

IMPORTANT TO SOCIETIES OF PARTIES IN THE ABOVE CASE.

This case had been pending before the Board for a considerable time, and the parties concerned sustained legal advisers to conduct their respective appeals. The papers in this case are voluminous, and we shall state the principal features of it, as briefly as possible. An extensive Pergunnah named Wajumundahendpore, situated on the Harnah side, was left by the late Harnachunder Rai, an extremely wealthy zemindar, for the benefit of his two adopted children, named Jagmudhunder and Poorunchunder Rai, but being minors and owing to some disputes between the Ranges of the late Harnachunder, the court of wards became the guardian and undertook the superintendence of the estate.

Great difficulty was experienced by Mr. Commissioner Pigon in taxing the Pergunnah, and after some time a nephew of the late Harnachunder, named Madhub Chose, came forward and claimed the estate from Government, at a Jummah of 4,44,000 rupees per annum, pledging estates yielding a Sudder Jamma of rupees 90,771.10.11.12. The owners of the pledged estates are named as follows: Sheshohunder Chowdry and others, Rajkisen Bongerjee and others, Palbhagshah Chowdry and others and Boolanath Chuckerbutty.

The former failed in his engagements, and having been in heavy arrears with the Government, Mr. Commissioner Pigon proceeded to recover the balances by the sale of the property of the estates; but the Bongerjees entertained Mr. W. A. Bignell to appeal against the proceedings of the Commissioner, and Bholanath Chuckerbutty entertained Mr. H. Dias for the same purpose. We have not seen Mr. Bignell's papers in this case, but we are enabled to give a few of the grounds of appeal from Mr. Pigon's report, in which it appears, that a suit is pending in the Supreme Court, regarding the estate of the Bongerjees, and that the 1/11 of their estates are collected by an officer of the Supreme Court, and that pending the decision on alienation of the share of any one of the sharers can be considered valid or be appropriated on account of demands so occurring. Mr. J. B. Swinhoe, the Company's Attorney, on the 7th of August last, informed the Commissioner that Radamohun Bongerjee, by his will, dated 29th March, 1815, directed that the whole of his estate, real and personal, should be divided equally amongst his eleven sons, three of whom are enemies in this case.

On the 4th of March, 1819, a bill in equity was filed in the Supreme Court by Rajkisen Bongerjee and two others, against their brothers Tarranchurn Bongerjee and others, stating that the latter claimed certain talooks in Pergunnah Mahomedshye, Zillah Jessore, under a deed of gift alleged to have been executed by the late Radamohun Bongerjee, but which deed the complainants disputed. The adult defendants by their answer stated, that they heard and believed, and therefore admitted, that Tarranchurn Bongerjee and others claimed under some instruments in writing purporting to be a deed of gift which it was alleged the late Radamohun Bongerjee in his lifetime made and executed to Tarranchurn Bongerjee, but as the complainants denied the justice of the claim and as some of the defendants were infants, issues were directed, to try the validity of such gift, the order for the issues being set aside, the rights of all the parties and sons of Radamohun Bongerjee remain for the present as given by the will, but, Mr. Swinhoe adds, that what further proceedings may be had in the suit, or what might be the ultimate decree of the Court, he cannot tell, it appeared to him, however, that each of the sons are entitled to one-eleventh share subject to the debts of Radamohun Bongerjee, and the account directed to be taken. Mr. Pigon urges, that the shares pledged by Rajkisen Bongerjee and others, though not at this moment available, will eventually prove a sufficient fund from which any portion of the demand against the farmer, which may not in the mean time be realised from the property of the other sharers, will be fully recovered.

We believe that the estates pledged by Sheshohunder Rai and others are partly sold, and the following letter addressed by Mr. Dias to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, contains the whole of the grounds of the appeal of Bholanath Rai Chuckerbutty, and of the proceedings of Mr. Commissioner Pigon and of the Sudder Board of Revenue. It also contains several important facts which we believe, must apply to the other parties also beneficially.

Sir, - We have to request the favour of your laying this address before the Vice President in Council for consideration, and such orders as he may be pleased to pass on the case of Baboo Shibannath Chatterbatty, a Shareholder of Talooka Damannoodah, Pergunnah Imroo, Zillah Hoogly, and Talooka Bangspookereah, Pergunnah Moolgaur, Zillah Nuddah, as herein under fully detailed.

3d.—Under the above lease and the approval of the Sudder Board, the farmer was put in possession by Mr. Commissioner Pigou, that officer having (as stated in his address to the Board, No 368, of the 7th of August last) "particularly warned the collector of the 24-Perannahs on the subject of the additional security."

5th.—The lease under which the farmer obtained possession of the estate of the minors, particularly provided, that the instalments should be paid on the 15th of every ensuing month, and in the event of a failure, that the lease should be null and void. I respectfully beg leave to submit for the consideration of the Vice President in Council, that the lease was executed by the farmer on the 31st December, 1835, and that my clients' security was approved of by the commissioner on the 6th of May of the following year, five months after the execution of the lease. The farmer during that period was not able to pay up even one instalment, so that, under the provisions of the lease, it must have become null and void, five instalments having been due. I therefore presume that my client's security bond could have had no legal effect, as it provided for the fulfilment of a contract which had ceased to exist, in further proof of which, I have to add the 19th paragraph of Mr Pigeon's address, No. 368, in which he states as follows:—“From the statement B. annexed, it is evident that at the end of June, six months from the date of the lease, a balance of rupees 33,455, at the end of April, of rupees 49,185, at the end of June, rupees 65,639, existed in the 24-Paraganahah, no intimation of which was given to the effect.”

8th.—Consequent to the rejection by the Commissioner of my client's security as stated in the 6th paragraph of this address, an appeal was filed by my client before the Sudder Board of Revenue against the commissioner's order; but that appeal was never heard by the Board, nor have I been able to discover the reason of the appeal having been laid aside. My client made several ineffectual attempts before the commissioner for the confirmation of his security, and ultimately on the 10th of March, 1897, presented a petition to the Sudder Board of Revenue to be entirely released from responsibility on account of the farmer Madaband Ghose, as the commissioner would on no account confirm the security, and also prayed that his petition & appeal and five other documents filed by him with that petition, should be returned. The Board on the same date granted the prayers of the petitioner, and the documents above alluded to were returned to him.

8th—Another extraordinary fact also appears in the Commissioner's proceedings, to which I also respectfully solicit the Vice President's particular attention. In the original order of Mr Commissioner Piquo, dated the 26th of November, 1836, the following Persian words منظور داشتی همجو صامش مناس are recorded, reporting the activity of my client, during the record of which order my client was present, but, it also appears that the Persian words above quoted, were afterwards run through with a pen or stained, and other words substituted, omitting the rejection of the severity, but demanding additional security of the father. Such an unacceptable erasure or substitution in a legal proceeding, at which it must be borne in mind client was not present, is contained in the 5th and 6th paragraphs of the commissioner's address to the Board, No. 309, of the 21st August last, in the following way: "The original version, with my autograph signature thereupon, is herewith submitted, and to the wording of that order upon it."

at the bottom of the order, I request the particular attention of the Board, as most clearly showing my intention at the time to have been that of not exonerating Bholanauth Chuckerbutty from his responsibility, for the Board will observe that the words having worded the order

منظور داشتی همچو صامشی منا. ب تصور

نکشته I at the time of signature wrote these expressions with my own hand, thereby specifically and pointedly showing that he was not exonerated from responsibility, although to preserve the minors from any eventual loss, additional security was demanded from the farmer; with that point, however, Bholanauth Chuckerbutty had no concern.

"I have a clear remembrance of having expressed my disapprobation of the person who noted down my order, for not having done so with accuracy, and consequently, I feel no hesitation in declaring, that Bholanauth Chuckerbutty is not in equity entitled to a release, and that he is not a law, the security bond not having been cancelled, the decision of the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in the case of Ramesh Kishen Monce, appellant, vs. Mr. Battrie, collector of Dacca Jelaipore, respondent (which I consider to be exactly in point) fully established."

"See Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in the case of Ramesh Kishen Monce, appellant, vs. Mr. Battrie, collector of Dacca Jelaipore, respondent (which I consider to be exactly in point) fully established." The foregoing is all the commissioner pleads in justification of an Adawlut. He writes in the record of a legal order. I respectfully leave it to the Vice-President in Council to pronounce his judgment on a proceeding, which in equity and good conscience must appear exceedingly mystified, and which I need not add, would be held to law as suspicious and unwarrantable. The commissioner makes no mention of who, worth a person were present when he held his proceeding of the 26th of November, but merely states his "having a clear remembrance of having expressed by disapprobation of the person who noted down his order;" at the expression of which disapprobation, I am authorized by my client to state, that he (my client) was not present, so that the expression of disapprobation must have been a subsequent proceeding, distinct from the proceeding of the 26th of November, of which there is nothing on record, beyond the recollection of the commissioner, secured to, after the lapse of so long a period as nine months.

91.—In the 6th paragraph of his address, No. 368, the commissioner's opinion of certain securities of the farmer is thus expressed: "and that the eleventh share pledged by Raj Kishore Bonerjee and Rameshchurn Bonerjee, respectively, though not at this moment available, will eventually prove a sufficient fund from which any portion of the demand against the farmer, which may not in the mean time be realized from the property of the other sureties, will be fully recovered." The order of the commissioner of the 26th of November, 1836, in its original state, was grounded on his belief that the security of the Bonerjees was more than sufficient to make up the amount of the arrears due by the farmer, and in submitting my humble opinion, I am fully persuaded, that the order on the collector of the 24th of November, to obtain full security from the farmer in lieu of the pledge by my client, was made under the impression that whether the security so required were given or not, there was already sufficient to answer for the balance before the conclusion therefore, that the commissioner in the order for the procurement of such security, required that of Bholanauth Chuckerbutty, which assumption is supported by the Persian words already quoted in the 5th paragraph of this letter.

100.—As to the case cited by the commissioner of Ramesh Kishen Monce, appellant, versus Mr. Battrie tried by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, as appears in

vol. 2, page 195 of the published reports of that Court, I have to submit that I can find no analogy between it, and the case of my client, and if anything, it admits of strong argument in support of my client's appeal. In the case of Kishen Monce, her husband was never discharged from liability, as his security was held valid, he having been the original and unrelieved security; but in the present case, the farmer was put in possession in the month of December 1834, on the security of Bholanauth Chuckerbutty and others, under a deed providing, that if an instalment remained unpaid on the 15th of the next month, the deed would become null. My client's security was received five months after the deed had expired to exist, as the farmer failed to pay every instalment that fell due from the 31st of December 1835 up to the 6th of May 1836.

11th.—In the case of Kishen Monce, the inference is clear, that her husband's security bond had been duly registered by the collector, as in the judgment of the Court of Sudder Dewanny, it appears, that it was ruled "That the appellant's husband had not been discharged by the Collector." In the present case, my client was virtually discharged by the collector, as his security bond was not registered in the collector's office, (though the bonds of all the other sureties were registered,) consequent to its rejection by the commissioner, and my client's ultimate release by the Revenue Board on the 10th of March last, as stated in the 6th paragraph of this address. If the Vice-President in Council be guided by the case of Kishen Monce, my client without doubt will be entitled to a release.

12th.—I have now respectfully to state, for the information of the Vice-President in Council, that I preferred an appeal for my client before the Sudder Board of Revenue, but though I fully detailed every fact herein referred to, Messrs James Pattle and Henry Walters were pleased to direct the case of the following order to the commissioner through their additional secretary.

"I am directed by the Sudder Board of Revenue to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No 428 of the 12th ultimo, with its enclosure, [herewith returned] stating that Bholanauth Chuckerbutty preferred a petition for release from his responsibility as surety for the latter farmer of Pergunah Mamoodanapore.

2.—I am desired to inform you, that Mr. Roger Dins, the constituted Attorney for the above surety, presented to the Board several petitions, as noted in the margin, but after the most attentive consideration they dated 24th Aug. 1837. could find no reason in the representations of the petitions, to render their interference necessary with the orders passed for the sale of the property pledged by the surety in satisfaction of the farming balances due by the late farmer, and they have accordingly rejected the petitions. You are therefore requested to carry those orders into effect, leaving any party who may be dissatisfied to apply to the civil Court for redress."

I have, &c.

(Signed) C. E. TREVILLYAN Addl. Secy.

Sudder Board of Revenue,
Fort William, Oct. 3, 1837.

In the 6th paragraph of the Board's order, the words "after due consideration" appear, but I am at a loss to discover the judgment of Messrs Pattle and Walters, as not having been expressed in the order, and I cannot therefore understand the way in which they have arrived at the conclusion to order the sale of my client's property, and I am in a similar situation to ascertain the reason for which these gentlemen "could find no reason in the representations of the petitioner to render their interference necessary.

19th. — At the conclusion of the 2d paragraph of the plea, it is only above referred to, the following words are stated. "You are therefore requested to carry those orders into effect, leaving any party who may be disappointed to apply to a Civil Court for redress." I respectfully beg leave to submit that if my client's appeal were laid before the Civil Court of the 24th paragraph, his property would be sold by the world before him, or the Court sufficient grounds for suspending the order of sale issued by the commissioner, as in accordance with the established practice, and the provisions of Regulations IV of 1793, my client's plaint against a Revenue functionary would be transmitted by the Civil Court to the Board of Revenue for their information, and a period of several months would transpire previous to the return of the plaint to the Civil Court, as the Board would have to instruct their subordinate officers on the merits of the plaint and the grounds of defence. In order therefore to avert the inevitable damage which such a procedure would necessarily entail on my client's property, [and I may add the prospects of a large and respectable family wholly dependent upon that property] I have taken the liberty of humbly submitting as fully as possible the facts and reasons under which I conceive my client entitled to exemption from the liabilities of the farmer of Pergunnah Mahomednussapore and I trust that in the wise and mature judgment of the Vice President in Council, this appeal on behalf of my client will meet with the fullest success, and that pending its consideration, the Vice President in Council will be graciously pleased to direct the Commissioner's order for the sale of my client's property to be suspended.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
your most obedient humble servant,

(Signed) ROOPE DASS.

Constituted Attorney for Baboo Bhola Nath Chuckerbutty
Calcutta, the 6th November 1837.

Since writing the above we have been favored with the perusal of the orders of Government issued through Mr. Officiating Secretary Halliday, of the Revenue and Judicial Department, on the representation of Mr. Thompson, constituted Attorney of Baboo Bhola Nath Chuckerbutty.

His honor the Deputy Governor has been pleased to order the Sudder Board to furnish him immediately with the whole of the original correspondence in this case, and the Board have also been desired to send up their report with the papers required and in the meanwhile to instruct the Commissioner to suspend the sale of the property of Bhola Nath Chuckerbutty. The Commissioner issued the necessary instructions on the 8th inst. Monday, November 15.]

CIRCULAR No. 77.

To the Commissioner of Revenue for the division of—

Sir,—The Sudder Board having had occasion to observe that the provisions of VI and X. Regulation XIX of 1793 have been overlooked by settlement officers and commissioners, direct me to draw attention to the subject, and to point out to you that vested as you are with the powers of the late Board of Revenue, you are competent to dispose of cases of the nature therein provided for, without reference to this office.

2nd. You will readily perceive, on a careful perusal of the sections above noticed, that the government settlement officers will have to deal with such cases, only when the revenue of the lands may be payable to the state. On such occasions a separate settlement statement will not be requisite, but the jumma which may be assessed on the lands to be held as a dependent talook, will be included in the gross sum forming the basis of settlement of the estate to which they (the lands) belong whenever that settlement may be concluded and submitted for the sanction of government.

3rd. You are requested to issue appropriate instructions to all the settlement officers in your division for their future guidance.

I have, &c.,

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA

THE RICE HUMBUG.—The pice humbug continues. The Government money changers, when they give eight gundahs of old, rusty copper instead of pice on exchanging a rupee, insist, that if any shopkeepers, or other individuals, refuse to receive them at par with the new currency, in payment for their commodities, or their being brought to the change-shops, they will be summarily punished. But this attempt to pass off on the public a defaced and depreciated coin, at the same value as good money, is preposterous.

The intrinsic value of a thing, is what it worth exactly being;

and to think of compelling people to receive a base and depreciated currency, as a forcibly enhanced value of value, is ridiculous. Nothing is easier than to evade all laws and regulations to enforce with a measure. The Government shroffs, besides, will not consent to instructions, receive any marked or punched rupees. The other shroffs, not servants of Government, aware of such circumstances, mark or punch every rupee that passes through their hands, as they know what the public, on receiving these rupees, will be obliged to resort to their shops, in order to obtain change for them. In time the greater portion of the silver coin will have passed through the hands of the shroffs, and if they continue their present practice, of marking them, (of which there is little doubt) the Government shops, if continued, will be, what they now nearly are, perfectly useless objects of expense, for if they may not receive punched rupees, and the private shroffs mark almost all in circulation, they will, of course, be rendered utterly incapable of shielding the public from the extortions of these shroffs, as they are now professed to do. It is strange, however, that the Government will resort to such a policy, and enforce these measures, when, it is said, it has at command an immense stock of pice, which are lying dormant in the mint, and ready to be issued, and circulation of which, would tend considerably towards the mitigation of distress, so as far as the currency is concerned.

THE OTHERS.—No further change in the prospect of the crops has been anticipated during the week. The outlook in the season, is expected to be below an average season.

REPAIRS OF THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE.—It is said that it is in contemplation to give the Government House a thorough repair, the cost of which, it is estimated, in consequence of some alterations in the building, and the removal of some decayed beams, will amount to nearly fifty thousand rupees!

SIR CHARLES METCALFE.—A steamer is to be at Allahabad on the 15th January for Sir Charles Metcalfe, who may therefore be expected in Calcutta about the 1st of February.

A LADY ARTIST.—A Lady artist of very considerable talent has just arrived in India, and proposes to follow her profession here as a portrait painter. Her name is Belnos.

MILITARY BANK.—The Directors of the Military Bank have declared a further dividend of five per cent. Major Becher, having been elected a Manager of the Institution for the Cawnpore Division in succession to Major Hutchinson, and also for the Benares Division in succession to Dr. Corbyn, who will go out on the 31st December, has accepted the representation for Cawnpore. This places Captain Thomson among the retiring third list, and will consequently make it necessary to call on the Nussערabad Division to elect another Member.

Captain Fred. Birch, Superintendent of Police, has been elected by the Subscribers at the Presidency Station to succeed Captain Fitzgerald (who goes out of the General Management on the 31st proximo, under the new rules), but declines to sit on the ground that he dissents from these rules.

Sutherland, is appointed Government Pleader in the Sudder Dewanny, in the room of the late Moonshie Hossein Allee; and Mr. Bignell, is nominated Deputy to the Sudder Board of Revenue, in their capacity of Superintendent of the Legal Affairs. SURVEY OF THE RIVER.—Captain Lloyd, the Marine Surveyor General, in the H. C. brig Hatras, and Lieutenant Young, in the H. C. brig Mermuid, have proceeded down the river to complete the Survey of the Sandheads. It is said, that so much of the chart as has been made, is most complete and reflects great credit on the Surveyors.

THE COMPREHENSIVE STEAM PROSPECTUS.—The comprehensive steam prospectus has been honored with a subscription from Sir Henry Fane for five shares. The subscription list now shows upwards of 2,100 shares engaged in Bengal and about 100 at Madras.

THE STEAM TUG ASSOCIATION.—The Steam Tug Association determined, at their last half-yearly meeting, on the 18th of September, to double their capital in order to have the means of extending the number of their boats to five instead of two, provided the resolution to that effect, which was unanimously adopted at the meeting, should be approved by a majority of proprietors. A paper was accordingly circulated among them, and the result was, that all the shareholders assented to the proposal, and most of them availed themselves of the preference of subscription for new shares to the extent of the full number of shares they already held; so that out of the 200 shares required 150 are already filled up. The remaining 50, it has been determined to open to the public.

IRON STEAMERS.—Baboo Hurro Mohun Sen, of the Mint, has sent directions to England for two iron steamers, for river navigation, and is now casting about amongst his friends for share holders in the speculation.

DESERTION OF SEAMEN.—It appears that within a short time nineteen seamen have deserted from Her Majesty's Ship Larne, eight of whom have been apprehended, some at Serampore, some at Chinsurah and Chandernagore, and other places in the interior, and brought back to the Calcutta Police Office, but the other eleven, have not yet been found. Those captured in such cases, ascribe their motives for this illegal act of theirs to ill usage from one of the Lieutenants on board that ship.

NEW STEAMERS.—It is said that two more steamers are being constructed in England for the Indian Navy, and that one is expected at Bombay immediately.

THE SIR WM. WALLACE.—The Sir Wm. Wallace, experienced a very heavy gale of wind on the 15th and 16th of October, off the Island of St. Mathews, where she lost her top gallant masts, royal masts, jib-boom and flying jib-boom, and was after the gale becalmed for eight days.

which the goods were found, jumped overboard and effected their escape.

ROBBERY.—About 12 o'clock on the night of the 6th of November, current, the family dwelling house of one Sumboochunder Mitter, at Penhatty, in the 24 Pargannas, was stormed by a gang of about thirty dacoits. The amount of property carried off is estimated at about 2,000 Rs., which is very nearly the whole of what the poor pensioner possessed. Sumboochunder seeing the business of spoliation going on, ventured to threaten the robbers with a club, and the consequence was, that both his wrists were cut with a single blow of a sword. A servant of the family was also wounded, and it is stated that the man is not likely to get over the injury. The Police of the district has not yet been able to detect the offenders.

A daring robbery has also lately been perpetrated in the godowns of Baboo Chaito Singee, at Jorasanko; the property carried off being no less than twenty-two maunds and a half of indigo, valued at about 6,000 Rs.

FIRE.—On Sunday, the 28th, of Oct. at 5³⁰ P. M., a fire occurred in the south corner of the eastern extremity of the Durrumtoollah road. Its site was occupied by the sellers of gram-sticks, bamboos, et hoc genus omni, and their commodities, and has become celebrated for almost annually exhibiting similar scenes as that presented last Sunday. The fire is stated by some to have originated in the hut of a retailer of cotton, who accidentally let a lighted wick fall upon a heap of his merthandize; and by others, it is reported, as having sprung up in a liquor shop, where some inebriated men frolic ignited a cask of spirits. However, in whatever way it might have originated, it soon seized upon the combustible materials around it, which, with some twenty huts, it soon reduced to a heap of cinders, and then, without extending its ravages further, gradually subsided until it became extinct.

A fire happened at Sham Bazar, between six and seven o'clock on the evening of the 7th instant. It broke out in the house of a straw merchant, and the property destroyed by the accident consisted of a straw golah and six thatched houses.

The unusual spectacle of fires during the cold season, has been often observed during the present week. Several fires, other than those mentioned above, have occurred in and about the city, and some lives have fallen sacrifices to the flames.

SCOTT'S COMPENDIUM—THE DAILY NEWS.—Scott's Compendium on the 1st of November, changed the name of its news-sheet to the Daily News.

DEATH OF THE KING OF OUPH.—Native letters from Lucknow mention that the result of investigations conducted by the Resident and Hakeem Mehdi, into the circumstances of the late King's death, is that it was occasioned by poison, a female who administered the draught having confessed the deed. It is added that Saubhaz Alee Khan, the peishcar of the former vizier, is now in prison on suspicion, and that matters will so remain until the arrival of the Governor-General.

SUPPOSED MURDER.—The body of a boy named Roopchand, was found on the plain near Cooley Bazar about seven o'clock on the night of the 7th instant, and sent to the Police Hospital. Dr. Bain, the Police Surgeon, examined the body post mortem, but there appeared no marks of violence on it. The parents of the deceased stated that he left home about ten o'clock in the morning with a pair of silver bangles on his wrists, and four maudoolies of the same metal about his neck, and they suspect him therefore to have been murdered on account of his ornaments. A coroner's jury was impanelled on the body of the deceased and returned a verdict of found dead.

MURDER.—On the 7th instant, a goat-herd, having a quarrel with his wife, occasioned by some jealous suspicions of her conduct, stabbed her and cut her throat. The wounds were inflicted in Chowringhee, and the woman died shortly after receiving them. The criminal is in custody.

DESTITUTION.—Two instances of women being constrained to sell their children through their destitution, have been detected in Calcutta during the month.

GUNPOWDER MANUFACTORY.—Permission has been granted to Messrs. Edam and Co., to establish a gunpowder manufactory in the Twenty-four Pargunnas.

DOBAH SUGAR WORKS.—Mr. Blake, the founder of that extensive establishment, the Dobah Sugar Works, has come out, to set the mill agoing at its maximum, or, in other words, has made arrangements for manufacturing as much sugar as possibly can be made at the establishment.

BURMESE OFFICER.—An attaché of the Burmese Court, the High Steward, has come to Calcutta in the Flora Macdonald, with fifty thousand rupees of the royal treasure at his disposal, to make sundry purchases for the Burmese King, and amongst the rest a steamer. The King remains firm in his determination of breaking through all treaties with us; but no actual violence has been committed on our subjects or territory, though active preparations were making by the Burmese.

THE COLES.—The Coles have again rebelled; and their insurrection is attributed to starvation, the crops having been greatly retarded for want of rain.

KISHNAGUR RACES.—The subscriptions to the native gentleman's cup having amounted to sixteen hundred rupees, instead of 8, as advertised in the prospectus of the Kishnagur races, the following alterations have been made in the terms of the race, namely, "added to a sweepstakes of 25 gold-mohurs each, half forfeit, if declared the day before the race" instead of "ten," as in the original terms, and as every one seems to complain of the petty cup race from the difficulty of procuring good rats, the terms of that race have been altered also, to be for Arabs that never won before the Calcutta Meeting of 1838, 8-7 each, beats 14 mile, entrance 10 gold-mohurs.

SERIOUS AFFRAY.—A very serious affray recently took place near Chandernagore, which had nearly ended very tragically. Some officers of Her Majesty's 9th Regiment have, it seems, had a narrow escape of falling victims to the savage ferocity of an excited multitude of natives at Chandernagore. Four officers of the 9th, stationed at Chinsurah, Captain D. — Lieutenants B. H. and C., started on Friday afternoon on a shooting excursion. They proceeded along the banks of the river until they had, without being aware of it, passed the southern boundary of the Hooghly Station, and got within the French territory. They had proceeded on until they came to a large chur connected with the bank of the river, not keeping together but straggling. They were wandering about on this chur nearly opposite a temple on the bank, when some natives, of whom a great many were looking at them, pointed to some boys which were running about on the chur. The officers thinking that the natives meant them to fire at the pigs, did so, and shot three of them. At first no notice appeared to be taken of this proceeding, but presently a crowd of natives rushed down the bank armed with lathis and shouting "hurri bole! hurri bole!" The officers were not only taken by surprise, but being unarmed, were not in a condition to defend themselves and were unwilling to fire, their guns being loaded with ball. Lieutenant H. was saved by the fortunate interposition of some of the Police, and young Lieutenant C. by some means made his escape into the Hooghly territory, where he was safe. The crowd rushed upon Lieutenant B., knocked him down with their heavy lathis, and beat him in a most unmerciful manner, his head being cut open down to the skull, and his body covered with severe contusions. Capt. D. was knocked down by a large brick-bat, which for the time completely stunned him; the natives then fell upon him dreadfully with their lathis, stamped upon his chest, inflicted a severe wound on one of his legs, and in short seemed bent on murdering him. Being a powerful man, as soon as he recovered from the effect of the blow with the brick-bat, he struggled desperately; but the natives seized him and dragged him up the bank towards the temple, and succeeded in getting him there, although in the way he knocked several of them down. When they got him into the temple their object seemed to be to immolate him on the shrine; for a man attempted repeatedly to stab him in the heart, and in fending off the knife, Capt. D.'s fingers have been severely cut. That he would have been murdered there, had not some respectable natives come up and interfered, there can be no doubt. They prevailed upon the people to desist from their purpose; but the wretches, even in acceding to the request, manifested further brutality, for instead of carrying him, they actually dragged him by the heels with his head upon the ground, for nearly a mile towards Chandernagore, and when he was at length released by the Police and brought to that place, he was nearly suffocated with the rush of blood to his head. Capt. D. and Lieut. B., the other officer so severely injured, were brought to the house of Monsieur Thiers, where they received the kindest attention not only from that gentleman, but from the ladies of his family and some other ladies of Chandernagore, who came in and also assisted the Doctor of the station in dressing their wounds, and tied with each other in the sympathy they evinced for the sufferers. Nothing could exceed the kindness they experienced. Their depositions were taken in due form, and every effort made to arrest some of the leaders of this savage and cowardly assault, many of whom are now in custody. The two officers so severely injured, were taken into Chinsurah and are both doing well.

ROADS.—Lieut. T. H. Sale, of Engineers, is appointed Assistant to the Executive Engineer of the 18th or Dacca Division, for the purpose of aiding in the examination of the road between Sittah and Assam. Lieut. J. G. Allardice, of Engineers, is appointed to survey and improve the road through Cachar to Manipore, rejoining for this purpose the 5th company of Sappers and proceeding in command of it to Sylhet. This officer is also placed under the control of the District Engineer Officer, who, for the present, will have the general direction of this and similar local works.

NAVY REGISTRY OFFICE FOR SEAWEN.—It is said, that an attempt is about to be made to establish a Registry Office for seamen, the want of which has long been felt, the shipping interest, the necessary substitute for finding the employment of crimps, in whose hands a poor sailor often sinks his character as well as his money.

AGRA.—The Customs collections of Agra for the past half year from May to October, amount to rupees 4,30,887-13-5 against 3,97,672-14-9 in the corresponding period of last year, being an increase of rupees 33,214-15-1. The improvement is almost entirely on salt; the export of salt during the year before last having depressed the Ghazepore market in 1886-7. Prices have since rallied from the decrease of stock, and led to a corresponding increase of export in the present season. The Raja of Canada, Gungadhar Rao, is now at Agra, to prosecute his suit before the Lieutenant-Governor and the Governor-General, for a diamond sugartha or jacket valued by the family at a million and thirty thousand pounds sterling, and now in the hands of his agent of Benares. It was formerly deposited with Madhoojee Kala, a Benares Saroff, for some repairs, when Nagpore was reduced by the British Government. The Ex-Raja is said to have been the owner of a diamond jacket, valued at three millions of money, which was also at Benares at the same period, and is still, it is said, in deposit at the same place.

A most daring dacoity was perpetrated in Agra on the evening of the 30th ultimo. About 7 o'clock p. m. a party of men went to the chowkee of the Lohar ke Mundee, and represented themselves to be the "Lord sahib's moofis folk." Owing to the prevailing distress, such numbers of people being abroad caused no suspicion, and no particular notice was taken of them. Gradually the party increased in numbers, and throwing off their disguise drew their swords and wounded four of the five burkundauzes stationed at the chowkee and leaving a guard there they proceeded to the house of Beer Bhull Chowdree, broke open the inner doors, the outer not having been guarded, and it is said carried off some 3,000 or 4,000 rupees. One man, who was in the upper part of the house, came down and was immediately killed by several sword cuts, his head being nearly severed from his body. One of the Muhajun's people was also slightly wounded. On an uproar being made, after the dacoits had left the place, the Lieut.-Governor's body guard, whose picquets were close by the scene, came down, but too late to be of service, the dacoits having effected their escape. Mr. Robinson, Assistant to the Superintendent for the suppression of Thuggee, succeeded, however, in recovering some property in the pursuit.

HATRASS.—Contracts have been entered into for delivery in June next of grain at 20 seers per rupee, with 10 per cent. advance, that is about, 10 rupees for 50 maunds, the bazar rate now being 16 seers per rupee. The Furruckabad shraffs connected with Hatrass have been fined 50 rupees for keeping up the native dāk.

DELHI.—Several daring outrages have been committed on the Jumna recently. Of eighteen grain boats, thirteen are said to have been pillaged; five were protected by the Bulamghur authorities, and with little loss reached the ghaut at Shahjahanpore, where a large number of the inhabitants of the districts of Bulundshur, Bulamghur, and Pulwal, headed by their respective Zameendars attempted to plunder them, but were prevented, by the timely arrival of the Pulwal Thana-dar with a force of muzkoories. The multitude then attacked and plundered a budgerow, which was occupied by Lieutenant Waterfield, 38th N. I., and his lady. At an early hour on the 10th ultimo, whilst the boat was slowly progressing, a villager or traveller called out to the manjee and recommended him to return to a thannah, which had been left a short distance behind, and not to attempt to proceed, as five grain boats had been robbed two days previous, at a place towards, which the budgerow was advancing, and it was known, that, the plunderers were hovering near the spot. No attention was paid to this warning and as the budgerow was passing between Mackunpore and Sweepole on the right side of the Jumna, it was surrounded by a party of Gojurs. Lieutenant Waterfield endeavoured to make a compromise, and told them that as he had heard that they were really suffering from distress, and were in a degree forced to commit acts of depredation, he would willingly give them all the money he had in the budgerow, which he thought was the only part of his property that could be of the slightest use to them. The parley lasted for some time, till at length, the Gojurs were tired, and commenced their pillage by ripping open the manjee's pillow case, out of which divers gold-mohurs and rupees fell upon the deck; after this, they entered the front room of the budgerow by the door and windows. Lieutenant Waterfield tried to frighten them, by presenting a pistol, when one of them coolly offered his breast, and told him to fire, adding, you will kill one, but our men will afterwards kill ten of yours. The Lieutenant did not pull the trigger, and when one of the attacking party tried to wrench the pistol from his hand, he lifted the pan, and dropped the priming on the floor before he resigned it. In the mean time, about 300 persons had surrounded the budgerow, and commenced a regular revelry of mischief. They broke the legs and smashed the lid of Mr. Waterfield's piano, ripped the bedding and damask off the couches, smashed the furniture, cut open the patent spring cushions of a new buggy, completely shivered a looking glass, and after removing all the plate, jewels, and valuables they could lay hands on, effectually destroyed whatever was too cumbersome or useless to them! The property stolen or destroyed is, at the lowest estimate, valued at 11,000 rs. The local authorities are exerting themselves to apprehend the offenders, and have already succeeded in arresting many. Lieut. Waterfield's tailor left the deep impression of a club on one man's head and in another's eye, but knowing that resistance was useless, and might provoke further violence, Lieutenant Waterfield ordered his servants not to offer any. Nearly all the valuables have been recovered by the Police.

A murder, attended with shocking circumstances, was perpetrated in the Military Cantonment of Delhi, on the 22nd ultimo. A mehtar, killed a woman of the same cast by inflicting a mortal wound with a knife or sword in her abdomen and severing the jugular vein. The wretched murderer concluded the tragedy by cutting his own throat. The woman died instantly, her assailant was immediately removed to the Hospital of the 38th regiment N. I., where he expired in the course of the night.

MURNAUL.—A melancholy affair occurred at this Station, on the evening of the 15th ultimo. A slight misunderstanding took place in the morning of that day, between Captain Keating of H. M. 13th L. I., and Captain Hughes of the Artillery. All attempts at effecting a reconciliation having failed, though anxiously pressed by the friend of one of the two parties, the principals met in the evening, and at the first fire, Captain Hughes fell. His adversary's ball had entered his right side, passed through the liver, bowels and spleen, and lodged in the left side where it was found after death. The unfortunate gentleman had strength sufficient to drive home in his buggy, and lingered until 9 o'clock p. m. next day when he expired. The affair, it is said, presents some unusual features, which will necessarily lead to an investigation. Lieut. Jennings, H. M. 13th L. I., was the friend of Captain Keating, and Lieut. Timbrell, Artillery, of Captain Hughes.

USOOK-THAL.—Hostilities have begun between Sirdar Amur Sing and Sirdar Nehal Sing, sons of the late Sirdar Fateh Sing: the former in the employ of the former made an attack upon the latter of the latter, and carried off property to a large amount. On hearing this the troops of Nehal Sing hastened to retaliate, the injury, a skirmish ensued, and it was a dreadful one, as no less than fifty men were killed and as many wounded on both sides. The sowers of Amur Sing were at last signally defeated by the troops of his brother. Amur Sing was at their head, and being routed, was obliged to take refuge in the Fort of Sooltanpore; which in consequence, been besieged by Nehal Sing's troops.

EXTRAORDINARY DELIVERY.—A woman of the Koonbee caste, living in Boodhiwar Penth, was delivered of three children about fourteen days ago. She was brought to bed of two boys at first, and a few minutes after, of a daughter. The children are all doing well.

DISTRICTS OF KHANDAIS GIVEN OVER TO SCINDIA.—It is hinted that some districts of Khandeish have lately been given over to Scindia. It is said we hold them till a certain debt due to us by Scindia should be paid up, and which payment was made some seven years ago; since then we managed those districts and paid the rents to the Gwalior ruler. It is further asserted that the immediate cause which led to the surrender of those districts was, Major Sutherland's having applied to the Gwalior Court to raise a contingent of horse on the same footing as that we have in the Nizam's Army. The request could not well be refused, but a plea of poverty was thrust forward, which could only be obviated by the surrender of the Khandeish districts, and the Supreme Government, it is said, without consulting that of Bombay, gave directions for the delivering up of those districts accordingly.

SEEKUR.—Major Forster, after bringing to a successful conclusion the affairs of Seekur, received information that a party of 400 horse from the Jodepore territories, composed mostly of Kuzzaks, had plundered a caravan of camels proceeding from Bhasse towards Ajmere, just within the Shekawatee boundary. A risallah of the Shekawatee horse was sent in pursuit, which, after a long run, succeeded in tracing the plunderers into the village of Bunwassee, where they possessed a tolerably strong fortress. The horsemen could do nothing more, and Major Forster proceeded in person with six companies of Infantry, a couple of guns, and two additional risallahs, to Mawa, and sent notice to the Jodepore Illaquadar demanding redress. Of four different applications, no notice was taken; to the fifth, a reply was sent, stating, that the Illaquadar's troops were three years in arrears and not under control, and that he therefore could do nothing. Major Forster immediately invested the fort of Bunwassee, which had kept the Sawars at bay, but surrendered without resistance when the guns appeared. Here he had the good fortune to recover one of the plundered camels, and also seized about 50 Kuzzaks, including 14 relatives of the celebrated Dongjee. The fort was levelled to the ground, wells filled up, and this notorious nest of villains entirely destroyed. From thence, detachments were sent to Bererwa, Eerwa, Bapa, Shewa, and Askake-Dance, all being bands of brigands with strong defences, where traces of the Kuzzaks were discoverable. The whole of these places were forthwith destroyed, and some of the stolen property recovered. About 130 of these villains were seized at different points, together with their arms, ammunition &c. As some of these villages were within three kos of the Head Quarters of the Jodopoh General, and his army, Dena Nath, the chief, thought proper, at last to come and wait on Major Forster and expressed his satisfaction for the punishment the Kuzzaks had received. When asked his reasons for allowing such scoundrels to congregate and commit depredations within gun shot of his forces, he replied that his authority was limited, the troops unpaid, and finally, that the last Kamdar, Jogun Sing, was in league with the Kuzzaks, and had carried off 40,000 rupees as his share of plunder.

LAHORE.—An intelligence reported that Dost. Mohammed was engaged in active military preparations; but his son Akbar Khan had made himself so unpopular, by oppressing the people of Cabul, that numbers were deserting that country.

The Maharaja enquired of Konwar Peshora Sing, whether he would oppose Konwar Cashmiera Sing. He replied, that if he were commander, he would willingly fight against foreign foes, but not against his brethren.

Rajah Dhyas Sing mentioned that the person he had appointed to attend upon Captain Barnes, had been dismissed as useless, and inattentive, and that he had despatched another person to fill the situation.

CABUL.—It is stated that the suzer or agent of the Shah of Eran has arrived near Cabul, with rich gifts and 40,000 Rs. in money for presentation to Dost Mohammed.

Captain Burnes has arrived at Cabul.

Dost Mohammed is perplexed with adverse councils some of his advisers recommending his having recourse to the British for assistance whilst other urge that he should form an alliance with the Ruler of Eran. It is said the Chief of Cabul leans more to the former recommendation.

BHURTPOR.—From this city, the inhabitants are emigrating in numbers, on account of the distressing scarcity. A large body of its residents, having applied to the Raja, for the purpose of having the bunniahs restrained in their avarice, he sent for the Konwar and desired him to settle a fair price upon the grain which belonged to bunniahs and divide, by a regular distribution amongst the distressed, a portion of the sarkar's stores.

CONCAN.—It is stated, that this small province—not of the Dekhun, but in Thibet—has revolted from the Chinese Government, to whom it was tributary.

MURDURABAD.—An attempt to assassinate the Nuwab Sooraj Ood Dowlah, an Ameer of rank and wealth, was lately attempted by a body of discontented Putans, who, to the number of fifty, forced themselves in the hall where the Nuwab was holding a durbar, and endeavoured to cut him down. A few of his Arab retainers who were present, kept the foe at bay till the Nuwab escaped to another apartment. On assistance arriving, nine of the Putans were cut down on the spot. The Nizam on hearing of his attack, sent a detachment of his native troops to keep the peace, and protect the Nuwab.

KERAT.—Mirza Jehangheer Shah, the son of King Kamran of Herat, attended by a force composed of cavalry and infantry, went to Khorassan, and having called together the Chiefs and Zumeendars, and held a council, he mentioned that it was generally known, that Mohammed Shah, King of Eran, had neglected all other affairs of his Government, and was consolidating all his resources to enable him to affect the conquest of Herat, and asked what advice they had to offer. The Rindars of Khorassan replied, saying, "once before Mirza Shah Abbas, the father of the present King, led a large army into Khorassan, en route to Herat; we then prevented his getting there, and will now assist you."

PESHAWAR.—It appears by letters received from Peshawar, that a large gang of robbers attacked the encampment of the Sikh troops stationed at that place while they were quite unprepared to meet them, in the dead of night, and they began to plunder it. The sepoy tried to put a stop to the progress of the robbery, but were unsuccessful. At this time the Sowars under the command of Jemadar Khosial Sing and Mr. Ventura proceeded to the assistance of the sepoy and succeeded in putting the spoilers to flight; many of whom in their retreat were wounded and some killed. Some of them were captured alive and hung from the branches of trees on the highway sides. But in spite of this the robberies on the frontiers of Peshawar, instead of decreasing, are stated to be rapidly increasing in number.

FORT JAHANGIREZ AT KUSUF-ZEAN.—It is stated by people arrived from Kusuf-zean, a place about twenty-five kos to the east of Peshawar, which has been in the possession of the Nauzeams of Peshawar for years, that it had lately been attacked by Futeh Khan, Punjettur-walla. The people in the fort made the best defence in their power; but their number being too small to cope with the enemy, the latter got the better of them. A portion of the enemy's troops got into the fort by scaling the walls; and after plundering the inmates of every thing they had, they made their escape to the mountains before they could get any assistance from Peshawar.

GWALIOR.—A large portion of Scindea's army has already proceeded to the southward, and the rest may ere long be compelled to follow; but the prices of grain have fallen a little in the Gwalior camp, eleven seers of wheat being obtainable for a rupee. The crops in the Nagpore country, in the valley of the Nerbudda and of the Betwa, are the finest ever known; so also in the Bhopal country, where grain is selling at a maund for a rupee.

MADRAS.

EXPEDITIOUS WORK.—The wife of a soldier of Her Majesty's 45th regiment, who had gone to Madras to make preparations for her approaching confinement, was suddenly taken in labour, on the 25th ultimo, in a palanquin, on her return to Poonamallee, and safely delivered of a fine girl. A Medical man happened to be close at hand, who gave the necessary assistance; and the woman proceeded on her journey, "as well as could be expected," within a quarter of an hour from the time of her delivery.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER.—On the morning of the 13th ultimo as the regimental L. C. on returning from brigade exercise was forming on its own parade, a private named Hooman Khan fired from his station in the ranks a pistol at Lieutenant Porter, the Adjutant of the regiment. At the time Lieutenant Porter was standing on the right of the line, marking the point of entry, and the regiment was in column of threes left in front. Hooman Khan was the left of the front rank Section of threes and consequently fired across two men, viz: the right hand man and centre one of the front rank. After the discharge of his pistol he instantly rushed out of the ranks, drew the other pistol, and commenced circling his horse in rear of the regiment. A party was immediately after him and he was brought back. On being questioned as to whom he fired at, he replied that the Adjutant was his enemy. When confined he grew so troublesome that they were forced to place him in irons. On an examination of the pistols it was found that the last he drew out was primed but there was nothing in the barrel; on looking however into the holster pipe from which it was taken, a ball with about a charge of power was found at the bottom. The other pistol was the one he fired at Lieutenant Porter, who felt the wind of the cartridge pass close to his face but the report was as that from a blank cartridge, and the opinion is that, owing to the riding and charging about in the morning's exercise, the ball must have got so loosened as to have fallen out when the man removed it from the holster pipe. On examining his pouch, his cartridges were found all correct. A Medical committee assembled as soon as possible on Hussain Khan and came to the opinion that he was of unsound mind.

MORTALITY.—One of the officers, of the 63d Regt., Captain Fairclough, has died of apoplexy, and three men have fallen victims to the cholera, and a fourth man is so seriously ill, that a Surgeon has been left in charge.

CONVICTION OF A NATIVE FOR PERJURY.—On the 14th ultimo Elliah Chitty was convicted of perjury, and sentenced to seven years' transportation. Mr. Teed, his Counsel, objected to the sentence, and the Court, to give time for consideration, adjourned the Sessions till the 16th when Mr. Teed took the following objections.

1st. That as the indictment did not conclude "against the form of the Statute" or "against the Laws", the prisoner could not be transported, the Statutes only giving power to transport.

2d. That the Court have no power to transport persons convicted of perjury. That the 2d Geo. 2, c. 25., which is the first act in England making perjury a transportable offence, did not extend to this country. And that the Act of 39 and 40, Geo. 3, c. 79, was repealed by the 9th Geo. 4, c. 4, c. 74, so far as it related to the transportation of offenders, and as there is no act in existence empowering the Court to sentence persons convicted of perjury to transportation, the Court could only direct the penalty the common law inflicted.

The judges being in doubt, gave the person the benefit of that doubt, and he was then brought to the bar of the Court and sentenced to pay a fine of 100 pagodas to the Crown—to be imprisoned two years, and be further imprisoned until the fine is paid.

MURDER OF A SUBADAR BY A NAIGUE.—A shocking occurrence took place at Secunderabad on the 10th ultimo. The subidar major of the Golundauze, a native officer much respected in the artillery, and of forty-five years' exemplary service, was shot on the parade by a naigue of the same corps, while in the act of inspecting the company. The ruffian was at the same time within three feet of his unfortunate victim whose death was instantaneous. The whole inciting cause to this murderous deed appears to have been, that the subidar major had found it necessary the day preceeding to award to this naigue some slight punishment, a few hours extra duty, which occurring on the last day of the Dusserah, had necessarily prevented his participating in the amusements, and thence aroused all the evil passions of his nature.

ARRACK TASTERS.—Government have evinced a further anxiety to improve the condition of European soldiers in India, by discontinuing the practice of employing the men as tasters of arrack in the canteens.

THE WEATHER.—Accounts from Bangalore give a very unfavourable report of the weather in that neighbourhood; and similar complaints have been received from other parts of Mysore. Rain was much required, and the general appearance of the country was very different from what might be expected at this season of the year.

A NEW BOTANICAL WORK.—Dr. Wight has a new botanical work in course of preparation, to be principally directed to the illustration of the agricultural and economical branches of that interesting science, and to be illustrated with numerous coloured plates of the useful and ornamental plants of India.

SEVERE GALE.—On the 31st of August and 2nd of November, Madras was visited with a severe gale, which caused the loss of the brig Ayr and Delight, the schooner Hebe the grab Dowlut Persaud, and the ship Thalia, which were driven ashore. No lives were lost.

The schooner Hebe is expected to be got off the beach at Cavelong.

The barque Tenasserim, Captain Spooner, sailed from Coringa on the 30th of October for Madras, but having met with very bad weather she has put into Pondicherry with the loss of her foremast and the main-mast sprung.

SPRIOUS ACCIDENT.—On the 1st instant, a boat containing about twenty persons, was capsize whilst crossing the Coorum river, and seven of the passengers were drowned.

SECUNDERABAD.—THE CHOLERA.—The weather at Secunderabad from the middle of Oct. to the 27th, had been very wet; but with only drizzling rain. The cholera had entirely subsided at Secunderabad, as well as the bowel complaints of that dreadful kind which baffled all the ingenuity of art and which destroyed so many men of Her Majesty's 55th Regt. Dysentery had been succeeded by fever and ague, but not of a dangerous kind. It is said that cholera still prevails at Ja-wash and Nagpore.

BOMBAY.

MR. NORRIS.—It is stated that a letter has been lately received from England, in which it is mentioned that Mr. Norris, Chief Secretary to the Government, is to be appointed a member of the Legislative Council of India, in the room of Mr. Anderson, who is expected soon to take his place at the Bombay Council Board.

BURNING OF A MAGAZINE.—On the morning of the 23rd of October, about ½ past 8 o'clock, an alarm was given that one of the government powder magazines at Mazagon had been blown up. The Police and other available force immediately repaired to the spot, and discovered that one of the charcoal magazines had been burnt to the ground. On enquiry the men there stated that the charcoal magazine was locked on the night of the 19th instant and on the 23rd, when they went to open it, it immediately took fire. Seven men are severely injured by the accident, and one or two of them are not expected to live.

RESIDENT AT BARODA.—Mr. Williams, Resident and Political Agent at Baroda for many years, recently died on his way to Bombay, on board a paltimar. Mr. Sutherland, late Member of Council, is talked of as his successor.

THE GOVERNOR.—The Governor left Bombay on the 24th instant for Poona, and now there is in that presidency only one counsellor, on whose shoulders all minor matters will fall. Mr. Ironside is at the Hills, or somewhere else away from Bombay, and the Commander-in-Chief has gone to sea.

RUNJEET SING'S TRADE.—It is said, that Runjeet Singh, is about to send about thirty-five boats, laden with the produce of the Punjab, to Bombay to try the market.

BURMAH.

Intelligence to the 8th instant, has been received from Akyah. The latest accounts received at that station from Ava stated, that the King had raised 30,000 fighting men kept in regular pay—a large force, but one portion of which is occupied in watching Moulmain, another all the passes to and from Arracan, and the third with Tharawaddie guarding the old King and his son—of the latter of whom, Tharawaddie has great apprehensions, but whom he durst not molest or injure, well aware that his subjects would highly resent such a proceeding. It would appear that the Burmese monarch is endeavouring to gain over all the independent Chiefs on the Assam territory. One of these who has some 18,000 followers, and who pays tribute to China, has agreed to join the Burmese when Tharawaddie's plans shall arrive at maturity.

MOULMAIN.—Colonel Burney, the Resident, arrived at Moulmain from Rangoon on the 15th ultimo, with his family and suite, and left for Calcutta again on the 21st. The inhabitants presented a "flattering address" to the gallant and talented Colonel on the occasion. Dr. Dayfield remains at Rangoon in charge of the Residency. There were no further indications of war, but considerable detriment to trade, resulted from the state of uncertainty in which matters were placed. The King of Ava, it is said, continues resolved to cut all political connection with us, and for the present, it rests with the Governor-General to make the next move. If he continues to hesitate and consider, the Majesty of Ava will most probably be encouraged to go on, and see what more he can do with impunity.

Tharawaddie still continues contumacious, and refuses to acknowledge all treaties entered into by his brother; but he has somewhat altered his tone since he became aware of Military preparations being made by the British. Colonel Burney, it is said, by desire of the Government in Calcutta, is about to depart in search of the Governor-General, in order that he may communicate to him the real state of affairs in Burmah, and enable his Lordship to take decided measures touching our relations with the Burmese power.

CEYLON.

serious accident.—When the salute was firing at Galle on the occasion of the Senior Puisne Justice's leaving that station for Matara, on the Southern circuit, a gun accidentally went off in the act of charging, by which one Artillery man was killed, his side being blown away; another had an arm very seriously injured, so as, in all likelihood, to require amputation, whilst the thumb of a third, who served the vent, was shattered.

SINGAPORE.

A Singapore Free Press of the 5th October, received during the month, announces the demise of the Singapore Chronicle.

CHINA

Canton papers to the 16th of September have been received during the week. The rigorous measures instituted by the Chinese authorities against the opium trade, seem to be pursued with increasing severity. The receiving ships had been annoyed by being moved from place to place, and ultimately constrained to depart to Hong-Kong, a port about forty miles to the eastward of Cap-Sing Moon, after an application on the subject had been made to Her Majesty's Superintendent, which caused him to quit Canton for Macao. More edicts had been fulminated against the importation of the drug, and it is said, that in consequence of the Peking authorities being cognizant of the difficulty which existed of getting the inferior Mandarin to co-operate with them in suppressing the smuggling trade, they had recommended the Emperor "to do away with the whole of the foreign trade, as the only means of preventing opium from being brought into the Empire." The Viceroy's order for the compulsory departure of the opium ships not having been complied with, and the Hong Merchants having reported to him that the vessels had gone, he threw their representation at their heads, with an observation, that his order for the departure of these vessels must be obeyed and not evaded, so it appears that nothing short of the entire disappearance of the opium ships will now satisfy the Chinese Government, and it was expected that Captain Elliott, the Superintendent, would be applied to on the subject, with a threat that the trade would be stopped, unless the orders of the Government were complied with. Chin, the Admiral, in an edict, in which he intimates that he is ordered to chase away all opium ships as well as those which do not go up to Canton to trade, threatens, on the indication of obstinateness on the part of the foreigners, to place along the boundaries of the Chinese empire, "thousands of ships of war, numerous as the stars, and disposed in array like a chess board," which formidable squadron, it is supposed, the "lion headed" foreigners will be unable to resist.

Notwithstanding the unfavourable aspect of affairs however, some transactions in the drug and taken place along the coast, principally of Malacca. The last quotations were, Patna, old, per chest 790, ditto, new, 655, a 660. Benares, old, 740, ditto, new, 650 a 655 Malacca, 500 a 510. Turkey, 520.

The Hing-tae's affairs still remained unadjusted. The foreign merchants had petitioned the Governor on the subject, and received an evasive reply. An ineffectual attempt had been made by the American ship Morrison to land some shipwrecked Japanese in Japan. The vessel, which was unarmed, was fired on, in a cowardly and treacherous manner, at the ports she visited, and compelled to leave them, without effecting her object.

A letter from a correspondent, dated Canton 21st September, says, "The Maita, Vinc, from Liverpool, was lost on the Paracels on the night of the 30th of August, the Captain, officers and crew—with the exception of one man who was drowned—came up to Canton in their boats."

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From the Bengal Hurkaru Price Current, Nov 25.)

INDIGO.—No sale has been reported during the whole of this week, and no price has yet been declared. The market is expected to open at grades, descending from Co.'s rupees 210 for best quality.

RAW SILK is enquired for, and little of good quality is in the market, but prices remain low in consequence of the little encouragement the Europe markets afford.

SILK PRICE GOODS.—In these the demand continues principally for Corahs of choice and good qualities for the English market. The prices of the day exhibit an improvement throughout the assortments.

SALTPETRE continues to be enquired for, chiefly for shipments to England and France, but the market is almost bare of qualities suitable for exportation. The prices of the day show a slight improvement on Ghassere and Chappreh.

INDIA has been in some enquiry during the week, both on native account, and for shipments to England and the prices are reported at a further advance.

Tea.—Shell Loe of ordinary quality has engaged attention during the week for the English and French markets, but we have no change in prices to notice. Nothing doing in Loe Dye.

GRAIN.—The favorable accounts of the crops in the interior have affected the prices of almost all descriptions of grain, and we understand a small quantity of the Patna Rice has already arrived in the market. The demand for the trade continues limited.

WHEATMILLION.—The market is almost bare, and the article has considerably advanced in price.

CHINTZES.—The market for these fabrics continues inactive, and the prices remain without alteration.

WHITE COTTONS.—Some activity has prevailed in this trade during the week, and sales to a fair extent have been effected chiefly in cambrics, jaconets, books and lappets, at former prices.

MIXED TWIST.—The demand has been limited this week, a sale of 20 bales No. 40 being the only transaction reported. The prices of the assortments remain without alteration.

URKEY-RED AND OTHER DYED YARNS, are also in limited enquiry.

WOOLLENS.—The market with regard to demand and prices.

COPPER.—The market is inactive, and the prices of the day exhibit a material reduction throughout the assortments.

IRON.—A few sales of English flat, bar and bolt, were reported with the occurrences of the week. The prices of the day show an improvement on Swedish flat and bar, and a slight reduction on hoop.

LEAD.—A sale of sheet is reported at a slight advance in price.

SPINSTER without sale. QUICKSILVER continues to advance in price, and is in very good enquiry.

DUM-DUM THEATRE.

The amateurs made a bold attempt to play Buckstone's celebrated drama of "The Wreck Ashore" on Friday evening, which met with tolerable success. The first act was hailed by peals of laughter and well deserved applause; the actors were perfect in their words, the stage business had been evidently rehearsed with care, and the new scenery very pretty and appropriate. One scene in particular, the Essex Flats by moonlight, reflects high credit on the artist; the clever arrangement of light and shade gave it a chaste reality quite surprising to our eyes so long unaccustomed to dioramic effects. We recommend this scene to be again exhibited in the next melodrama and the scene painters and machinists, amateur and professional, of the Chowringhee Dramatic Society, to condescend to the opportunity of improving by it.

As "The Wreck Ashore" was also attempted a few months past by the Chowringhee amateurs, and the plot is generally known to the old and new world of theatricals, we refrain from any remarks on its merits, merely indulging in a hint to provincial managers generally to rehearse the second act ten times at least, or from the rapid change of scenery and multiplicity of properties, hitch and fail it must.

Captain Grampus, Marmaduke Magog, and Jemmy Starling, were the favorites of the evening, though equal credit is due to the representatives of the characters less prominently thrown out to the attention of the audience.

Captain Grampus,—Price, is a melodramatic gem; his conception good, his "action to the word," but he injures the general effect of his acting by sudden and senseless transitions of voice with hysterical accompaniments; these were much in fashion at the Surrey and Coburg before reason had a seat there, since which they have reformed altogether.

If Mr. Price corrects this propensity we think him entitled to rank as king of cut-throats in these parts.

Mrs. Ely looked exceedingly pretty, and dressed the character well. She possesses many of the qualifications requisite for an actress,—good figure, pretty face, pleasing and ingratiating stage manners. There is a small jar on the sensibilities at times, from her not asperating so bloodily as might be wished; by a little attention to correct this "défaut" she would be an acquisition of importance to any theatre in India.

Mrs. Lee, as Bella, deserves praise for her naïve and unaffected performance.

In the second act, some accident occurred to the machinery, and in consequence an apology was made for a temporary delay. This evidently disconcerted the dramatic personæ, and the business got a little confused towards the fall of the curtain.

The guns throughout the piece, (though at Dum-Dum,) refused to go off, as obstinately as at Chowringhee. This malheur rather spoilt the interest of the scene in which Alce, Mrs. Ely, intended to shoot the smuggler. She fell to a most insignificant flash in the pan, the shriek which should have followed the report was in alto relieve to the flash, and the gravity of Her Majesty's lieges disturbed at the wrong moment.

The action in the last scene was distinguished by inaptitude to the legitimate style of dramatic warfare, to wit, one 'two! three! two up, and two under." There was a large party of combatants, but they could not get their swords to click, and the excitement of the skirmish was thereby considerably diminished. We think, Captain Grampus from his swashing stage department understands this art; let him imitate his ruffians for the next melo-drama.

The pit and gallery were well filled, the boxes rather thin. We observed a sprinkling of Calcutta fashionables, who appeared by no means to regret the exertion of the evening drive, and it was settled nem. con., that melo-drama at Dum-Dum is the right thing.—Hurkaru, December 4.

CHOWRINGHEE THEATRE.

Of all Shakespeare's Tragedies this is undoubtedly the best. It is the master-piece of the master-poet. The character of Hamlet may be a more perfect consummation than the character of Othello; but the play of Hamlet is infinitely inferior to it. However, they are different in kind; and Lear, which alone of the remaining dramas is worthy to form a triad with these two, indicates still further the many-sidedness of Shakespeare's genius. "Lear," observes S. T. Coleridge, pre-eminently the most subtle and the most profound critic of the age," is the most tremendous effort of Shakespeare as a poet; Hamlet as a philosopher and meditator; and Othello is the union of the two. There is something gigantic and unformed in the former two; but in the latter every thing assumes its due place and proportion, and the whole mature powers of his mind are displayed in admirable equilibrium."

Perhaps there has been more criticism lavished upon Hamlet than upon Othello; but the latter has been more frequently mis-judged. Hamlet is more mysterious and has called forth more thought; critics have probed the character of Denmark's Prince to its very depths and have at length arrived at its meaning; but Othello being more simple has been judged more superficially, and has been most grievously sinning against in the judging.

What is the scope and tendency of this tragedy? Every body who has perused it, will answer at once "to illustrate the passion of jealousy." True—but in whose character is it illustrated? "In Othello's." No; in Iago's.

Iago is the jealous man. I have heard many people affirm that the character of Iago is unnatural; it is said, that there is not sufficient motive apparent in the drama to excite him to such black villainy as therein he is made to perpetrate. Love of power, attended, as it ever is, by inordinate selfishness, is thought to be the main-spring of all his actions. He is one, in the vulgar opinion, who preferring evil to good, in the furtherance of personal grandizement, would pause at no atrocity whatever—a naturally vicious man—a stony-hearted, jesuitical character.

Hazlitt—a nomen venerabile in criticism—has adopted, much to my surprize and disappointment, the common erroneous creed. "Iago," he says, in his Characters of Shakespeare's plays, "belongs to a class of characters, whose heads are as acute and active as their hearts are hard and callous. He is quite or nearly as indifferent to his own fate as to that of others; he runs all risks for a trifling and doubtful advantage, and is himself the dupe and victim of his ruling passion, an insatiable craving after action of the most difficult and dangerous kind." He plots the ruin of his friends as an exercise for his ingenuity and stabs men in the dark to prevent ennui." Now this may be very fine writing, but it has no more to do with Iago than with any other of Shakespeare's creations. It is altogether an imaginary, not a descriptive sketch. In a previous sentence the writer has spoken of "the love of power" as being Iago's incentive to villany. "Shakespeare knew that the love of power, which is another name for the love of mischief, is natural to man." This is all very true, as the Wolseys, the Glosters and the Macbeths bear witness; but Shakespeare never intended to illustrate this passion in the character of "nine ancient." Jealousy and revenge are his themes: it is the wronged Iago seeking retribution.

In my humble opinion, Iago is a very ill-used personage,—not by the characters of the Drama, for he richly deserved the punishment that he brought upon himself, but by a mis-judging public at large. Othello carries with him all the sympathy; Iago is regarded with the bitterest execration, yet Othello is the original offender, and to his original offence is attributable all the villany of Iago. If Othello had been innocent he would never have been unhappy, and Iago would have been his faithful attendant and friend instead of his relentless persecutor.

I conceive that Iago was not vicious upon principle; he was the villain not of nature but of circumstance. Othello made him a villain, he was wronged and he sought retribution, and this retribution involved a multitude of crimes. "The nature of a man," says a recent writer of fiction, "is changed by much wrong." Injuries harden the heart, and the arrow which enters the flesh, rankles there and diffuses its venom ineradicably throughout the whole system. The least part of the evil which your enemy does unto you is that which he purposes to do. He who wounds you, who deprives you of a limb, of the substance of your whole house—of the "one little ewe lamb" which has lain in your bosom and been a daughter to you, of all that you must love and cherish in the world, has done as it were nothing. There is no real evil in the loss of these things. But he who fills your heart with hatred and vindictiveness, who causes you to walk in wickedness, and deprives you of your innocence and your tranquillity, does unto you an irreparable injury—an injury to your soul everlastingly"—and this was the injury Othello did unto Iago.

Let me state, without further circumlocution, what I conceive to be the argument of the play. I doubt not but that many will dissent from my opinion, for it is a hard thing, I know, to be called upon at a moment's notice to throw aside prejudices which may have abided for long years. Iago had married a woman with very secure notions, to say the least, of conjugal obligations; her morality appears to have been loose in the extreme, and her philosophy egregiously sophistical. She was contented with erring but she must defend the error committed, and endeavour with all her might to make the worse appear the better reason. Witness her conversation with Desdemona, wherein she throws a cloud of exculpation over the delinquencies of stray-going wives. She speaks in general terms, but every word that she utters is, as it were, in her own defence. A little while before she delivers this speech, which is the essence of all casuistry, she has been questioned by the innocent and simple Desdemona:

"Dost thou in conscience think, tell me, Emilia,
That there be women, who abuse their husbands
In such gross kind?"

Emilia—There be some such, no question.

Des.—Wouldst thou do such a thing for all the world?

Em.—Why, would not you?

The truth is, that she had done so; and Iago was well aware of the fact.

Iago had been wronged by the Moor; the bitter torments of jealousy had been awakened in his bosom, and he was resolved to avenge himself on the being who had awakened them. He was not hasty in his vengeance; for the deepest hatred is ever slow and reflective; he abided his time patiently, waiting his opportunity like a skilful swordsman, and nursing up his revenge right cheerily. We perceive a slight glimmering of the resolve, which subsequently becomes clearly manifested, at the very outset of the action. In the opening dialogue Iago confesses to Roderigo

I follow him to serve my turn upon him; that is, to use a homely phrase, to pay him back in his own coin, to make him taste those very miseries that he had himself inflicted. Iago was resolved that the nuptial state into which the Moor had just entered should be a state of anguish and not of bliss—a cap-bum-full of curses. He requires a tool to assist him and he employs the booby Roderigo, knowing that the weak fool was enamoured of Desdemona, and therefore the most ready to aid him in, as well as the least likely to see through his designs. Iago knew his man, for Roderigo had previously consulted with him as to the best mode of prosecuting his amour; and of a certainty he used his instrument with the most laudable dexterity. Iago's own words seem to declare so explicitly the exciting cause of his hatred for the Moor, that the critic need not expose himself to error by hazarding any conjecture on the subject.

— I hate the Moor;

And it is thought abroad that twixt my sheets
He has done my office; I know not if't be true,
Yet I for mere suspicion of the kind,
Will do as if for surety.

Iago no longer loved Emilia: and the bitterness of feelings he experienced resulted far less from his own knowledge of her unworthiness than from the circumstance of its being thought so abroad. He cared not much whether it were true or false in reality; the world thought it true; he was pointed at as a cuckold and a dupe, and it was this that lashed his spirit into a whirlpool of dire exasperation. Then he begins to think of "dieting his revenge."

For that I do so suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leapt into my seat, the thought whereof
Doth like a poisonous mineral gnaw my inwards.
And nothing can nor shall content my soul
Till I am even with him, wife for wife.

The temporary overshadowing of his ambitious prospects, which is generally supposed to be the prime stimulant of his hatred both towards Cassio and the Moor—for Cassio it was who supplanted him—was a very secondary feeling in his breast—a mere tributary stream poured into the Nile-like waters of his bitterness. Doubtless it "dieted his revenge"—it enhanced, but it did not generate the extreme exacerbation of his spirit. Already he hated Michael Cassio,

"For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too"— and his revenge had already begun to assume a two-fold appearance. He had been doubly wronged and he resolved to be doubly revenged. From the very first it had been Iago's design "to serve his turn" upon the Moor; but his schemes were undefined and shadowy, they had not assumed a palpable aspect. He confesses a partiality for Desdemona, and he thinks himself of endeavouring, in his own person, to seduce her affections from the Moor. But he is a rough, unpolished soldier, with few personal attractions, and he has misgivings as to the result of his experiments. But his mind is fertile in expedients, and he prepares himself in the event of a failure to be ready with some other device.

Or failing so, yet that I put the Moor
At least into a jealousy so strong
That judgment can not cure.

He had previously thought that the booby Roderigo might possibly work out the design he had in hand; for Iago, it must be observed, had but a poor opinion of woman-kind, and judging, perhaps by his own wife, looked upon chastity as a virtue, existing only where temptation is not—thus rapidly his mind passes from Roderigo to himself as the agent of this villany and then from him self to Michael Cassio. Roderigo is a rich-fangled fool and he himself an uncourtous soldier; but Cassio is represented as "of smooth dispose" and "framed to make woman false." Cassio is therefore to be the thorn in the Moor's side. His situation near Othello's person was peculiarly adapted to further this plot, a plot which involved the ruin of them both—of the two men, who had wronged Iago, of the two men he hated to the death. Nothing could have been more admirably contrived than this scheme of retributive justice. To embitter the domestic happiness of the Moor and to cause Cassio to be turned out of his appointment with contumely and disgrace. In the execution of this design he manifested extraordinary genius. He proceeded guardedly, aiming not at despatch but a certain, though a far-off consummation. In making Cassio drunk upon guard he did not think so much of the disgrace in which it would involve the Lieutenant, as he did of the opportunity which the circumstance would afford of bringing Cassio and Desdemona together, and taking advantage of the sweet lady's kindness of heart, to awaken the suspicions of the Moor. "I tell you, what you shall do," saith the subtle Iago, "Our general's wife is now the general—confess yourself freely to her, she'll help to put you in your place; she is of so free, so kind, so apt disposition, that she holds it a vice, in her goodness not to do more than she is requested." I think that Iago, cared little about obtaining the appointment for himself, so that he could get Michael Cassio turned out of it. Revenge was stronger in him than cupidity.

Thus much for the jealousy of Iago, which I think beyond all question, is the exciting cause of the hatred which he bore against Cassio and the Moor, and the mainspring of all his atrocities. I do not believe that he had any prospective idea of the tragic catastrophe that consummated his labours. He did not contemplate the spilling of blood, nor was he in any wise the "amateur of tragedy in real life," which Hazlitt describes him to have been. Having committed himself too far to retreat, he found that it was necessary to progress and he was forced, for his own safety, to overstep the boundaries of his original design. It is ever thus with people, who abandon themselves to wickedness; they contemplate a small crime and become the unwilling perpetrators of some grievous atrocity. How many have designed a simple act of theft and found themselves hurried into murder.

With regard to the jealousy of the Moor, I am perfectly of Coleridge's opinion, that Othello was not jealous. I do not think he is reported by his nephew to have said "that there is any jealousy, properly so called, in the character of Othello. there is no predisposition to suspicion, which I take to be an essential term in the definition of the word. Desdemona very truly told Emilia, that he was not jealous, that is of a jealous habit, and he says so as truly of himself. Iago's suggestions are quite new to him; they do not correspond with any thing of a like nature previously in his mind. I think myself that if Othello had been jealous of Cassio he would have wreaked his vengeance at once upon the Lieutenant instead of slaying Desdemona in his wrath. A jealous man is more exasperated against his rival than against his unfaithful mistress; Othello scarcely gives a thought to Cassio; he thinks only of his wife's infidelity, of his own huge desolation. It is not jealousy, I am sure; it is indignation, verging upon madness, at the thought of having discovered the impurity of one, whom he had believed to be so devoted and immaculate.

If Othello had been in the least a suspicious man, he would have suspected the honesty of Iago; but, on the contrary, he was of a frank, open and confiding disposition; he was full of honest simplicity and very easy to be played upon. And this reminds me of something, with which I shall conclude these few rough, hurried observations. I have never seen Iago represented on the stage, without observing to myself, "Othello must be wondrously short-sighted and obtuse to be imposed upon by such a bungling hypocrite, such a manifest villain, as the Iago by his side." Almost all the characters of the plays speak of him until the last act as "honest Iago," and yet his representatives always think it necessary to comport themselves in the most apparently atrocious manner, and to emulate the murderers in Macbeth. Shakespeare never intended him for a swaggering, sneering rogue, a bully in his manner and mocker in his speech; such a character could never have exercised any influence over Othello. He should be represented as a tough, honest fellow, pausibly blunt, the simplicity of his manner serving as a mask to the intricacies of his villany. I see no reason in the world why the actor who personates Iago should not endeavour to appear the same character to his audience as he must appear to those with whom he is conversing. When he is in soliloquy he may let out the secret of his rascality, but certainly not in the presence of his dupes.—Calcutta Literary Gazette December 17.

We last week, gave a very able critique upon the play of Othello in an original communication from a valued correspondent.

In the estimate there given of the character of Iago, we are, generally, inclined to agree. But from the opinion that the scope and tendency of this tragedy is to illustrate the passion of jealousy not in Othello's, but in Iago's character, we would differ. That Iago is jealous we admit, and that he is, in various ways, injured. But the intent of the poet in his character seems to us to have been to exhibit the passion of revenge as operating upon an envious and discontented mind; and acute and active head linked with a selfish and resolute heart pursuing its way by any and every means to the desired satisfaction of those wrongs which he felt or fancied that the world and fortune had put upon him. But that Othello is not, as our contributor, quoting Coleridge, contends, jealous, we are surprised to hear and little inclined to admit. We cannot agree in this new-fangled idea, though we believe it has become a favorite. It is one of those ex cathedra opinions which Coleridge, surrounded by admiring friends, was wont to give out so frequently and sustain so well while (though they often, we conceive, must have seen, in those startling theories and strange fancies, proofs rather of the poetry of the speaker's mind than of the correctness of his reasoning, eloquent, impassioned and comprehensive as it usually was) his auditors were content rather to listen in acquiescent silence than to contend in doubtful dispute. Coleridge in these matters seems to have occupied much the same position in modern literary society as did Johnson with his contemporaries. Each was proudly conscious of superiority of intellect and powers of conversation, and each too much delighted to employ his ingenuity in making the worse appear the better reason, this too without any other desire to mislead, but in the heat of argumentation and the hope of victory against all odds, and unhappily without due advertance to the moral evils which undoubtedly flow from the dissemination of wrong or crude opinions under the authority of great names. This evil was perhaps less in themselves, than in their associates; the great mass of whom were little able to cope and compete with them in any intellectual warfare, and who, impressed with a blind veneration for their every saying and doing, prompted the expression of these extreme opinions for the mere gratification of their personal curiosity, drawing out the Lion by dogmatising on an admitted truism, or by hazarding a questionable sentiment, by misapprehending what was self-evident, by magnifying what was unimportant and by diminishing or denying what was essentially great and true; by, in short, looking with other eyes, hearing with other ears, and speaking with other tongues than did their literary idol as well on the common topics of the day as in the abstruser questions of philosophy or of politics. Occupied with the world, living and dying in the capital, constant opportunities were given to great numbers of eliciting these their singularities. What the ear heard the mind retained, not perhaps however fully and purely; and thus mixed up with what was intended to be separate, or to have merely an individual application, their opinions have come down to us strongly coloured, broadly stated, exhibiting, with very much of what is most valuable and certain, something of the trivial, obscure and rash, the chaff with the grain, the bitter with the sweet, fact and fancy, wisdom and weakness. Whether such opinions may not be unfairly transmitted, and whether they are consonant with reason and experience, should equally be asked. For whatever they are, or where-soever proceeding, the prestige and power of a great name may not be permitted to hide their real qualities and extent; nor lead us to pronounce as proved what is only plausible, to lose in mere splendour of expression the bulk and beauty of truth, the value of a moral in the glitter of an antithesis. Doubt indeed must be modestly exercised and respectfully expressed—for otherwise common minds may not sit in judgment on yacommun— but so often have our arms closed upon the shadow where they sought to clasp the substance, so often have we found the meteor and the marshlight where we hoped the surg and steady star, that it is not the swelling phrase, the pomp of words, the parade of authorities which now suffice to secure our uninquiring acceptance of a new creed or our abandonment of an old opinion. Coleridge says Othello is not jealous and that he should not be so considered. What says Shakespeare? What intends he in Othello? And how is Othello thought of by the other persons of the play?

Neither the possibility of making Othello suspicious of his wife nor the endeavour to make him so would have occurred to Iago except that he believed, from his previous knowledge of Othello's character, that evil doubts might easily be instilled and would probably take root. His object was revenge, to ensure which he naturally chose the plan which he deemed would most conduce to his success. His hate of the general is of old standing and he watched an opportunity to satisfy it. He cogitates on his ways and means. He determines

"To abuse Othello's ear
That Cassio's too familiar with his wife ;"

and from what does he derive his hope of success? from the credulous, pliant, impressible nature of his intended victim, who would

*"As tenderly be led by the nose
As asses are."*

This plan he pursues, confident that his very lowest success will be

*"To put the Moor
At least into a jealousy so strong
That judgment cannot cure ;"*

and that thus having displaced or destroyed Cassio he would "Make the Moor thank him, love him and reward him For making him egregiously an ass."

Would he, we ask, have entertained these hopes, have formed this plan, but that he knew it to be at once the easiest and surest of accomplishment. The opportunity of bringing it into efficient execution does not however immediately occur. The preliminaries to success are not even established. But these are readily got together, and shew Iago's great knowledge of mankind as derived from his observation of the habits and manners of those among whom he is placed. His leading of Rodrigo where he will; his knowledge of Cassio; his practising upon the facility of the one and the infirmity of the other, at the very time and place where they might most serve his purpose, amid the quick bloods of Cyprus, the noble swelling spirits of a warlike colony, whom also he had already flustered with flowing cups; the pre-arrangement of the contemporaneous watch in surety of that soldierly conviviality which a little art and exertion would so push into excess, that amongst the flock of drunkenards he might then with ease put Cassio in some action that would offend the isle; all these prove, at this early stage of the play, what its whole sequel affirms, his intimacy with the heart of man, that, as Othello describes, he did indeed know all qualities of human dealings with a learned spirit. No one denies this penetration and management in Iago. The inference we would draw from this general admission of his great tact is that it is not possible that he, who was every where else so skilled in choosing his tools and in working out his designs, should here select one whose nature, instead of affording him assistance in their prosecution, was positively the antipodes of that which he would have sought out. Iago knew his man much better: he knew that his master's disposition was to jealousy inclined; not in itself, not without external cause, but easily to be acted on, and if that way wrought then "perplexed in the extreme." Othello himself confesses almost as much, and that he does not admit the whole is because he did not know himself rightly, nor so well as did Iago. The beauty whom each of her rivals acknowledges as next in attraction to herself, as the second belle of the night, may safely be set down by others as entitled to the crown. With armies and with nations, or wherever individual competitors allow the claim of some one of their body to the second rank, depend upon it he deserves the first. So is it with the evidence to be deduced from personal confessions; the much that is admitted takes with it the little that is not directly acknowledged, or that is but indirectly denied. A next-to-all avowal justifies the belief of what is behind. And thus Othello's dying words prove, to us at least satisfactorily, the correctness of Iago's estimate of his character, and that but for the conviction, of being enabled to pursue his revenge to a full and sure end, which that character held out, it would never have been so practised on by him.

Cassio, being ensnared and deposed from his office, at Iago's advice interests Desdemona in his behalf, in order to obtain his restoration to the general's favour. Iago's intention is,

"While she for Cassio strongly pleads the Moor,
To pour this pestilence into his ear.
That she repeals him for her love of him."

With this view he labours

"To draw the Moor apart
And bring him jump when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife."

But up to the scene when they are so found together, not a word is uttered by Iago expressive of any doubt entertained by him of either Desdemona or of Cassio. The first inoculation now takes place, and the disease induced in its mildest form, is suppressed by Othello, for a while, and not yet detected by Iago: In the brief commencing dialogue which occurs, so far as the latter is concerned nothing is advanced against the wife or the friend who are so soon to be victimized. The sole symptoms of infection are in Othello himself, and these are but faint. The whole passage

Iago. "Ha! I like not that
Oth. What dost thou say?
Iago. Nothing, my lord: or if—I know not what.
Oth. Was not that Cassio which parted from my wife?
Iago. Cassio, my lord? No sure, I cannot think it, That he would steal away so guilty-like Seeing you coming.
Oth. I do believe 'twas he."

contains only one shade illustrative of the character of the Moor. It is not that Cassio avoids him, or steals away as if himself guilty. This is not cared for. It was natural. It was expected. Cassio was still in disgrace. Cassio had offended, was guilty: that he should wear the pale look of sorrow or the blush of shame rather than the bold brow of ingratitude or the callous air of impenitence was all in his favour. But observe, as Othello observed; he noted and set down what none but a jealous man would, that Cassio "parted from his wife," and Iago "liked not that." It was this circumstance, alone which to his eyes gave any significance to Cassio's departure, any weight to the doubtful words which Iago first muttered or to his subsequent slow replies. It dwells, however, in Othello's memory for he shortly refers to it as the first suspicion which he had imbibed and as warranting him to demand from Iago the meaning of what followed.

"I heard thee say but now thou lik'dst not that When Cassio left my wife: What did'st not like?"

Iago had not previously whispered any accusations against the one or the other. In their meeting, in its termination there was nothing to excite displeasure or distrust; and no such feelings were so excited. It was Iago's interjectional remark upon their separation which first kindles the sleeping fire. His suspicious nature exasperates him to self-reproach, not because there was any ground of objection, not because he himself fancied any such, but because another, a mere stander-by, had observed or so pretended, something which he liked not, which he deemed objectionable. The whole affair is a trifle, on which to build his own conclusions of any wrong inflicted upon or intended against his honour, would rightly stamp a man as jealous—but, in Othello's case, his earliest suspicions are founded upon the conclusions of another! conclusions which never occurred to himself!

Let any one read this scene, the third of Act 3, from the exit of Desdemona to her return, and then, be he husband or bachelor, ask himself whether it be possible from what there occurs, to have so lighted the flames of jealousy in any breast where the fuel had not been previously stored. The most common questions are asked; the very asking them creates suspicion: the answers which are given are always fuller than necessary, inducing fresh inquiry: and when this apparently against Othello's wish terminates, the parts are changed: the questioner becomes the questioned; it is now no cautious fathoming, no shallow curiosity, no superficial conjecture, but direct frequent leading questions, which however draw forth nothing confirmatory of the growing suspicion they indicate, until the very impossibility of satisfying them, the difficulty even of understanding them causes a repetition, an echoing, a hesitation which bursts the last bounds within which Othello had till now suppressed the struggling torrent of his dark and terrible imaginings. As yet Cassio alone mentioned: and what even he is suspected of, or with whom, has not appeared: even wherein the parley concerns him Othello himself thinks he is honest, and Iago dare be sworn he is so, beseeching his master not to depend too much upon his conjectures as true;

"I do beseech you—
Though I, perchance, am vicious in my guess,
As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses: and oft, my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not—I entreat you then,
From one that so imperfectly conjects,
You'd take no notice: nor build yourself a trouble
Out of his scattering and unsure observance:"

In the face of this entreaty and advice which, coming from the very quarter whence the suspicion has originated, throws, and is intended—for it was not Iago's design to stir the Moor into any quick and extreme jealousy, on conjectures and about trifles, which would easily be dissipated to the disgrace of the schemer—to throw a restraining doubt upon the probability of the tale, Othello persists in pressing an explanation, in demanding knowledge of the meaning, the thought of his ancient, who now, in a direct personal speech which shows how well he knew that jealousy had already planted itself in his heart, warns him against the passion. Othello's brief reply, those two anguished words "O misery!" prove at once the truth of Iago's suspicion and the correctness of his picture. True, he presently denies it, but how faintly! while his very denial shadows forth the final fatal measures which he may pursue should it not prove false,

"Why? why is this?
Think'st thou, I'd make a life of jealousy
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions? No to be once in doubt Is — once to be resolv'd —
— No, Iago;
I'll see before I doubt: when I doubt, prove
And, on the proof, there is no more but this,
Away at once with love or jealousy."

Up to this period of the play Iago had hinted no suspicion of Desdemona's loyalty, had made no question of her love; all that has gone before is—except to the suspicious nature of Othello—directed solely against Cassio. Yet how evident the predisposition to jealousy has for some time been in the eagerness to suspect, and the ease with which evil surmises and dark suggestions are insinuated! It has indeed spread so far that, to direct the storm he has so easily raised, Iago's care, during the rest of the scene, is rather to diminish than to aggravate his suspicions.

"I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to longer reach
Than to suspicion. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success
As my thoughts aim not at."

"My Lord, I would, I might entreat your honour: Desd.
To scan this thing no further: leave it to time

In the meanwhile
Let me be thought too busy in my fears,
(As worthy cause I have to fear I am)

And hold her free, I do beseech your honour."

How does Othello receive this parting counsel?
Listen to him even while Iago is yet present.

"This honest creature, doubtless Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds."

And soon as he is alone what says, he—try him out of his own mouth.

He has not seen before doubting: when he doubts, he does not wait for proof; but running rapidly to the worst conclusion, fulfils part at least of his previous promise, that he would at once away with love

"She's gone: I am abus'd: and my relief Must be to loath her."

Desdemona enters: the first effect of her appearance was such as to force from Othello the words

"If she be false,
O! then heaven mocks itself! I'll not believe it;"

but though they retire together and in the interval nothing more transpires to confirm the suspicion of Othello, yet when he next appears how is it? Full of that horrible conceit, tossed by that jealous frenzy, doubting his wife's falsehood, yet scarce believing her truth—miserable that he knows so much and that he knows nothing more—his heart already changed by the poison—his mind thrown from its balance—his occupation gone—doating, despairing, melancholy, maddened—how little, in that agitated state, needs there to complete Iago's conquest. And what is that little? A fabricated dream, a purloined handkerchief. Yet enough, quite enough—

"Trifles, light as air,
Are to the jealous confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ."

These do the work: and now his rage boils over, his fond love is turned to tyrannous hate, blown to the winds; black vengeance tears his heart. His breast heaves, his eyes roll, his tongue half-groans, half-screams

"Blood, Iago blood!"
O that the slave had forty thousand lives:
One is too poor, too weak for my revenge!
I would have him nine years a killing."

Heav'n is invoked, and Hell. The villain and his victim unite, The parts are allotted. Cassio is sentenced!
Swift means of death are sought out for the fair devil!
Iago is Lieutenant!

What is Desdemona's opinion and what Emilia's as to Othello's temper. The loving wife, even while she denies that he is jealous, doubts whether he is not so.

"And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill thinking."

Emilia. Is he not jealous?

Again asks

Emilia. Is not this man jealous?

Desd. I ne'er saw thus before.

—Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief.

Then as to its cause,

Emilia. Pray heav'n it be state matters

And no conception nor no jealous toy
Concerning you.

Alas the day! I never gave him cause.

Emil. But jealous souls will not be answered so—
They are not ever jealous for the cause
But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster
Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Desd. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind.
Emil. Lady, amen!

Emilia.—Is not this man jealous?

Othello.

As the article on Othello in our last number, was left unfinished, we feel ourselves pledged to return to the subject, though we have already extended our remarks to so great a length that rather than run the risk of wearying our readers with too much of one thing, we shall hurry as rapidly as we can to a conclusion. We have shown, we think, pretty clearly, that the old and general notion of the character of Othello being intended by Shakespeare as an illustration of the evil effects of jealousy, is the true one. Critics are often unable to resist the temptation of standing in opposition to the great mass of mankind. It gives them an air of originality. They thus also advance a claim to the reputation of superior sagacity and refinement. There are some critics who can no more forego the pride of a paradox, than a wit the pleasure of a pun. Lord Byron, for example, in his thirst for notoriety and excitement, resolved to startle the world by the singularity of his opinions as a critic. To show that he did not judge like ordinary men he asserted that Pope was a greater poet than Shakespeare because he wrote professedly on ethics.
If this kind of criticism is to hold good even Sir Richard Blackmore, if he had written an Essay on Man, ought to have been awarded a higher rank than the Prince of Dramatic Poets. In fact if we are to give our critical decisions after the manner of Byron, we ought on Dryden's authority to pronounce Blackmore, even taken as he was, as a writer of a superior grade to Shakespeare; for has not Dryden asserted that an Epic Poem is the greatest work of human genius, and did not Blackmore write one of no ordinary length, while Shakespeare confined his labours to the Drama and a few brief miscellaneous Poems? It is the quantity and quality of the genius that an author puts into his work, and not the subject or the form of it, that fixes his intellectual rank. There is fifty times more poetical genius in the Rape of the Lock than in the Essay on Man. There are a few splendid passages in the latter, but as a whole it is sufficiently prosaic, though exquisitely smart and clever.
Of its philosophy, taken at second hand from Boling-broke, it requires no great acuteness to discover the shallowness and inconsistency. In his Rape of the Lock, his Elegy on an Unfortunate Lady and his Abelard and Eloisa, Pope has shown himself a true poet, but it must be a strange perversity of will or obliquity of understanding that could make any one place him higher than the gigantic and myriad-minded Shakespeare, who, take him for all in all, was the greatest poet that the world has ever seen or perhaps ever will see. "He was not for an age," says Ben Jonson, "but for all time," and, we might add, for all countries too. Augustus Schlegel has most successfully introduced our matchless poet to his countrymen, who seem to appreciate his beauties in a more ardent and philosophical spirit than we do ourselves. There can be little doubt that even the French, if they could but translate Shakespeare in the style that Schlegel has done, would open their eyes to his incomperable merit. They would soon cease to echo Voltaire's insolent and vulgar abuse of a writer who was as much above him as the stars are above the earth, if they could but catch his genuine spirit unchanged and undulated.
But Mrs. Montague, in her excellent and able work, has shown how grossly and ludicrously false were Voltaire's own versions of our immortal poet, and how utterly unable he was from his ignorance of our language to understand the meaning of the most simple passages in the original. The most felicitous and potent words were probably amongst those that struck him as the most absurd and feeble. We have met, however, with many intelligent Frenchmen, having a thorough knowledge of our language, that were among the idolaters of Shakespeare. How can it be otherwise? Truth and nature when illustrated by a mighty genius, must at last find an easy entrance into all human hearts, when there is no artificial or accidental obstruction in the way.

But to return to our more immediate theme - the jealousy of Othello. Coleridge's paradox on this subject is in the same spirit as Morgan's ingenious essay on Falstaff, in which he has tried very hard to prove that the fat old knight was one of the bravest of the brave. As a mere practise with the foils on criticism, a kind of sham fight, or as a playful display of critical subtlety and acuteness, a paradox of this kind may be allowed to pass without much severity of censure, or it may even afford us a harmless, and indeed not uninteresting amusement. But it is time to rescue criticism from the contempt of sober people when we find such freaks of fancy supported with gravity and earnestness by those who profess to guide and correct the public taste. We cannot conceive a more unhappy compliment to the genius of Shakespeare than that which the serious seconds of Morgan and Coleridge indirectly pay him. If Shakespeare meant, as they would fain persuade us, that he did to convey an impression that Falstaff was not a cowardly nor Othello a jealous man, never was a dramatic artist disgraced by a more notorious failure. Until Morgan wrote his clever essay and Coleridge uttered his oracular criticism all the world agreed that the cowardice of Falstaff was a prominent, and most amusing feature in his character, and that the portraiture of Othello was a most powerful and striking illustration that trifles light as air, are to the jealous confirmation strong, as proofs of holy writ. And even now, after all that Morgan has written and that Coleridge has spoken, the great mass of the people continue as blind as ever to the intention of the poet. Of one thousand auditors of the plays of Othello and Henry the Fourth nine hundred and ninety-nine remain of the old opinion, and do not trouble their heads with these subtle speculations. What does all this prove? That Shakespeare is at fault, or are those two or three critics more adventurous than successful, who attempt to prove that his countless admirers for some hundred years have cherished an egregious error? The question is easily decided. Schlegel has shown that Shakespeare was not a wild and ignorant and irregular genius who scattered his barbaric pearls at random, but a profound artist whose designs were conceived with felicity and executed with care. Nothing can be more directly at variance with this fact than the supposition that he intended to produce an impression so contrary to that which has always, or at least with such rare exceptions, followed the exhibition of Falstaff and Othello on the stage or the perusal of the plays to which they belong in the closet.

One of our correspondents, in an ingeniously written notice of the play of Othello, contends that Iago, is the person in whom Shakespeare intended to exhibit the passion of jealousy. If our correspondent is in earnest he must expect little countenance and support from the rest of the world. He stands quite alone. If he be right, he is the only person upon whose mind Shakespeare has produced the designed impression. That Iago's malice and revenge were in some degree whetted or increased by certain jealous suspicions both of Othello and of Cassio must be readily admitted, but his wife was so loose a character, and had so slight a share of his respect and love, and he himself had so little refinement of mind and such small pretensions to a delicate nicety in points of honor, that his jealousy on Amilia's account is very far from being a prominent or leading trait in his conduct or indisposition. In the progress of the play it is hardly ever thought of by the audience or the reader.

Some critics have considered the character of Iago as in one respect unnatural, inasmuch as there does not seem sufficient motive for his fierce and inveterate revenge. Perhaps Shakespeare anticipated this objection, and on this very account added the provocation of jealousy to that of the disappointment and irritation occasioned by Cassio's supersession of him in professional preferment. Iago's allusion to Othello's intimacy with Amilia is like a kind of after-thought or interpolation, and not a very happy one either. It looks as if some critic had persuaded him to give this additional excitement to Iago's conduct against his own conviction, for it has little or no effect in the play, and is scarcely consistent with Othello's proud, yet open, generous and high-minded nature. He was not the person either to profess a jealous friendship towards the man whom he had so grossly injured, or to injure him still further by a mortifying supersession. Neither does Shakespeare any where intimate that he was of a licentious disposition. Nothing can be purer and more delicate than his love for Desdemona. It is evident, we think, that Iago was of that malicious, designing and restless temperament that it was quite as like he should be led to "diet his revenge" from the most trivial provocation, as that the jealousy of the proud and fiery Moor should require but a single spark to kindle it into a roaring flame that nothing could extinguish or abate. — Ibid, Dec. 31.

To see a fine tragedy finely acted is one of the highest of intellectual delights. When the dramatist is unworthy of the players, or the players of the dramatist, the result is preeminently painful; for the excellence of the one, instead of palliating, exhibits more glaringly the imperfections of the other, and the sense of discord thus engendered in the mind of the spectator, is even more distressing than the feelings, with which he contemplates what is congruously bad. We would rather see a company of strolling barn-ranters performing one of Fitz-ball's melo-dramas, than we would see them profaning Shakespeare, or Macready condescending to Fitz-ball. We esteem it, therefore, an offence of the gravest aspect, for any one, who is not endowed with a high order of intelligence to personate; or, we should say, endeavour to personate, one of Shakespeare's consummate creations. It is, doubtless, the first qualification of an actor, that he should comprehend, fully comprehend the character that he undertakes to perform, that he should trace the inmost meanings of the dramatist, and be thoroughly acquainted with motives as well as with effects, not only in relation to the character he himself enacts, but to every character that has an influence upon it. Therefore, to a certain degree, must every tragedian be a philosopher, or it is little likely that he will meet with success; he must be possessed of considerable psychological knowledge and acute powers of observation; he must "know all qualities with a learned spirit" and penetrate the inner chambers of humanity's moral edifice. He must look upon mankind with the same eye, with which a painter regards inanimate nature, and garner up what he has seen in the store-house of his memory, that he may call forth the gathered treasures at will. Many of Kean's most striking stage effects were the results of his own observations. We well remember how, in the character of Sir Giles Overreach, when baffled and detected in his villainy, he seemed well nigh bursting with choler, as though it were to relieve the fever of passion that was preying upon him, he tore away the clothes from his neck and his breast, with a frantic energy appalling to witness. Kean used to relate that this lesson was taught him by a countryman, he happened to see, who had been worsted in a pugilistic engagement.

These observations, which have grown beneath our pen to a far greater length than we originally contemplated, are illustrative of our reasons for anticipating in most cases, infinitely more intellectual gratification from amateur, than from professional stage-representations. When we hear that a number of educated gentlemen, endowed with unquestionable talents, are about to enact the different characters of a tragedy, we are led to expect great things from the announcement. We did expect great things, when we heard that the tragedy of Othello was to be played at the Chowringhee Theatre, and knew who were to be the players. We expected great things, and of a certainty we were not disappointed.

The great drawback to the effect of amateur representations is, that we generally know the actors; we are perhaps in the habit of seeing them daily, we know their histories, their characters, and we can not abstract the player from his part. We see a well-known face, and we hear a well-known voice; there is no illusion,—we do not see Othello but we see Mr. —; and we think of the last time we met him, and all the circumstances attending the meeting, and it is in vain that we try to disentangle our thoughts, and to get away from Chowringhee to Cyprus. It is still Mr. — and Mr. —, not Othello and Cassio we see before us. For example, we saw Iago last night precisely in the same attitude, and with the same expression of face in which we beheld him a Sunday or two ago, on one of the pages of a weekly journal.

The tragedy of Othello, of which on Monday night we were one of a multitude of delighted spectators, was altogether admirably cast. The principal characters were sustained by the old and deserved favorites of our dramatic community—Othello and Iago and Cassio, and Roderigo and Brabantio, each found an able representative; and the female parts were excellently filled by Mrs. Leach and Mrs. Frances, in the characters of Desdemona and Emilia. Othello was the rough, honest, “rude in speech” soldier throughout—perhaps a little too rude and turgid in his delivery—a little too rough in his manners. This may be a prejudice on our part; and it is a question whether our actors have not always thrown too much refinement into the character of Othello. But, it must be remembered, that Othello was a man of superior genius, or he could never, in spite of many antagonist circumstances, have risen to the high station that he held in the Venetian army; he would never have been advanced by the senate, respected by his followers, and admired and beloved by Desdemona. Ludovico speaks of him as,

—The noble Moor, whom our full senate
Call all in all sufficient—the noble nature
Whom passion could not shake, whose solid virtue
The shot of accident nor dart of chance Could neither graze nor pierce.

He must have been in reality a great-minded man, and a superior intelligence, in spite of contending circumstances, produces a corresponding elevation of manner, which forbids any thing approaching to coarseness. We must not receive, without some qualification, Othello's own account of himself. If he had told his history to Desdemona, as a private soldier would have done, she would never have fallen in love with him; and if he had been coarse in his manner and uncorfeous in his address, Cassio, who was a polished gentleman, would never have loved and respected him. We think, therefore, that much dignity and a certain degree of refinement, not the conventional refinement of a petit-maitre, but the spontaneous refinement of a highly intelligent being, should be thrown into this character.

War brutalizes a little mind; but nothing will brutalize a great one.

In almost every other respect, and even in this we may probably be mistaken, the character of the Moor was admirably portrayed. Nothing could have been better than the delivery of and the action accompanying several passages of the play. In the third act, where the intensity of the action increases so as to be almost appalling, and Othello is first fully convinced that he has been wronged by the being, whom he most delighted in, and arguing that “Ignorance is bliss,” he reproaches Iago with having opened his eyes, and exclaiming,

What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?
I saw't not, thought it not, it harmed not me;
I slept the next night well, was free and merry;
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:
He that is robbed, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know't and he's not robbed at all.

Nothing could possibly have been better than the delivery of this speech, especially of the line in italics, which was uttered, as though his whole soul revolved at the hideous thought, and as though it was agony to him to embody it in words. Another speech, which has struck us as being remarkably well delivered was that to Lodovico, beginning

Ay, you did wish that I would make her turn,
Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on,
And turn again, &c. &c. &c. Act 4., Scene I.

The bitter irony of this speech was beautifully portrayed throughout. The first meeting too with Desdemona in Cyprus was excellent, as was also the speech to the senate. We missed however a point, which we have often missed, even in our greatest tragedians. Mr. Forrest, the American actor, is almost the only one we remember to have seized upon it. Othello says, speaking of the greediness with which Desdemona devoured up his discourse, —which I observing,

Took once a pliant hour and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart, &c. &c.

The allusion here to the “drugs and charms and mighty magic,” must be evident to all. In the third act, we think that the pourtrayer of Othello did not make quite as much as he might have done of two little speeches, with which Kean used to electrify the house. The one is in answer to Iago, who says,

I see this hath a little dashed your spirit.
Othel. Not a jot, not a jot.

We shall never forget Kean's articulation of these words, nor subsequently of,

O! blood, Iago, blood;

as he uttered these last words, he used to stride across the stage, clutching his extended hand as he went, as though he were grasping at the dread image he described. We likewise missed a well-remembered line

On horrors head horrors accumulate, which somehow or other was left out of the speech beginning

If thou dost slander her and torture me, &c. &c.

But these are spots in the sun; and “we are nothing if not critical.”

We must now proceed to the character of Iago, and fain would we bestow upon it and its representative more space than we can afford to bestow on it. It was good throughout. It was the Iago Shakespeare intended to draw, not the sneering, sarcastic, manifest villain, which most performers in their ignorance have represented. Iago, on Monday night, was always plausible and never discovered the cloven hoof, except when he was speaking to his wife. Now this distinction was particularly just, and we appreciated it as it ought to be appreciated. Iago hated his wife; he never scrupled to speak of her with disrespect even in the presence of Othello and Desdemona. It was Emilia, whose infidelity had filled his bosom with bitterness; she was the cause of all his misery, all his wickedness, all his hatred. He had no particular object in view in duping her, and as he was always exacerbated in her presence he scrupled not to display his exacerbation. This we think a very nice discrimination on the part of Iago's representative. We could point out a number of passages for special laudation, but as we have already written so much, we must content ourselves with the general praise, which we feel happy in bestowing on Iago.

But the best piece of acting in the whole play was, that of Cassio in the drunken scene. We may say, with a safe conscience, that we have never seen it better represented. Charles Kemble himself, and this is one of his best parts, never played the Lieutenant in his cups with more admirable fidelity. Oh! it was a rare piece of acting! The part itself is comparatively insignificant, but it has always been found necessary to appropriate it to a first-rate actor on account of the difficulties of this particular scene, which is the only one throughout the tragedy in which Cassio is brought prominently forward; with this exception he is always more passive than active in the play. It struck us, too, as a merit in the representative of Cassio, that after the intervention of Othello, and which in some measure restores the Lieutenant to the proper use of his faculties, that he did not suddenly re-assume his sobriety, as some actors appear to do, nor even, to the very end of the scene exhibit his wonted temperance of deportment. It is impossible, that any man, who is very drunk, should get sober in five minutes; but a great occasion may have the effect of calling a man's powers of thinking into action so much that to a certain degree, he may overcome the effects of the liquor. A man who is getting sober talks a great deal of maudlin sentimentality; this is just what Shakespeare meant Cassio to talk after the appearance of Othello.

Roderigo was well-played by the Secretary. But he was scarcely enough the "brach of Venice," not quite a booby enough, in the former scenes especially, where he seemed more the bully than the bullied. In some of the latter scenes he was nevertheless exceeding good, as was Brabantio throughout. We have seldom seen the part in better hands than it was on Monday night.

Mrs. Leach, as she always does, looked very pretty, and played very well. We shall experience a heavy loss when she leaves us, and find it difficult to fill the vacancy she will leave in our corps dramatique. Nothing could have excelled her delivery of the three words "I have none," where having asked Emilia "Who is thy lord," and being answered "He that is yours, sweet lady," she rejoins in those words. We never saw Mrs. Frances to greater advantage. Some of her vituperations of her wicked husband were uttered with great force and energy, and called down deserved applause. The house was exceedingly well filled, and every one seemed perfectly delighted.—Bengal Hurkaru, December 20.

MOONGHYR.

COLLECTOR'S COURT, NOVEMBER 17, 1837.

In the progress of the sale of Government muhals, according to the luthundee, the singular estate called Bhuwanundpoor or Ramdearee, in Purgunah Mulkee, was this-day put up for sale. The crier vociferated loud and long, ere a bidder would step forward to offer any thing for it. The cause of this indifference, however, was soon apparent.

This muhul is recorded to comprise 18 mouzas professing to pay a suttler jumma of 1001 Rs. which, had this been really the case, and considering the number of mouzas supposed to be comprehended in it, would have formed a rather respectable estate. But lo and behold! the fact turns out to be, that, though the jumma is regularly demanded, and for aught we can say otherwise, exacted by the usual method of advertising for arrears of revenue, and hammering for the benefit of Government, the whole estate at the present moment, does not occupy a larger area of land than 35 beeghas; and that ascertained by actual Mofussil survey! The question is, what has become of 18 mouzas,—the thousands of beeghas of lands which doubtless at some time or another comprised their recorded actual rukhs? Where are the inhabitants of those villages with their husbandmen and their cattle, their farmer and their kucharris, their gomsahtas, putwaris, peadas, chowkedars, &c. gone to? All gone, nobody can say where! But, it is stated, that Gunga or Gunduk, has, by her rapid and ruinous encroachments, swept away the whole of the lands, with the exception of the miserable remnant above-mentioned, into her insatiable depths; but the demand of Government has not been abated; not a farthing remitted of the thousand and one rupees that used to be paid ere disruption of the ter-portion of land out of which the revenue was once paid, and on which alone, we could have imagined it to be levied. It would, to a superficial enquirer, appear, that both the proprietor and the Government were total losers by the grasp of the river. This however is not the case. The lost lands could not have tumbled into the river at once, but its inroads must have been gradual and progressive, during which the proprietor was a progressive loser, whereas Government continued to levy and exact by terror of hammer, the recorded jumma, and enforced the payment of it. Representations in such cases are usually waste of words; and submission under such ruinous losses, is regarded as a token of fidelity to the state. Keep quiet. Pay on the demandable jumma from your own coffers. Sell your "joroo janta" (as the natives say, thap, wife and mill) and when you can no longer do so, go plunge after your mouzas into the bosom of Gunga, and good luck to you for your bravery! But, it turns out, to increase the joke, that certain extensive parts of the river, till then covered by water, not far from the place where the 18 mouzas once had a "local habitation," but now have a name without any locality at all, were found to become shallower and shallower; and ere long threw up good durable lands, which were occupied by any person that chose to claim a proprietary right to their possession,—brought into cultivation with returns of golden harvests, (which new alluvial lands invariably are wont to yield) and in the progress of the operation and execution of the law of resumption came into the hands of Government under entirely new names, or such as were extended to the new mouzas from the adjacent villages, of which it was, by hook or by crook, made out to be part and parcel! But the fresh accession of lands thrown up by the river, could not have possibly been included in the decennial settlement, therefore the Government have an unquestionable right to take possession of them! All this was easily done, and nothing could be more consolatory than the certainty that, what had been rendered fit to be struck off from the public accounts, as it respects the jumma, demandable from Bhuvanundpoor, had been disgorged by the river under the other names, yielding enough to cover the loss and more too. But what has become of the proprietors of Bhuvanundpoor? They are undone. The profit, and no loss of Government has sealed the utter loss and no profit of the proprietors, and yet thousand and one rupees have, with undeviating regularity, year after year, continued to be demanded, exacted, and realized; as the Mouza after Mouza and beeghas and beeghas of land were rolling piecemeal unredeemably into the rapids of the Ganges, carrying away the property of the unquestionable owners, and with it reducing (supposing this to be his only property) him and his family to ruin, wretchedness, and beggary. Thirty-five beeghas of land are, however, saved; but only set against them the stupendous assessment 1001 Rs.! There is something monstrously absurd in the picture before us. A respectable landholder is reduced to destitution by whom? Who answers that question? By the Ganges? Yes, by the Ganges, who robs the subject, and bestows the fruits of her iniquity on the sovereign. We should like to see a court of conscience held for the decision of this intricate case according to the criminal code of our paternal Government—Mistress Gunga to be placed at the bar of the court as principal in the fact, and Government and its local resumption functionaries as participes criminis after it. What would or ought the verdict to be, the proprietor of Mohal Bhawanundpoor standing as prosecutor? The lot was knocked down for 102 Rs. An estate of 35 beeghas, paying 1001 Rs. sold to a man in his senses for 102 Rs? Beardsmore's establishment stands in need of lodgers.

NOVEMBER 16, 1837.

A regiment of troops on its march towards Bengal, encamped here this day, and, as usual on such occasions, had to be supplied with articles of all kinds. Carts and bullocks, of course, came abundantly into requisition, and the question is, how these latter were supplied? The Regulations of Government provide, that the Zameendars (in the route of the march of troops) are to be prepared to furnish the requisite supplies; a measure founded, we presume, on the assumption that they are not procurable at the staying places at which the marching troops usually encamp,—and to a very great extent, this is true. What cannot be got in the bazar must be provided by the zameendars, or the troops must have no supplies. But in large towns, where provisions are procurable in abundance, the commissariat being sent in advance, could without the aid of the zameendars, furnish ample supplies by purchasing them in the bazars. If it be asked, what objection can there be to the zameendars being required to furnish the military supplies? We answer, ask them where they procure them, and how much of the money which is paid them by the troops goes into the pockets of the owners of the articles, and the answer would be at once quite satisfactory. It frequently happens, that as the zameendars cannot or do not choose to be present in the camp with the supplies, they appoint choudharees for that purpose. At Bhagulpoor this arrangement used to be in vogue. We understand that there is a choudharee here likewise, who calls himself, and others call him so, or the Kumboo Bazar, but we do not see that he is deputy of any of the zameendars. He professes to have purwanas of the Collectors in his possession authorizing him to act as choudharee, and furnish at least carts and bullocks for the transport of military baggage, &c. We are not aware how far this comports with the provision of the Regulations; but we know that the choudharee receives no wages for his trouble. The zameendars do not recognize him as their deputy, and therefore pay him nothing. How then does he provide for himself? If the resources of this unpaid officer of Government (for such he must be regarded with the purwanah in his possession) were enquired into, it would be found, that he is supported by a wide series of contributions (it is said to be paid voluntarily) laid on vendors of all articles of consumption probably required for Military supplies, and on carts and bullocks. All these are divided into fircos of classes, from each individual of which he exacts a certain rate of contribution, according to the value of articles to be furnished; and he is aided by the Police thanna.

We should like know why the Commissariat, who have the duty of procuring the supplies, are not required to make arrangements with the carters and bullock-drivers of the towns and villages, where they are readily procurable for hire? Why should the choudharee do it. It would appear reasonable that those who have carts and bullocks to let out, would be glad to obtain fare, and the ready demand by marching troops would be hailed with joy. They would have nothing more to do than to make their appearance at the camp, and offer their services, leaving the Commissariat Officers to pick and choose. If it could be supposed that they are not paid readily, and that the choudharee is answerable to them for their fare, there could be no difficulty to see why he is made or makes himself a go-between; but, we are certain, that the Commissariat pays without hesitation, and therefore affords ample encouragement to those whose goods they require for the public service. Would they not pay if the choudharee was not in the way? They would, they do. Who then is the choudharee? Nothing to any purpose to any body but himself. Why do the carters and bullock-drivers pay him a fee to get their carts and bullocks let? They need not, for they have nothing more to do than offer them in the camp themselves, and they would be presently taken up. But the fact is, that they pay the choudharee for the purpose of saving their carts and cattle from being furnished to the troops. There is a sovereign reluctance exhibited to letting out carts and bullocks to marching troops for reasons which we cannot enquire into at present. Well, the choudharee is paid for saving the carts and cattle of the owners. This is a fact—a positive fact. Now imagine only what a choudharee might do (in many instances, we are assured, has done,) by just holding out a threat that he will take away the cart or bullock of an individual allowing him to be wont to let out his cart, &c.) if he is not paid for his forbearance, and suppose him backed by the Police burkundazes at least. The salvage money is paid to the choudharee, but the Police must also have a picking at the home calculate what the earning of the former would be (bearing the latter out of the calculation) if he seized 100 carts when only 20 were required to be furnished, and received 5 rupees for each of the 80 he liberates. It would be 400 rupees, and he gets this for doing what? Not supplying the best bullocks but inferior ones, for the superior are got off by the fees!

The collector is required to have carts and bullocks taken up in the first instance from among those which are purposely kept for hire, and if not sufficient, then to seize any that he could. At this place carts and bullocks for hire are procurable by hundreds, but is he sure that none but these are taken up by the choudharee and public people? Let him but enquire and he would find that it is not always the case. Why do not the aggrieved complain? Answer. The choudharee says, he is authorized to furnish the supplies, and the thanna people are ordered to do as much. They shew their purwanahs, and that is an effectual silence.—Hurkaru, Dec. 6.

JOINT MAGISTRATE'S COURT, 21ST NOVEMBER.

The Khuruckpore Putneedars.

We noticed a few days ago, that the putneedaree tenure is a novelty in this province, so much so, that when the Rajah of Khuruckpore was advised to dispose of some portions of his zemindaree in that way, he applied to Government for permission to do so. That permission was readily granted. The next step was to procure purchasers. These too were not wanting. About 140 lots were disposed of, and 118 registered in the Collector's office; possession was given, and the putneedars, at the particular request of the Rajah, paid their respective jummas into the Collector's treasury. Nothing could possibly have been conducted with more regularity than these arrangements; all was fair and legal. The putneedaree tenure is recognized by the regulations, and is as much an hereditary property as a zemindaree, paying revenue to Government. Like a zemindaree, the putneedaree tenure can never be cancelled or forfeited, so long as the putneedar pays his rents with regularity. In case of default on the part of the putneedar, the zemindar cannot seize the putnee, but is obliged to apply to the public authorities to sell the tenure with a view to recover the arrears due to him; and whatever sum is realized by such sale in excess of the arrears, is delivered to the defaulting putneedar, in the same manner as the surplus proceeds of a zemindar is paid to a Government defaulter. The zemindar may purchase the tenures when exposed for sale by the public officers, just as a zemindaree may be bought on account of Government; but by no other means can the zemindar ever get or claim the possession of a putneedaree tenure.

The Rajah of Khuruckpore, however, thought it very hard that he could not both eat his cake and have it. He had disposed of a portion of his estates by converting them into putnee talooks, and had realized a large sum to clear off his heavy incumbrances; but, after getting all the money he could, he thought he might as well get back the putnee talooks also. Hence his proceedings to get possession of the putnee talooks vi et armis.

A durkhast was therefore presented in the Joint Magistrate's Court, on the part of the putneedars, (but in the name of one of the number,) whom the Rajah was seeking to oppress by means of his armed followers. The pleader in his petition stated, that Bluwanees Jha, putneedar of Mouza Surowna, purchased that Mouza from Maharajah Rulmut Allee Khan, of Khuruckpore, on a putnee tenure, for the sum specified in the pottah, and obtained the title-deed or pottah of putneedaree, certified by the seal and signature of the Rajah, and registered in the office of the register of Jeds at Bhagulpore, from the beginning of 1244 Fuslee, to be held by him and his heirs for ever, subject to the payment of an annual jumma. That his client obtained possession, and paid the stipulated jumma at the particular instance of the Rajah into the public treasury, and held receipts attested by the Collector. That the Rajah had since, in violation of his engagement, taken it upon himself to attempt to disannul the putnee tenure by forcible means, aided by a large armed body of followers, which has been put beyond his competency by Regulation VIII. of 1819. That he has been committing much subrudustee, with a view to carry off the harvest of the season, and is endeavouring thus to effect his object to the serious detriment of his client; and he begged the Court to take into its consideration, that the Rajah has no manner of right to interfere in his client's putneedaree, beyond demanding the real rent or jumma. But since the Rajah does not abstain from such unwarrantable acts, numerous instances of which have been brought in other cases to the notice of the Court; he therefore prays, that the documents bearing on the validity of the putnee tenure, may be examined, and the circumstances of the case investigated by the Court, and orders passed prohibiting the Rajah to interfere in the concerns of the estate, and prevent his exacting rent from the ryots. The mookhtarkar of the Rajah represented that the estate in question was in the dukhal of the Rajah, and therefore the case was not cognizable in this Court. The Court overruled the objection, stating, that the prosecutor had produced documentary proofs of the validity of the putnee tenure, and receipts of the payment of jumma by him; and, therefore, ordered, that the Rajah be ordered to obtain from interfering in the putnee property, and that a purwannah be sent to the Police thanna, directing it to apprehend any of the Raja's people who might attempt to collect rent from the agents, on proofs being obtained of the same.

This day a durkhast was presented by the Rajah's mookhtarkar, of a very lengthy form, endeavouring to show that the Rajah was the injured party, and had a right to interfere in the affairs of the putnee estates; that the putneedars were a parcel of ungrateful knaves; and that the Court ought to reject their complaints. These arguments the Court overruled; and directed, that the orders passed yesterday be maintained. It would appear by this, that the Court had deliberated well on the question to be decided, and the orders passed two consecutive days are confirmatory of the conclusion. But not so. A moment after the passing of the second day's order, the Court seemed to awake as from a dream. The putneedars, it had no doubt, a moment before, were in legal and actual possession of their estates, and had ordered them to be maintained in their rights; but the next moment it was satisfied, that its first two decisions were perfectly illegal, and at variance with the dictates of "equity and good conscience." The former decisions were reversed; and the putneedars left to the tender mercies of the Rajah.

The pleader of the putneedars remonstrated; employed a variety of arguments to procure, if possible, a reversal of the sudden turn the conscience of the Court had taken; but it was too late. About 140 putneedars have thus in one moment been placed in jeopardy. The Rajah of Khuruckpore has been allowed to have a right to question the possession of the putneedars of their estates—estates created for the express purpose of rescuing him from his pecuniary embarrassments and saving his zemindaree from being brought to the hammer for the realization of the Government revenue, estates for which the stipulated punbha had been duly exacted and paid, and the respective jummas paid into the public treasury at the request of the Rajah. And this unprincipled landlord has been left at liberty to use his own unwarrantable measures in order to expel those from their irrefragable rights, who have rescued him, by the payment of the punbha relating to their respective putneedaries, from unavoidable difficulties; and his zemindaree from the grasp of Government. The rule of "equity and good conscience" upholds an unprincipled oppressor; and dashes the indisputable rights of the hapless oppressed.

The Court remarked, that the complaints of the putneedars could be redressed only by the civil Court. That is, the Rajah is at liberty to take possession of the putnee talooks, about 40 in number, and is to be upheld in such an act of aggression; whereas the putneedars (hereditary landholders) are to appear in a body and deluge the Dewanees Udait with civil suits about what? There is the stumbling question. To obtain possession? Give it first up to the Rajah, let him have his own way in the business, but let the putneedars go into the civil Court. Can the Rajah ever have any right to the possession of these estates? Never.

Why then should he be suffered to have it now?
Hurkaru, December 22.

MOONGHYR, JOINT MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

NOVEMBER 21, 1837.

Murder.—Soobso, who represents herself to be the mother of Kewul, prosecutes Nohunroy and 9 or 10 other persons for the murder of her son. A lengthy report of the darogah of Shekhpoura was read, detailing very particularly the circumstances of the case, as brought to his notice, and ascertained in the course of the usual sooruthhals. Having thus sat in judgment on it in the Moofussil, with culprit, prosecutor, and witnesses before his august ear, this petty Judge, (what else in the name of propriety is he?) tries and decides the merits of the highest crime, (next to suicide) man can perpetrate, and refers the case for the final decision of the Magistrate; and here they are “impleading one another” for life, or the gibbet. The witnesses examined to-day are divided into 3 sets, i. e., such as swear “point blank” to the fact—such as don’t swear thus—and such as swear to nothing at all.

Soobso, the mother, and the rest of the first class, deposed that Kewul, her son, was, without any provocation offered by him, furiously assaulted by the prisoners in a spot of ground, the right of cultivating which he claimed, and the prisoners refusing him admittance thereto. No other weapons of destruction were used by the murderers, besides what nature had supplied them, namely, hands and feet—kicks and cuffs, gave the deceased the external quietus. And this he got for his pains in acting up to the rules of the law of the land (and other better lands to boot,) that “possession is 9 points” thereof; but whether it means possession by right, or de facto, or by law, nobody has ever been able to discover; but, every body knows, is too frequently illustrated by bloodshed and murder—and the present case adds a page to the practical commentary. Having deprived him of all hope of recovery, from the effects of the violence they had done, Kewul, the prisoners, most unaccountably, had feeling enough to convey him home and consign him to the care of his aunt-to-be mother; no doctor being procurable in those barbarous regions of India. At home he lingered a few short hours, and gave up the ghost. Being dead, some of the prisoners took him away with or without her consent, (which of the two it does not appear clearly) to some unobserved place, and there consumed his remains by fire; for which collective deeds, she appears to seek redress; but she did not do this before five or six days had elapsed after the fact. Among other matters, she (and nobody else) deposes, that the prisoner Mohun offered her 10 maunds of grain on the condition that she would hush up the matter, by holding her peace (a hard condition as it respects the last part of it.) This she would not do—and she rejected the offer with great indignation and abhorrence. The chief points of her allegations were corroborated by her class of the witnesses.

Of the other set, some saw with their own eyes, but could not recognize the features of the perpetrators at the time. They saw the kicking and beating, and passed on, or stood aloof. These cannot swear to the identity of the prisoners. What could possibly be the use of such witnesses? For, if they could not distinguish the features of the murderers, neither could they swear to the identity of the murdered. Others swear, there was no cause of quarrel between the prisoners, and the deceased could not say whether the blows inflicted were hardly or rapidly bestowed. Some of these said, that Soobso was not the mother but the aunt of the deceased.

The wife of the deceased had formerly deposed to her not having seen the fact; but now changes her mind, and swears positively that she of course saw the prisoners killing her “good man”—she did not say before (N. B. What is said by witnesses and no less by persecutors and prosecuted at the thanna, is in numerous instances flatly denied before the Magistrate. And this fact is known by daily proofs; and no remedy proposed for the practice of such shameful instances of indisputable perjury;) that she had intreated the people not to beat her husband, but now said that she did it; but, at the same time added, that she was at a distance from the spot. Her husband was not labouring under any indisposition from the effects of which he could possibly have died, without the addition of hard beating. But several of her class of the deponents swear that he was very sick, some, that he had the diarrhea; some the dysentery; some the liver, and all of them (as we heard) that he also had tumours or dropsical legs. Being asked why she did not go to the thanna and give notice of the murder of her husband, she replied, “I sent my mother-in-law” her aunt-in-law, she meant, of course. Question. “You are asked, why you did not go?” Answer. “I sent my mother.” The why or wherefore remains to be conjectured; she was not forcibly prevented from going to the thanna, but words were employed in persuasion, and that it seems succeeded for 5 or 6 days, after which the old woman’s tongue could no longer be curbed. One of these witnesses said, that before the arrival of the darogah on the spot to make tudurook, the old woman told him to be prepared to say what he knew of the matter. Anon swears, that he did not even meet the woman at the time intervening between the reported and actual arrival of the darogah. Another deposes, that he saw only 5 persons. Mohun was ploughing the land. Another witness, that it was another that was doing it. The former did not see Soobso in the place. She was not present. He adds to a question proposed, that not Mohun, but the chowkeedar of the village and the Gorut were ploughing the land. He saw the defendants beating Kewul, but did not recognize any of them at the time. Some were beating, some standing by, but presently said, they were all beating. Another fellow, deposed at the thanna to four persons being concerned in the murder, but on being asked their names, it was found that he had entirely forgotten them. (N. B. This description of forgetfulness we have noticed in many other cases.) He seemed to say that he laboured under some dread at the time the names were written at the thanna, that he would incur the displeasure of the thanna people if he did not sign the paper professing to be his ishar. He did not see the two boys beating the man Kewul. The lads are very young, supposed to be each not older than ten years. The third set knows nothing of the matter—one of them swears that the old woman is not the mother of the deceased.

It appeared, however, plainly, that there was a dispute about a parcel or patch of land, of which Mohun (the chief of the assailants, had got possession, as he says, by poitah granted him by the zameendars, to the prejudice of Kewul, who till then seemed to have held it; but having come to Moonghyr to lodge a complaint about the matter Mohun ploughs up the land, and in other respects secures it to himself, in which proceedings, he is abetted, or assisted, or protected, by the chowkeedar and goryt of the village. Kewul, on his return from Moonghyr, finds Mohun and his party, with those two village officers, ploughing the disputed land. He goes to unloose the cattle from the ploughs, a resisted; he perseveres and, if the witnesses are to be believed, is assaulted by the prisoners: (encouraged by the two village officers, for they were present,) the result of which was, that he lost his life, and became another victim to the laws of possession! At the close of this day’s examination, all the prisoners, excepting the two lads, were sent to Hajut. The lads were directed to be held in custody, but out of the jail.

Nov. 25, the Khurukpore Putneedars.—A durkhat was presented by Imdad Hosayn, holder of two or three putnee estates from the Rajah of Khurukpore; but it contained the same story of the Rajah's using unwarrantable means forcibly to deprive him his putnee villages, for which he had paid a large sum of money, and so forth. The Joint Magistrate told the pleader, that he could not take cognizance of the case in the Foujdaree court, but if the Judge of Bhagulpore would, according to Regulation V., direct him to aid the putneedars, he would do so. But that regulation makes no provision for the matter of the petitioner's complaint, as it merely relates to questions of realizing rent from ryuts, &c., which is not the thing required. The pleader, therefore, in an energetic address, begged the court to observe, that he did not lay stress on the question of possession or dispossession, for, it could not be doubted, for a moment, that the Rajah could claim no right to interfere in the management of the Putnee Mouzas. The very nature of a Putnee tenure ought to satisfy the court, that no arguments could be advanced, by which it could be made out, that the Rajah could, in any court or at anytime advance claims to the possession of the Putneedares, except by purchasing them, if sold for the realization of arrears of rent. He did not therefore see the grounds of the court's rejecting the prayer of the petitioners, who did not request to be put in possession of the disputed property, but to be protected against the unwarrantable aggressions of the Rajah. He fled for refuge from violence to the Foujdaree court, in which such acts were cognizable. By the court's refusing to protect the Putneedars, it was directly giving possession to the Rajah, who can never have so much as a claim to it. It was permitting him to oppress his clients, who, it cannot be for a moment questioned, have possession of their putneedares property.

The court observed, that if it prevented the Rajah's interfering, it would deprive him of his possession. The pleader replied, that, according to the very nature of a putnee tenure, the Rajah cannot be allowed to have possession, nor has he, in any shape whatever, any thing to do with collecting rents from the ryuts. If he had any arrears of jumma demandable from the putneedars, let him apply in the civil court and that of the collector for the sale of the tenure; but the putneedares tenure can never be cancelled; and as he is attempting to do it by taking the law into his own hands, he (the pleader) prayed the court to take the matter into its serious consideration, and defend his clients against the illegal endeavours of the Rajah to deprive them of their inalienable property. But the court na-munsaored the petition. —Hurkaru, December 29.

EDUCATION OF WARDS.

To the Commissioner of Moorshedabad.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 29th ultimo, No. 1684, on the education of the Government Wards.

2. The instructions of the Board were intended to apply to all Wards of Government, whether rich or poor; but with this difference, that while those who are in good circumstances may be expected to pay for their education, those who are poor should be educated gratuitously, or for less than their fair proportion of the cost.

3. On the subject of the last paragraph of your letter, I am directed to observe, that the inclination for European education is now beginning to prevail among the natives to a degree which makes them willing to pay for it, as may be proved by numerous examples. If, therefore, the principal native inhabitants of any place are willing to subscribe for the support of a school, the Board see no objection to the European Officers' aiding them by their countenance and advice. On the contrary, they would fail in their duty if they omitted to do so. It is, no doubt, possible, that natives may, in some instances, subscribe merely for the sake of gratifying the European functionaries whom they see to be interested in the undertaking, but the Board conceive that if the latter act with common prudence—rather following and guiding the popular bent, than forcing it into a coincidence with their own views—the chance of their yielding from motives to supposed influence will not be increased.

With regard to the Moorshedabad Wards, the Board think that (with the exception of Bishenath Roi, who has a separate Tutor) they may, with advantage, be educated (supposing the relatives not to object) at the new school, which is being established at Berhampore, and a monthly contribution proportioned to their fair share of the expence may be paid out of the surplus profits of their estates to the School fund. It is not necessary that every school at which Zemindary Wards are educated, should be under the controul of the Government Education Committee.

The Collector should always select the best seminary available for the purpose, without reference to this point.

5. So far from wishing that the Government Wards should be educated apart from the rest of the pupils, (as conjectured by Mr. Forbes) the Board think that such a practice should be decidedly discouraged. They are convinced that it will be best for all parties that boys destined to succeed to hereditary wealth and honours should mix, as in England, on terms of perfect equality with all those whose relations can afford to place them in the Seminary.

(Signed) C. E. TREVELYAN.

To the Sudder Board of Revenue.

GENTLEMEN,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular of the 1st ultimo, No. 65, on the subject of the education of Wards.

2. In reply, I beg to state, that, except in the Moorshedabad district, there are no male Wards under my charge in this division.

3. There is one point, which appears to me to have been overlooked by the Board in making their orders on this subject so general—it is this, that Wards are often poor men, that it requires vigilance on the part of the Collector in many instances to provide them with a monthly income sufficient for their decent maintenance, without allowing the Government revenue to fall into arrears, and that in such cases the additional expence of a tutor or even of a residence in the Sudder Station, when the family dwelling house 's in the Mofussil, is quite out of the question. I conclude, therefore, that the Board's instructions refer only to those Wards, whose estates afford them a tolerably large income, and with this restriction, I consider the rules laid down in their letter to the address of Mr. Secretary Mangles, dated the 27th June last, highly judicious, and I shall have pleasure in giving them my careful obedience.

4. I subjoin copy of a letter, No. 312, dated the 15th instant, from Mr. Collector Forbes, on the subject of the schools at Moorshedabad; from which the Board will learn, that besides the Nizamut College in the City, there is a school about to be established by means of private subscription in the vicinity of the station at Berhampore, which will probably afford every facility for the education of the Wards in charge of the Court. Should it appear eventually that the assistance of the Committee of Public Instruction is wanted, and wished for to enlarge and give permanency to this institution, I shall do myself the honour of taking the steps, which may appear proper for securing it.

5. In conclusion, I beg leave to enter my protest against acting in my public capacity as the Board's instrument in raising voluntary subscriptions, for the purpose of establishing schools, or for any other purpose whatever.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

J. Lowis, Commissioner of Revenue.

Commissioner's Office, 14th Division, Hooghly, the 29th September, 1837.

TO JOHN LOWIS, ESQ.

*Commissioner of Revenue for the 14th Division at

Sir,—I have now the honour to reply to your circular letter, No. 1250, of the 3rd ultimo, with the Sudder Board's circular, No. 65, of the 1st ultimo, and its annexed correspondence on the subject of a plan for educating the Wards of Government.

2nd. Adverting especially to paragraph 2nd of Mr. Secretary Mangles's letter, No. 919, of the 6th July last, addressed to the Additional Secretary to the Sudder Board, I beg to remark that the facility apparently supposed to exist of educating the Wards at any Seminary already established at Moorshedabad, would seem to be greatly misconceived. Reference is made, I presume, by the Right Honourable the Governor in the paragraph just quoted to the institution, termed the Nizamut College, an institution, I fear, independent of many other, in my judgment, insuperable objections, of too exclusive a character to be at all calculated to aid the desirable object in view. The Nizamut College is supported solely and exclusively from Nizamut Funds, and the main object prescribed by Government is the education of youths connected with the Nizamut, although others are admitted to share in the instruction afforded. As most of the Government Wards may be expected to be Hindoos, I should be inclined to doubt how far a Seminary, essentially Mahomedan, and where there are no facilities for affording the peculiar instructions which would qualify a Bengal Zemindar to superintend the management of his Estates, is calculated to promote the object in view. The College is, moreover, in the heart of the City, in a situation considered by the residents insalubrious, and where there would be much difficulty in procuring accommodation for respectable youths. Finally, the distance of the College, viz. 9 miles from my office and residence, would prevent my being able to promise much aid in personally superintending the Wards.

3rd. Could it be brought to aid the purpose of educating the Wards, a much more feasible, and likely to be successful plan than the preceding, presents itself in the commenced establishment of a Seminary here, very lately proposed at a meeting of the European residents, and a considerable number of the most influential respectable and opulent of the Native community, many of whom have already liberally subscribed, and it is expected that as many more will handsomely come forward.

4th. In reference to the information the Board desire regarding the extent to which assistance might be expected from voluntary contribution, or other local resources, in the event of a School or Schools being established in this District, I fear the readiness and liberality with which the natives have already come forward for the support, in the prospect of advantage to their children, of the school now being founded, would not again be displayed, and, indeed, they could hardly be expected to support of a second institution. The new School, it is proposed to establish at Sydlabad, or in the immediate vicinity of Berhampore, which would so far be convenient; but as the institution has not yet been opened, I can at present scarcely pronounce on its character or prospects of success, though it holds out fair promises; but how far it may be eventually possible to couple with it instruction to the Government Wards cannot at present be determined. It might, perhaps, be deemed undesirable, even were no objection started by the youths themselves or their relations, for the Wards of Government to be allowed to mix and associate indiscriminately with boys of all castes and classes, to whom, I believe this Seminary will be open, though this difficulty might be obviated by a separate apartment being allotted for the Wards; and it remains yet to be seen, which, I fear, is the chief obstacle, how far the subscribers to the proposed institution, by whose voluntary contribution it will be exclusively supported, will consent to the school being placed under the controul, at least in some degree, of the Government, or subject their proceedings and regulations to the dictation of the committee of public instruction. On this latter point consultation with the subscribers would be necessary.

5th. For my own part, I strongly think the most advisable and suitable plan would be to have the Wards instructed at the Sudder Station, by a private Tutor, a mode of education, which, while it would be unobjectionable in regard to the superior rank of the generality of the Wards, would probably secure something like that laudable spirit of rivalry and ambition to excel, of which spirit it has been found by experience that Native youths of rank, bred up in comparative luxury and ease, and with certain expectations of large possession, are wholly devoid. You are, probable aware, that Koonwur Kishenath Raee, who, though his estates are under the jurisdiction of the Bauleah Court of Wards, resides at Cossimbazar, receives instruction from a Private Tutor, Mr. Lambrick, and the difficulty I have just mentioned in regard to exciting this Ward to exertion for want of the stimulus of emulation, is felt by that gentleman as one of the most serious obstacles to the improvement of his pupil.

6th. Should the plan of educating the Wards by private tuition be preferred, I doubt not Mr. Lambrick, provided the situation in point of remuneration were made worth his acceptance, by allowing him a salary proportioned to the labour and responsibility the duty would involve, would be happy to engage himself in the service of Government, as private tutor to its Waifs, and of his qualification as a teacher, the Sudder Board have lately thus expressed themselves in a letter to the Commissioner of the 13th Division. "The Board have seen the minor's tutor, Mr. Lambrick, who appears to be well qualified to fulfil his part most satisfactorily."

I have, &c.

MILITARY ORPHAN SOCIETY.

Allusion has been lately made by our morning cotemporary to a proposition which the Dacca Orphan Committee has circulated, or is about to circulate, to the Army, with a view to re-model the existing managerial system of the Military Orphan Society, substituting in lieu thereof a paid superintendent to conduct the details of the institution. It is added, on the part of our editorial brother, that the proposition is being generally voted for. We doubt whether this point can yet have been so correctly ascertained as to warrant any such inference as to the eventual success of the proposal. The wish, we may perhaps be permitted to believe, was father to the thought. It is, however, in direct opposition to the anticipations regarding its fate which were entertained by the very originators of the question, who have only put forth their own views upon it "in despair—we use their own words—of having their hope realized, that the subject would have been taken up and discussed at some of the larger stations." We would also correct an impression which may obtain that the change is recommended by the Dacca Committee, on the contrary it is merely transmitted by them under rule 36 of the Society's Code, which gives them no option as to the course to be pursued in the case.

The particular propositions are, in more than one point of view, amusing and surprising. A small body of officers, of a single Regiment at the subordinate cantonment of Chittagong, without, as it appears, any meeting, resolve, yea they resolve seven times! The metal thus tried should be gold, pure gold, well refined. But, as we ring the coin, it sounds as of villainous brass. The whole hog however is gone. The reform is whole sale; the abuse comprehensive. The past and present system of supervision is pronounced objectionable, irresponsible because conducted by an unpaid body. Its defects have been particularly shewn, it is said, of late by abortive attempts to improve it and by the concurrent restiveness or unwillingness to oblige, of a large part of the Presidency Staff. As we however have no peculiar process of ratiocination by which we can make cause effect, and effect cause, we would rather be inclined to infer, from what is here said in proof of its defects, that they rather prove its merits and advantages; the attempt to amend having not only been found abortive, but the vast majority of those in whom the administration of the Society must rest having declined to conduct its affairs under any other system than the old. Improvements would readily find advocates and instruments. That they find neither, of sufficient weight and number, implies that they are not what they claim to be.

The second resolution we shall give in all its original beauty and integrity, its modesty and its courtesy. "That the conduct of the present management is in one point of view condemnable in altering the Maddock rules—not that it is intended to assert that these rules are or ever were practicable—but, as many of the old management went out, and the new management hold their seats mainly on account of these new rules, it shews an inconsistency of purpose changing them so soon, and perhaps a self-evident desire for the sweets of office and the power of soi disant reformation." Here all parties are most impartially assailed, the old and the new managements, the Maddockites and the Anti-Maddockites, alike catch it in succession. Some of the dirt may stick; but the prudence of throwing it so indiscriminately is as questionable as its politeness. An ordinary man might have thought that schemes which are not, nor ever were, practicable, that reformation which was only soi disant, should not, and could not, be maintained, and therefore that their conduct who propose and consent to alter such rules, cannot be properly condemned. It is not quite apparent whether the complaint of inconsistency of purpose is directed against the management of the army, but we do not think it reasonable against either, particularly against the former, their act having been fully confirmed by their constituents whose votes admit the necessity for the immediate change, in practical confession, as it were of the inexpediency of their original movement in a contrary direction. In accepting office under the Maddock rules, the existing managers were not bound by or assenting to them; and not a few entered on their duties with the intention of forthwith re-appealing to the good sense of the subscribers to obtain their modification, or, where necessary, their abandonment. In doing this, so far from a self-evident desire for the sweets (?) of office, all the managers who might take the benefit of the more recent modification, will retire the same as if none such had been adopted in their favour or at their recommendation.

The third, fourth and fifth resolutions propose the substitution of a Deputy Governor elected by a majority of, and removable at, the pleasure of two-thirds of the resident subscribers; such "Deputy Government," as it is elegantly termed, being open to officers of 20 years' standing, and having attached a salary of Company's rupees 400 a month in addition to pay and allowances, and apartments in Kidderpore House, and without injury to the professional prospects of the nominee, subject however, and the proviso seems prudent, to the successive sanction of the Commander-in-Chief, the Supreme Government, and the Home authorities. Its duties are to be precisely the same as those which have hitherto been discharged by the general management and its officers. All patronage is to be vested in this paid superintendent, subject to the remarks of an Annual Committee of Subscribers, chosen from Midnapore, Bancoorah, Barrackpore, Dum-Dum and Calcutta, and to the confirmation of the Annual General Meeting in January.

The sixth resolution leaves the appointment of Members for this Annual Committee to the requisition of the Commander-in-Chief; they are to meet at Kidderpore on such days as may be most convenient to themselves, in the end of November; they are to elect their own

President and five are to form a quorum, the object of their formation being "to afford a satisfactory check on the accounts, &c.," which are to be delivered by the President to the January Meeting with the remarks of such Committee on the state of things at Kidderpore, and in England.

We have, we think, correctly represented the character of these four Resolutions, upon which we may now venture a few remarks. A new principle is attempted to be put forth which, when looked into, has nothing new in it. Granting for the nonce that paid services are preferable to unpaid, a responsible to an irresponsible management, we must observe that the institution already has a paid superintendent, whose retention as such has, but lately, been confirmed by a majority of more than 4 to 1 in the largest number of votes that has been, for years, received upon any question referred to the army. It matters not by whom the individual was originally chosen: he has been solemnly and publicly confirmed in his office by the general voice and mature sense of the army. We have therefore paid services already. The proposal is, that these services shall be twice paid. But why such extra expense should be incurred is not easy of explanation. Over the proposed duplicate superintendent, as over the present one, is to be placed a directing Committee nominally responsible, but in what way they are to become more so really than the previous management, we cannot discover. We anticipate, they would be less so, and less efficient; as much less so as they are numerically but one-half of the existing board, as they are chosen not on the spot but from different places, more or less distant without any practical acquaintance with the accounts or affairs into which they are to inquire, chosen for the occasion, for the single purpose, and judging, as they must do, from first impressions, from hearsay, and not from experience and original opinions acquired in the course of long previous managerial service, from superficial inspection at a particular stated period instead of visits made at any and all times, when if there was a desire, to conceal what was doing or had been done, or, in any way, to prepare for the reception of the official examiner, it could not be managed. How, and to whom would such a body be responsible. Their services are optional, are gratuitous, are temporary, and unless confidence be placed in them they will not serve. The whole extent of their responsibility would be, as now and heretofore, dependent upon the individual character, and the general confidence. There cannot be any other check and control over them than this. True, the Government and the Commander-in-Chief might force responsibility upon them by prescribing this as a professional duty. But to suppose that this will be done is to assume that the authorities have been blind to the past and are so to the present state of things, and that both the one and the other are so bad as to require a change, and this particular one. But we have seen and we are not prepared to dispute the wisdom of their standing aloof from any direct public interference in what is in many points of view a private institution that the powers will not come forward with any such intervention. And of what use would the report of the proposed committee be, which is not already secured? that which will henceforth be made in detail by the regular Management, for, in its essentials, be it recollected, it has always been made. Would it, as required by the proposition, afford a satisfactory check on the accounts spread through a whole twelve-month, or of the various cases which, not unfrequently, amount, in one month, to some 50 or 60 or more. We think not, but, if we thought otherwise, it would still be a matter of great doubt to us whether such report would be so satisfactory as that which is assured to us by the present system. And, until it is more satisfactory, there is on the very ground which the requisitionists take up, no necessity for a change.

Next, as to the mode of election proposed, we think it would not answer. The requirement is that a majority of resident subscribers shall elect, and that two-thirds may depose. Now, in 5 questions out of 6, which are carried, neither this nor that majority is ever obtained. References are decided by a majority of voters—not by a majority of subscribers. In single questions, in separate substantive propositions, if that majority cannot be obtained, is it likely to be so where the claims of a score of candidates will divide opinions. Is it likely that the one who this year had a majority of more than one-half in his favour will, in the next, have one of two-thirds against him? and even if so, where is the advantage of public election when public confidence may be so abused as to require his deposition. As to the expense of the proposed arrangement, it would be considerable, nearly 5,000 rupees a year, besides the expense of a house for his accommodation: for apartments are not available for his use at Kidderpore. To build, therefore, a commencing outlay of some 10 or 15,000 rupees would be required.

It is not provided that the superintendent should be married, which, however, is likely to be thought an indispensable qualification. The whole of the patronage, in any year, will be centred in him, and liable only to be otherwise disposed of if the General Meeting disapprove, for though the Committee may remark it cannot reject. This is a strong objection and throws unnecessary power into the hands of an individual who may, and very possibly will abuse it.

The seventh resolution does not require notice. In fine we may add, that these attempts to introduce a duplicate paid superintendent, are made or encouraged by the same parties who, having disgusted their old faithful servants, and discouraged many who else had cheerfully joined the management, are now seeking to build up a new system on what they think their successful and complete destruction of the old. They have created the dislike, the difficulty of which they complain for this express purpose, that having created it they may profit by it. But there are still some to stand in the breach—and their efforts will, in the end, and that not far distant, be acknowledged by the army. Conscious of the unmerited withdrawal of confidence from their predecessors by some, and the lamentable supineness of the rest of the subscribers, they seek to shape a middle course, to occupy a neutral ground between opposite opinions, in the hope, by resisting all reforms but what are real and proper improvements, to get both parties to acknowledge their hastiness, to re-trace their steps to the old line of safety, to appease the excitement of the subscribers where it still exists, to re-kindle their confidence in those in whom it should be placed, and, again to re-enlist in the General Management the efficient and honest services of those whom they have succeeded, and to whom they confess their own inferiority in experience and usefulness. Their disgust and irritation was, at first, natural; but, perhaps, a little in excess, and, we trust, that it will no longer be allowed to operate. The question is not, never should have been, one of personal considerations. After showing a just sense of the unhandsome treatment they sustained, by a withdrawal of their services when no longer properly appreciated and continuing that secession until it is now proved that they were right, and that the machine works but lamely without them, we hope soon to see them as of old, sacrificing self to the public good and resuming their old and honoured posts. While of them we expect this change, from the army we require one that shall correspond—a frank and full acknowledgment of hastiness and error, a restoration of confidence, a determination to put down petty complaints, to discountenance interested advice and litigious opposition. We ask much, but not too much. Amentum ire redintegratio amoris est. May it be so soon!—Hurthorn, Dec. 20.

ADDRESS TO SIR C. T. METCALFE, &c.

TO THE HON. SIR C. T. METCALFE, Esq., G. C. B.

Lieutenant-Governor, North Western Provinces.

HON'BLE SIR,—We the undersigned East Indians, residents of Agra, beg leave to address you on the occasion of your approaching departure from this station, preparatory to your embarkation for England, to testify our grateful sense of the very liberal interest you have invariably evinced in the behalf of our countrymen.

2. Your munificent donation towards the late Mr. Ricketts' deputation to England in our cause, and your really generous and voluntary grant, by which the Parental Academy, an institution founded by East Indians, was relieved from its pecuniary difficulties are instances, the recollection of which will ever be cherished with the most lively feelings of gratitude by every East Indian; while you will live in the memory of all by the numberless beneficent acts, which have become proverbial with your name in India.

3. We, in common with the whole of the community of India, lament your intended departure from our native land. We deplore your approaching secession from your high and honourable office as a public loss; and deeply regret the causes which may have led to the termination of your connexion with this country. One of these causes, agreeably to the general impression, is the disapprobation of the Home Authorities of one of the brightest acts of your Government, the Emancipation of the Press in India; an act, the benefits of which are already being experienced and appreciated, and will be felt in this country to the remotest age. We regard a Free Press as the mighty engine by which India will in time rise to an equality with other civilized parts of the globe in intelligence, refinement and good government, and as the best safeguard it can possess against the inroads of corruption and misrule. We therefore admire and respect you as the Statesman, who, by a single measure of unquestionable utility, has laid our country under a perpetual obligation.

4. We beg, Hon'ble Sir, to tender our unfeigned and heartfelt thanks for the eminent services you have uninterruptedly, through a long and honourable career of seven-and-thirty years, rendered to our country. In them the integrity of your heart, the soundness of your judgment, and the benevolence of your nature, have been throughout conspicuous; and they have secured for you and your name a permanent place in the affections of all classes in the Indian empire.

We trust that in giving expression to our feelings on the present occasion, in a separate address, we do not incur the charge of endeavouring to perpetuate a distinction, which it is our wish and interest to see removed. We shall always readily unite with our European and native brethren on every question of general utility or importance; but, in the present instance, we feel that we have special duty to perform towards you for favours received for a section of society; we have therefore thus come forward to signify our regard for you, and our approbation of your measures. We anticipate with pleasure, that all classes in India will be desirous in some form or other to express their sense of your private virtues and public worth, must necessarily be an humbler; but ours need of praise. We beg, Hon'ble Sir, your kind acceptance of this address, together with the accompanying tokens, expressive of our respect, gratitude, and esteem.

6. Before we conclude, permit us to record our most hearty wishes for your future prosperity, and our firm persuasion that, whether you re-enter the arena of public life, either in England or in India, or seek the more quiet enjoyments of a retired one, your energies so long as they can be exerted, will be devoted to the well-being of your fellow-creatures, and that India, with its millions, will never be forgotten by you. It is our fervent desire that you may long live with unimpaired health to exercise the generous impulses of your heart; and our most earnest prayer to the Almighty bestower of good is, that He may make you the special object of His grace and care through the remainder of your earthly career, and at its distant close, administer to you an abundant entrance into His kingdom and glory.

With every sentiment of esteem and respect, we beg to subscribe ourselves,

Honourable Sir, your most obedt. and grateful servts.
Agra, 1st December, 1837. 115 SIGNATURES.

REPLY.

TO THE EAST INDIAN RESIDENTS OF AGRA.

SIRS,—I beg you to accept my cordial thanks for the honour which you have conferred on me by your kind and affectionate address.

I fear, that you greatly overrate my humble services, as respects both your own community and the general interests of the Indian empire; but, it is characteristic of generous minds to form a high estimate of any marks of interest and good will; and to this spirit on your part, more than to any merit on mine, I must ascribe the warm feelings with which you have come forward to express your sentiments on the occasion of my departure from India. These sentiments I value most highly, and I shall cherish the recollection of this meeting as one of the most gratifying circumstances of my life.

I rejoice that you are now in possession, generally, of the same rights that are equally possessed by your European and native brethren, and free from those exclusions which formerly depressed you. The justice of the Legislature has declared, that there shall be no legal impediments to your rising to the highest offices in the State; and, undoubtedly, the day will come, when all other obstacles that may exist, will be likewise removed, and all injurious distinctions entirely effaced.

No community is better entitled to every privilege that can be bestowed; for you yield to none in respectability of character and virtuous conduct. I speak from the observation of nearly a whole life passed in India, and I shall quit this country impressed with the highest respect for your worth in private life, and your distinguished ability and efficiency as public servants, performing a large portion of the business of the State, and contributing by your indefatigable exertions, your talents, zeal and integrity to the welfare and prosperity of the Government and the people. I have now before me some, whose services have come directly under my own observation, and whose merits and qualifications are eminently conspicuous.

The Parental Academic Institution to which you have adhered, is a noble institution, and does infinite credit to its founders and Directors. It gives me great pleasure however, to perceive that you repudiate the intention of regarding yourselves as a separate community, or of perpetuating distinctions, which ought to cease. It is by the union of all classes in brotherly love, that the interests of this great country will be best promoted.

I entirely concur in the sentiments which you have expressed regarding the Liberty of the Press. I trust that it will prove an engine of immense benefit. Having recently had occasion to dwell at length on this subject in answer to another address, at the presentation of which, many of you, I believe, were present, and also at the same time to explain the circumstances, which have caused my retirement from the public service, I will not trouble you now with any further remarks on those points.

Forgive me, if I say, that I regret your having thought it necessary to add to your kind address a costly token of your regard. The gratifying sentiments which you express, are to me the best of tokens. But I recognize in this part of your proceeding the same spirit that has pervaded the whole of your conduct towards me, and that of your brethren on other occasions; a warm-hearted spirit, which magnifies the little that I have ever done, is not content without taxing itself to manifest its praise. I shall deposit your valuable present, with your still more valued address, where they will be continually before me, and I shall ever look on them with pride, as tokens of the esteem of a community whose approbation is honour.

You justly anticipate, that, if ever I enter into public life in England, my anxious thoughts and endeavours will be directed to the welfare of India; which, I confidently believe, will be best promoted by her permanent union with the British empire in the ties of mutual interest and affection: India partaking of every advantage that the other portions of the Great United Empire enjoy; including the abolition of every obstacle that can impede her prosperity.

With the fervour of benevolent and the piety of devout hearts, you have invoked Almighty God to bless my future career. I shall ever remember with deep felt gratitude your affectionate prayer. May it be heard at the Throne of Grace. May our Heavenly Father bless you. May your hopes be happy and prosperous. May His bountiful goodness bless all India, and grant to this fine region of countless millions every benefit bestowed on the most favoured countries. These are among the warmest wishes of my heart.

Knowing that all earthly happiness is frail and transitory, you have carried your kind thoughts for me beyond this world, into realms of bliss and Glory—where a conscious sense of my own demerits would preclude all hope of entering, were it not for the boundless mercy which vouchsafes redemption and salvation to repentant sinners. May that mercy be upon us all.

(Signed) C. T. METCALFE.

Agra Ukhbar, Dec. 16.]

TO THE HON'BLE SIR CHAS. T. METCALFE, BART. G.C.B.

Lt.-Gov., N. W. P., of British India, &c.

HON'BLE SIR,—We the undersigned British residents at Agra and its vicinity, beg to approach you on the occasion of your departure from the seat of your Government with the expression of our sincere and unmixed regret.

It is not our design, nor perhaps could we sufficiently enumerate the many beneficent acts which have emanated during the long period within which you have been called on to take a part in, or to preside over the affairs of this country; but we cannot refrain from adverting to one which (should the general report be true) is universally assigned as the cause of the loss of your eminent and valuable services, we allude to the act by which the freedom of the press was extended to this country, and we beg to express our conviction that nothing has occurred since the passing of this act in question, (neither is there any just reason to suppose that anything will occur) to afford the slightest ground to doubt the judgment which caused its enactment.

You are now retiring from the active duties of the Government of a country with affairs of which you have to ran uninterrupted period of 37 years being intimately connected, and whose lofty attitude and distinguished name amongst surrounding states have been maintained not less by your firmness and decision than by the spotless purity of your character; and we derive some consolation from the hope that your energies yet unimpaired will be exerted in your native country to promote and advocate the best interests of India, and thus not entirely to deprive the councils which direct its affairs of your valuable and extensive experience.

To your public worth and virtues the gratitude of all India is most justly due, while in the less conspicuous but equally honorable character of a member of society, you command the esteem and best wishes of the entire community, and we have reason to know that whilst by all classes your loss will be deplored, by none will your absence be more deeply felt than by the distressed and destitute who have uniformly found in you a munificent benefactor and generous friend.

In conclusion we beg to offer our earnest wishes, that under the direction of a merciful Providence you may have a speedy and prosperous voyage to your native shores and be there long blessed with a continuance of health to enjoy the reward of honest, honorable service, and the gratification which the knowledge of having gained the respect and love of millions of our native fellow subjects with the esteem and honour of your own countrymen must ever afford.

SIR CHARLES METCALFE'S REPLY.

TO THE BRITISH RESIDENTS AT AGRA AND ITS VICINITY.

Sirs,—I beg you to accept my cordial thanks for the honour which you have conferred on me in this address.

The esteem of honorable minds, the kind feelings of generous hearts, are the highest earthly honours that man can receive, and I prize beyond measure the sentiments which you have expressed.

You are pleased to allude in terms of praise to my humble services during an uninterrupted employment of thirty-seven years in India. I should rejoice exceedingly if I could flatter myself with the persuasion, that my endeavours have been in any great degree beneficial; but, I feel, alas! that the results have been far below my wishes, and I have always seen occasion to lament how inadequate is the portion of perceptible good effected by our best intentions and exertions.

You bear important testimony to the benefit of the Act legalizing the Liberty of the Press, in the opinion which you have declared on that subject. The worst that can be said of the Liberty of the Press is, that it may do harm. No one can doubt that it must work a vast deal, of good. If, therefore, it neither does nor is likely to do mischief, it must be an unalloyed benefit.

I regard the passing of that Act by the Local Government of India as a glorious monument to the honor of the East India Company, and as a proof of the merit of its administration, notwithstanding defects from which no Government is entirely free. That Act evinces to the world that the Company's Government desires no concealment; that it is glad to have the most minute particulars of its Indian administration scrutinized and displayed to the gaze and criticism of the universe; that it seeks information and instruction wherever they are to be found; and that it does not wish to rule India as a conquered, ignorant and enslaved, but as a cherished, enlightened, and free country.

Whatever may be the will of Almighty God with respect to the duration of British Rule in India, it would be vain and foolish to attempt to uphold it by shackling the people with the chains of ignorance. It would be unworthy policy to deny to them any benefit, consisting with the safety of the State, that can tend to elevate them in the scale of human beings. This country has been gained and is maintained by the sword, and honor be to the army to whom under Providence the British Empire owes this splendid possession. But looking to future ages—our dominion can only endure by the affections of the people; by their feeling that under British rule they are more prosperous and happy and free, than they could be under any other Government; and that their welfare and our rule are linked together. I look to the Liberty of the Press as one of those measures, which by shewing the paternal disposition of the Government will tend to produce that result—a result not to be expected from a system of unconfiding restraint.

For those who object to the Liberty of the Press there is another justification of the act of legalization which is, that any other law on the subject was morally impossible. I will defy the ingenuity of man to devise any restrictions, short of absolute suppression, which no one would have attempted, that could have been effectual. Modified restrictions had been tried and had utterly failed. The Press was practically free though insecure, but the law regarding it was in absurd confusion. Throughout one presidency there was a code of restrictions so disguised that no Government would think of enforcing them. Throughout another presidency there were no restrictions, but perfect liberty by law, opposed in vain by the Government. In a third presidency there was restraint in the Provinces and liberty in the Metropolis.

Restrictions were most complete in the Presidency of Fort William, and there the practical liberty used was greatest. In this chaos of the state of the Press, when laws came to be made for all India, common sense pointed out that there was but one law that could be made with any effect, a law of liberty and responsibility to Courts of Justice. If restrictions, where they existed, were not, and morally could not, be enforced, how could they be introduced, with any reason, or any prospect of success where they previously did not exist? The Press in India has been practically free from the moment when the Government discovered, about twenty years ago, that it could not enforce the censorship which then existed; that is, could not legally inflict the penalties attached to its violation on any one who in the eye of the law was a native of India. This being known, the censorship was set at defiance; and the Press was of itself free. There came a code of restrictions which being no more law than the Censorship, was equally disregarded. There came another Code of restrictions, which was made law in some places and was no law in others, and whether it was law or no law, was equally disregarded and disused. All the good feelings of British Governors shrink from the habitual infliction of its penalties. All the spirit of British subjects restricted its shackles. The British subjects in India would have a Free Press, and the Government could not prevent it without a despotism and oppression contrary to its own disposition, and totally opposed to the spirit of British institutions.

Under all these circumstances, when it became my duty as Governor-General of India to propose a law for the Press, there seemed to me but one course that could rationally be pursued. I knew by experience of the past, that restrictions would be inefficient, and that to legislate with a view to restraint, even if it had been desirable, would justly expose the Government to ridicule, and be of no avail. The time was peculiarly favorable for full liberty, as the Government had then acquired the power of Legislation, and could provide by law against real danger to the safety of the State, that might from any cause arise; which before it could not do. The time was favorable for another reason also. It was clear that the Liberty of the Press would some day come, and it was better to grant it with a good grace than to wait until it was extorted. A people gradually habituated to the use of the Press as a customary part of their institutions, is much less likely to abuse it than if it were forced from an unwilling Government, and in a manner seized upon by clamor and agitation in a period of excitement. It must always be a fault to defer acts of grace until they cease to be so considered, and are therefore of no effect in winning good will. The circumstances therefore, the time, the intrinsic merits and benefits of a Free Press, and the impossibility of enacting restrictions with any prospect of success, all combined to point out the legalization of the Liberty of the Press as the only course to be pursued. I should have been ashamed of myself if I had followed any other. As it is, whatever its consequences may have been to me, I never can regret the measure. Under the circumstances it was the only act on the subject that could be passed with any chance of success and efficiency. It was an act of prudence and common sense. It was also, I trust, a measure of great public benefit.

You have alluded to this act as the supposed cause of my retirement from the public service. This is a subject on which I have some difficulty in offering explanation. I am loath to make a mystery of what, as far as I am concerned, is a very plain matter; but I am apprehensive that, in entering into details, I might deviate from proper respect to authorities, to whom respect is due from all, and gratitude especially from me, for repeated distinctions, so spontaneously conferred. In what I am about to say, I trust that I shall not depart from the obligations prescribed by either the one or the other of these sentiments. You may remember reports which prevailed last year, stating, that I was in disgrace with the Home Authorities on account of the Liberty of the Press. That was not a position in which I could remain with comfort. I sought information at the Fountain Head, with a view to a better understanding, without success. The reply was not explicit, but its uncordial tone, indicative of alienation, satisfied me, that the reports which had prevailed were not untrue, and that I could not longer remain in the service of the East India Company with credit or satisfaction to myself. I do not state these facts under any notion of being aggrieved. Neither do I presume to question the conduct of those authorities. They have an indisputable right to exercise their judgment on mine. Their displeasure, from whatever cause proceeding, may be just. But just or otherwise its effect on me is the same. I cannot continue to serve with such an impression permanently prevailing against me. I quit my post with reluctance. I cannot be happier any where than I have been at Agra. With important duties, affectionate companions, and a friendly society, I have here enjoyed much of what I most value in life. With great measures in progress and the aid of functionaries of the highest character and qualifications in the offices of control and superior importance; with a Civil Service full of honor, zeal and ability; and abundance of merit and efficiency in every branch of public employment, I had every prospect of a successful and beneficial administration. I was perfectly content. I desired no change, and if I could have remained with honor, I know no limit that I should voluntarily have put to my continuance in this office, except loss of health or faculties. I quit my duties and my residence among you with great regret; but the act is my own, and I alone am responsible for it. I may have been mistaken. I may have been misled by erroneous information. I may have misconstrued the circumstances that have occurred. But if that information and my construction be correct, as I believe them to be, I had no other course open to me, in my opinion, than that which I have adopted. It is a matter of feeling. Had I been differently constituted. Had I been blind or indifferent to manifest estrangement, I might have remained, and I should, perhaps, have been permitted to die in the service in which I was born, in which the best years of my life have been passed, and to which I would willingly have devoted the remainder.

That will now glide away in another country, if I live to reach it, the country which we all most love, and to which we all look for rest after our Indian labours. You express the kindest wishes—you speak of happiness and usefulness. Happiness, with the blessing of the Almighty I have no doubt of enjoying in the society of affectionate relatives and friends, and in the delights of reading and retirement. -Of the power of public usefulness I have no expectation and great doubt. The only tempting theatre for public exertion is Parliament, where the great interests of the country are promoted or marred. But the violence of party spirit, to which the welfare of the Empire is often sacrificed, the uselessness of any one whose only party is his country, the want of local reputation and influence, the corrupt practices of candidates and voters, and the utter ruin to moderate means of contested elections, make a formidable array of obstacles against any attempt to push myself into the Imperial Senate, even if I could suppose that I might be of any utility there. The retirement, therefore, of private life, where no doubt the greatest happiness is to be found, seems to be my future destiny. I shall nevertheless be ready to take a part in public affairs whenever I am called by duty, or, in other words, whenever I have an opportunity of being useful; for I consider it to be the duty of every man to serve his country to the utmost of his ability; and if I ever become a public man in England, my long attachment to India will naturally lead me to exert myself for her welfare and benefit, and for her permanent union with the British Empire, in the ties of mutual interest, the only security for mutual affection.

I ought to apologize for having addressed you at such length on objects connected with my own views and feelings. But you must in part blame yourselves. You have overwhelmed me with kindness: my heart is open, and I have been pouring out its contents without restraint to friends whose cordiality I have experienced. Permit me, now, to say, Farewell. May every good attend you. The period of my residence among you, but for the miseries of the poor this season from drought, would have been one of the happiest eras of my life. I part from you with reluctance and sorrow, and with heartfelt sentiment towards you, of respect, gratitude, and affection. Many of us, I hope, may meet again in another land. God bless you all.

FAREWELL BALL TO SIR CHAS. METCALFE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Last evening the Society of Agra assembled at the Station Rooms, by invitation, from the members of the Civil Service, resident at Agra, to grace a farewell fancy dress ball given by them to our esteemed Governor, Sir Charles Metcalfe. Any powers of description would fail in conveying a correct idea of the elegance and splendour of the affair,—the following must be considered only an attempt.

The rooms were most tastefully fitted up for the occasion, a handsome pavilion was erected at the eastern end of the ball room, and also the door-ways hung with festoons, (pink and white, Sir Charles's colors) and one of the side rooms was formed into a Turkish tent of the same colors. We observed fine, handsome transparencies in the ball room, the first representing Sir Charles's arms, &c. and the words "Governor-General of all India;" the others, "Envoy to Lahore," "Resident at Hyderabad," "Resident at Scindiah's Court," "Resident at Delhi," "Member of Council," "Vice President in Council," "Governor of Agra," "Lt.-Govr. N. W. P. The outside of the house and the whole compound were brilliantly illuminated, some thousands of variegated glass lamps were made for the occasion.

The company began to assemble soon after 9 o'clock. Sir Charles arrived about half-past 10, and was received on his entrance by the principal member of the Civil Service, several of whom, we remarked, were in Court dress. Amongst the costumes we remarked first and foremost, a splendid group of Turks in magnificent and appropriate dresses, and we were glad to observe that the neighbouring station of Muttra had yielded one of its fairest ornaments to add to the lustre of the group. We also remarked a lady in Court dress, most correctly and brilliantly adorned. Till we saw her, we always thought the trite saying "beauty unadorned, adorned the most" was correct; we are now sceptical. Most of the ladies were in beautiful fancy dresses, we particularly noticed two Syrens from the European lines, one as Flora McIvor, the other as the beautiful Gulnare.

Of the male part of the company the Begging Fidler attracted most attention. The gallant Col. ———, as Coxswain of Her Majesty's ship "Malcolm," was excellent. Turks, Greeks, Persians, &c. &c. &c. were in abundance. Most of the company adopted Sir Charles's colors, pink and white.

The supper room was tastefully fitted up, the large transparency was admirable,—the following is a faint description.

The figure of Fame, with her trumpeter in one hand and the other grasping a wreath of laurels, and a beautifully executed scroll with the following inscription, "Free Press," "Colonization," "Unrestricted Commerce," "Freedom of Discussion," "Equality of Rights," "Public Spirit," "Benevolence," "Liberality," "Integrity;" and, in the centre, surrounded by wreaths of laurel, oak and flowers were the words, "A happy Voyage Farewell."

P. S. At about one, the supper was announced, and Sir Charles led the way, handing Mrs. Taylor, the lady of the principal member of the C. S. The stewards each conducted one of the ladies of the Corps Militaire, amongst them, we remarked,

Mr. Taylor and Mrs. Lindsay,
Mr. Hamilton and Mrs. Buckley,
Mr. Mansel and Mrs. Pogson,
Mr. Becher and Mrs. Burroughs.

The supper was elegant, and afforded abundance of every thing. After it had been duly discussed and each partner had drank to the "lady of his love" in a bumper or two of champagne, (one stout gentleman sighed so by us, it was quite uncomfortable,) Mr. Hamilton arose, and silence having been obtained, he proposed the health of Sir Charles in a well-delivered and appropriate speech. He rose to propose the health of Sir Charles, the brightest ornament of the Civil Service; a name not now belonging to that alone but to all India, a man whose public character and private virtues had won for him the admiration and esteem of all India. No man had left this country occasioning such deep and universal sorrow, beloved and regretted. The best wishes of all assembled this night to do him honour would be with him wherever he went. The feeling of enthusiasm had been equally displayed on several late similar occasions. He felt his powers fail him in endeavouring to portray the public character of such a man,—he was unequal to do justice to the subject, &c. &c. &c. Three hearty rounds of cheers, hip, hip, hurrah, and one cheer more, followed this address, which went to the hearts of all. Sir Charles then rose and said he was most grateful for the honour that had been that night done him: he felt deep regret in being about to part with so many valued and tried friends, "When the heart is fresh the tongue is sweet," said Sir Charles with deep emotion, and sat down overwhelmed by his feelings. We remarked the tear drop standing in many a fair and beautiful eye at the short, but feeling address of Sir Charles. All were sensible that they had then heard that kind, benevolent, and much-beloved voice for the last time. A tap, tap, tap, on the table, however, roused the guests again, and tossing off a glass to bring up their spirits, they heard the health of the "ladies" proposed. The ladies who had honored and assisted them that evening in doing homage to their distinguished guest.

Then followed "Colonel Lindsay and our Military guests." Mr. Hamilton said, he was delighted to see around him so many of our friends united in one common cause to do honor to Sir Charles. That Sir Charles had indeed some claim to be ranked amongst their chivalry. That the neighbouring fortresses of Bhurtpoor and Deeg, and all who remembered and had witnessed "Lord Lake's campaigns, could bear testimony "to his prowess. As Sir Charles a few nights ago had justly remarked, "honor be to that army by whom this country was won." That he was happy to say the utmost cordiality and union existed amongst the services at this station, and he trusted that it would ever be so. It was his opinion, and that of all whose opinion was worth anything, that in this union consisted our strength and the welfare and preservation of these dominions which their swords had won.

Colonel Lindsay then returned thanks in the name of himself and brother officers, and proposed the health of the members of the Civil Service. Here the band struck up and summoned the dancers to another room, which the ladies obeyed in all haste, whereby we lost, we understand, a specimen of the flowers of rhetoric that we hope is reserved for some other occasion, though none can deserve it so well.

The dancing was kept up with great spirit till a late hour in the morning.—Hurkaru, December 27.

FAREWELL ADDRESSES TO SIR R. W. HORTON, BART.

To His Excellency the Right Honorable Sir ROBERT WILMOT HORTON, Bt., G. C. B.

&c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

We, the loyal Chiefs, headmen and others, subjects of the Crown of Great Britain in Her Majesty's Colony of Ceylon, having with the deepest regret heard of your Excellency's intended departure from Ceylon, are at a loss to collect words to express our true feelings towards your Excellency. Your Excellency's benign disposition has endeared you to the hearts of the Ceyloneze.

The many great acts of benevolence conferred by your Government, resemble the good maxims and example of virtue of ancient Kings and Princes, as we read in our religious and historical books.

Since your accession to the Government of Ceylon the Rajecaria or Compulsory labour (which so firmly continued from the origin of Ceylon) having been done away, it has bestowed an inestimable blessing in general on the Country. It enabled the inhabitants to follow without hinderance the pursuits of agriculture, trade, &c., and to secure their true comfort. We must confess, the compulsory labour was a painful burden on the inhabitants, and it was a bar to every comfort of life. The abolition of compulsory labour has likewise given means of living to numberless indigent persons, whose livelihood depended upon their daily labour, and who now have an opportunity to employ themselves in Her Majesty's works on being paid reasonably.

The abolition of the Cinnamon-Monopoly is tending greatly to the welfare of the country, its benefit (according to the prudential arrangement made thereon) stands between the Government and the country. It has removed the destruction of Cinnamon plant (which so thickly and spontaneously grew in almost every part of the Island), as well as the punishments by indictments of heavy fines, imprisonment, &c. to which the inhabitants were subject, in cases of this destruction either by known or unknown hands.

The Cattle Ordinance issued in your Excellency's time, proves to be a prudent one. It ensures great advantage to the proprietors of land and agriculture, and tends much to their protection.

By your Excellency's having modified and reduced to only one-tenth the Government share of the fish caught in the sea, &c. (which were before subjected to different exorbitant taxes, the classes of inhabitants whose livelihood solely depend upon it, have been greatly benefited as well as the country at large.

The abolition of duty on timber, of public and private ground, has given the inhabitants opportunities to improve their buildings according to their respective abilities, and to derive all benefits procurable from timber, and it has likewise saved punishments on the people in cases of trespasses against the restrictions on timber.

The taking away of several restrictions regarding the different mines and quarries, have in like manner rendered beneficial means of livelihood to the country.

The abolition of the tax on tobacco, which is an article of great demand, has been very advantageous and encouraging to its cultivators, and beneficial to the country.

The forcible collection of cocoanut leaves from the trees of private gardens to supply fodder for Government elephants was to a great extent injurious and detrimental to those invaluable trees, which are equally useful to the Government and the country, and the proprietors suffered greatly by that most injurious practice. Your Excellency's order forbidding this injurious act as well as your forbidding white or tender olives being forcibly taken to be used for ornaments on occasion of the movements of the Governor, &c. have tended to the improvement and growth of cocoanut trees, and the proprietors thereof have been alleviated of the pain created by that conduct.

The circumstance of great many proclamations, regulations and advertisements, which were issued from time to time from the Government of the late Earl of Guildford, making the orders of Government matters of different research. Your Excellency has consolidated them, and the country has the opportunity to gain an insight into such orders in one view.

The arrangement of judicial business, by establishing District Courts in the respective districts and by having means of appeal and recourse in civil and criminal cases to the Hon'ble the Supreme Court, Ceylon experiences all desirable relief and benefit.

The abolition of Ouliam duty from the Chetty, Moor and Malabar people so thickly inhabiting Ceylon, has tended much to their welfare and comfort.

The abolition of the assessment tax on houses within the four Gravets of Colombo and Galle, the annual rent of which did not exceed two pounds and fourteen shillings each, has contributed greatly to the amelioration of the condition of the poorer classes of the people, who are the occupiers of such small houses, as their property had been very often previous to the enactment of the ordinance No. 2, of 1835, by your Excellency, destrained and sold to levy this tax.

The arrangements made, the willingness manifested, and the encouragements held out by your Excellency for promoting vaccination throughout the island, have had the desired effect, and thereby the lives of many, which otherwise would be sacrificed to that dreadful malady "the small pox," are saved.

Although, we are aware, that some of the above measures were introduced upon the recommendation and instructions from the Home Government, yet it will be an act of injustice on our part were we to omit expressing our gratitude to your Excellency for the judicious and praiseworthy manner, in which those instructions have been carried into execution to suit the convenience and comfort of every individual concerned.

The most laudable examples of virtue and charity which your Excellency and Lady Horton have shewn in affording relief to the sufferers by the late inundation, have dignified the character of your Excellency and Lady Horton in the whole of Ceylon, and the commendation and applause of that act of your charitable virtue is indeed very great.

Having summarily observed the great many acts of benevolence which your Excellency has conferred on Ceylon, we have to ask our testimony of the comfort and happiness which the country has unceasingly enjoyed during the period of your Government, by its having had most flourishing harvests of every kind of produce as well as propitious seasons; having had none of the scarcities, pestilences, or any great disasters in the country.

We, in conclusion, beg leave fervently to thank your Excellency's friendly disposition to the Ceyloneze on every occasion, which in addition to the foregoing, we would ever cherish in our minds, and we beg your Excellency to accept our most unfeigned and most heartfelt thanks for all that your Excellency has done to us, and we further beg to express our cordial and sincere wishes for the welfare and prosperity of yourself, and honored family. May Heaven bless your Excellency and them with long and felicitous lives.

We remain with the greatest affection and esteem,

Your Excellency's most obedt. humble servants,

QUEEN'S HOUSE, Nov. 15, 1837.

GENTLEMEN.—I am directed by Sir R. W. HORTON to acknowledge the receipt of your address of this day's date, and to express to you the satisfaction he has derived from its perusal.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,

Your very obedient servant,

E. R. POWER.

Don Solomon Dias, Modeliar, and others.

To His Excellency the Right Hon^{ble} Sir ROBERT WILMOT HORTON, Bart., Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Guelphic Order, late Governor and Commander in Chief of the Island of Ceylon, &c. &c. &c.

The humble address of the Headmen and other Loyal subjects of Her Majesty, and the Mohabaddes of the Island of Ceylon.

MAJESTY PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

The undermentioned loyal subjects of Her Majesty with sentiments of gratitude and respect, most humbly and submissively beg to offer our sincere and hearty thanks for your kind protection and favours tendered to the inhabitants of this colony during your paternal Government, by enacting regulations, ordinances, and rules, by establishing useful institutions, by patronising various important Societies, established and supported by the subscriptions and donations of private individuals, by presiding at the several meetings of such institutions, contributing pecuniary assistance out of your own private purse, and granting the help of Government in your public capacity, by all which favours of your Excellency, the population of this Colony have been extensively and universally benefited; and as it is hardly to be supposed that any individual by a mere general survey of the acts of Government can anticipate or form a full idea of the advantages that may at length result from those acts, and as we are anxious that the public in general should be enabled to acquire a full view of the propriety of the measures which you have adopted, and the magnitude of their result, and in the firm hope that their minds will be impressed with the views we have taken, and freely join in our sentiment. We beg to detail and particularize those successful measures and acts of your administration, from which we trust, that many fruitful and happy advantages will ultimately ensue. The opening of a new canal at Hendelle for the convenience of going to Negombo more quickly than by the old Canal, so that coconuts and other provisions, which the inhabitants were before obliged to convey in small quantities on their shoulders and on their heads, and could not return home till the next day, can now in one day be conveyed by water in large quantities at a great saving of manual labour, time, and expence, by the means of this canal, were the coconut husks and shells, and fire-wood that were before nearly useless, have now been rendered valuable and have become articles of merchandise; so that, many very poor persons, who are numerous in that part of the country, are able to convey the same by water, and thus support themselves and their families. By means of this canal, also, the people are enabled to undertake agriculture with safety, in which they were before hindered for want of a stream to wash away the salty and stagnated water of the field Mootoorajewelle, for the opening of which we are indebted to your Excellency, and which has proved so great a blessing to the inhabitants. To your Excellency we are also indebted for allowing individuals infected with small-pox, without distinction of persons, to undergo quarantine at their own houses, when they must otherwise have been obliged to be separated from their families and carried away to the public hospital, to the great sorrow and agitation of all persons concerned, and whereby the patients entertaining great fear sometimes had their illness increased, and their lives endangered.

Another benefit, for which we are indebted to your Excellency, is the abolition of the gambling tax; a tax, which encouraged honest and respectable individuals to become gamblers and thieves to the prejudice of themselves and their families; and by which, servants were tempted to steal their master's property, so that the gambling shop became a depository of stolen goods. It was by your Excellency's kind and humane interposition, that provisions were supplied to the sufferers by the late inundation, and that boats were employed by Government, to save people from perishing by the water; the reduction of the stamp duty is another public benefit, for which we have to thank your Excellency. Another benefit that your Excellency has conferred on the people is, the reduction to 10 per cent. of the tax imposed on the persons engaged in the fishery: this reduction is every where highly praised. The abolition of the monopoly of sulphur, saltpetre, and gunpowder, whereby agriculturists are enabled to protect their fields from elephants and cattle, and their other property from the depredations of thieves, is another instance of your Excellency's regard for the prosperity of the people. A further claim upon our gratitude to your Excellency, is established by the reduction of the import duty on Indian goods, whereby the native trade of this island is greatly promoted, and the people in general benefited.

Another great advantage which the people of this country have derived from your Excellency's administration, is the appointment of native notaries within the gravets of Colombo, to the great convenience of the native inhabitants, for which they had solicited Government many years ago without success; and, from the want of which, they suffered much hardship and inconvenience, particularly the Hindoos and Mussulmans, whose females, according to the tenets of their religion, have great aversion to appear before European notaries, and the Cingalese high class females, who were formerly obliged either to go to the office of the European Notaries or to incur additional expence by paying the Notary for coming to their house to execute deeds, of which they have been now relieved by your Excellency's said acts.

Another great public benefit, for which we are indebted to your Excellency, is the making of various new roads, and particularly the road by the lake behind the yard of houses in Land-street, which was always damp and productive of various disease; the clearing away of the filth of St. John's river, whereby many poor persons who were before destitute, have obtained employment, the healthiness of the neighbourhood has been promoted, and future attacks of cholera rendered much less probable; with this public improvement the people were at first offended, but now they praise it.

The people of this country, from time immemorial, had been accustomed to render certain service to the State according to their caste, for payment, and when some reference to their own convenience, but since the possession of the island by the English, the natives, and those of the Mahaballe in particular, had been pressed for Government service without reference to their own convenience, and sometimes without payment, by which their own agriculture and other private affairs were neglected, and they were often removed from their families unexpectedly; but now, under your Excellency's enlightened and paternal administration, compulsory labour has been abolished, and the people have thus been relieved from the pressing hardships under which they have previously laboured.

Another instance of your Excellency's administration which we desire to notice, and which is ultimately connected with the welfare of the Government of the island, is the readiness with which your Excellency has always attended to the claims of old and faithful native Government servants as soon as such claims have been brought to your notice.

We cannot, in justice to your Excellency, omit to offer our cordial thanks for the great and most important protection granted to the public by taking necessary precautions to adopt effectual measures in suppressing and obstructing the intended mutiny and insurrection of the Kandyan Chiefs, and others concerned with them, whereby the whole garrison of Kandy would have been exposed to danger, many lives and property may have been ultimately destroyed, and serious consequences may have occurred.

We beg, moreover, to request, that your Excellency will be pleased to cause this address to be translated into the native language, and to be published for general information; the reason why some of the lower orders have not yet duly appreciated some of your Excellency's measures seems to be a want of proper information on the subject, which we hope the statements in this address might help to give them.

Great as are the benefits we have enumerated above to, we have purposely omitted all mention of some of the most important and most beneficial acts of your Excellency (such as the establishment of the mail coach, of the widows' and orphans' fund, of the savings' bank, of the Colombo academy, and of numerous schools and other similar acts,) because these, we understand, have been dwelt upon in other addresses to your Excellency.

In conclusion we beg to express our regret at your Excellency's approaching departure, our hearty wishes for your health and prosperity, and usefulness during your future life, and our hope that we shall not be forgotten by you on your arrival in your native land,

PARENTAL ACADEMIC INSTITUTION.

The Annual Examination of the Pupils of the Parental Academic Institution, took place last Friday, in the presence of a numerous assembly of ladies and gentlemen, by whom the examination hall had been fairly crowded long before the business of the day commenced. Amongst the audience we observed the following gentlemen, viz. the Venerable Archdeacon Dealtry, the Revd. Mr. Charles, the Revd. Mr. Mackay, the Revd. Mr. Pickance, the Revd. Mr. Piffard, Mr. Speed, and Baboo Ramcomul Sein; most of whom took an active part in the examination. The pupils went through their respective parts, in a manner highly satisfactory, and creditable to themselves and their teachers. They were minutely examined in Latin, Paley's Evidence of Christianity, Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Political Economy, Mathematics, Book keeping, History of India, &c. There were several Essays laid on the table, bearing the names of those by whom they were written respectively. Two of these attracted our notice particularly; namely, the one, "on the Pleasures of Science," and the other "on the French Revolutions." There were several others on moral and literary subjects, which though not the best written, did not fail to do credit to their authors, considering their age and the length of time they had joined the institution.

The defects which we observed in these Essays were of a character which plainly indicated that the specimens were the genuine productions of the boys, and had not received the correction of their teachers.

The children in this seminary are also taught drawing and Beagally, in which branches of education they were not examined for want of time.

The examination lasted till half past four o'clock, when the Secretary addressed the pupils, the senior classes of whom were before him at the time. He said, the duty which then devolved on him of addressing the pupils of the Academy, was one which he could scarcely consider pleasurable. At the last Annual Examination that duty had been performed by one who was highly qualified to do justice to it. He alluded to the late Mr. Lorimer, the head teacher of the Institution, whose loss he was sure all connected with the Institution deeply lamented. He, however, hoped that so far as it was in his power to serve them, he was, they were well aware, at all times ready, and he trusted they would look on him as their sincere friend. He then adverted to the prizes which the successful candidates were about to receive, and earnestly solicited both those who would receive them and those who would not on this occasion, to resume their studies after the opening of the school with renovated zeal and earnestness. He reminded them, that their improvement in morals and in the Christian virtues was of far greater importance to them, both in this and the next world, than the various branches of knowledge which formed the routine of their studies; and concluded his address with an apology for not being able, in consequence of mental depression and bodily weakness, to express all that he and the teachers felt on that interesting occasion.

The distribution of prizes, which consisted of gold and silver medals, and a choice selection from standard works, and the new editions of scientific and children's books, then commenced; and the successful candidates received their well-earned rewards for assiduity with suitable observations from the Secretary and some of the teachers. Among the prizes there were some excellent works, presented by Mr. Wood, one of the Members of the Committee.

The children, one and all, appeared to be in high health and spirits, and to feel a lively interest in the business of the day.—Hurkaru, December 19.

HIGH SCHOOL EXAMINATION.

(From a Correspondent.)

The eighth annual examination of this school took place this-morning, in the presence of a considerable number of ladies and gentlemen, among whom were seen the Lord Bishop as President, and the Venerable Archdeacon as Vice President, also several clergymen, Messrs Fisher, Pickance, McQueen, Withers, Thomson and a few others.

There are six classes in this school, all of which were very carefully and closely examined by clergymen and the teachers of the respective classes; and the result of the examination was so very creditable both to the students and their teachers, that His Lordship, towards the close of it, expressed his approbation at the progress made, and the system by which the children are taught. In expressing his approbation, the Bishop attended to the difference in the state of improvement as reckoned from the year 1833 to the present, after an absence of nearly four years, he (the Bishop) has had an opportunity of again presiding at the examination of this school. It would be difficult to recollect all that fell from this eminent prelate in an eloquent exhortation and interesting speech, which lasted more than half-an-hour. Having eulogized the teachers and their students, he exhorted the latter so to improve their minds as to be Christians indeed, for, by knowledge, when in subjugation to Christian principles, men become not only enlightened but excellent characters. With certain other appropriate exhortations, the learned speaker concluded, and then began to distribute the prizes to such boys as acquitted themselves best.

It may not be out-of-place to say, that the three first classes are taught Latin, Mathematics, and all other branches of knowledge, and that the three other classes are taught Scripture History, Grammar, English History, Geography, &c. The head Master or Rector is Mr. Graves, the second Mr. Heatly, the third Mr. Sevestre, the fourth Mr. J. R. Clermont, the fifth Mr. Dunbar, and the sixth Mr. Bayley.

EXAMINATION OF THE COLLEGE OF FRANCIS XAVIER.

This institution is among those blessings which the arrival in this country of the Revd. Dr. R. St. Leger, Vicar Apostolic of Bengal, has conferred on the formerly-neglected Roman Catholics of this place. The College was established in March, 1835, under the patronage of Dr. St. Leger, and Revd. F. Chadwick, one of the clergy who accompanied that prelate, was appointed its rector. It has ever since continued to be a means of education to all classes of the community, without reference to any sectarian distinction.

We had the pleasure of witnessing the last annual examination of the pupils of this school, on Monday last, the number of children at present amounts to nearly a hundred. They were examined in Latin, French, and English, Geography, History, the use of the Globes, Cyphering, Reading, Mathematics and Algebra, and showed great proficiency, though many of the children were very young. About 12 o'clock the place prepared for the reception of visitors was completely filled.

They consisted chiefly of the respectable portion of the Roman Catholic community, among whom we observed, the most Revd. Dr. R. St. Leger, Revd. Dr. Olife, and most of the other Catholic Clergy; Lieut. and Ensign Sweeney, Lieut. Carey, Messrs. Speed and Luckertsen. The examination was chiefly conducted by Dr. St. Leger and the clergy, but several of the lay visitors also took a part in the business of the day, and very strictly tested the qualifications of the youthful candidates.

That which particularly attracted our attention was, the recitations, in which some of the boys acquitted themselves in a manner seldom observed amongst such young people. The delivery was correct, and the action exceedingly graceful; there was nothing of that stiffness and sawing of the air so frequently met with in juvenile performances of this kind. At the end of the examination three of the pupils came forward and entered into a debate on a most interesting political question. It was pre-announced, that the intelligence of the invasion of India by a Russian army having arrived, an assembly of natives is convened, in which three speeches in different styles are delivered.

First. By a young Hindoo scholar, (Master J. Sweeney) who congratulates his countrymen on the approach of the Russian army, considers it to be the deliverer of India from the thralldom of its present rulers, who, by their taxes, &c., have been sucking the very life-blood of her people, and calls on his countrymen to rise and join the approaching army.

Second. By an old native marchant, (Master Alexander James,) who replies to the last speaker by stating, that he had in vain sought amidst the rowded metaphors of his speech for a reason of his singular love for the Russians. He then adverts to the advantages enjoyed under the British rule, which he compares with the rapacity of the greedy Russian; he advises his friends instead of foolishly proffering their gold to the Russians, to bury it deep in the earth: he prefers the English Government, because under it he can most easily get riches and keep them; he however exhorts his countrymen to be neutral, which he points out as the safest course for the people of this country to follow.

Third. By a well-instructed Raja, (Master J. Concoran) The sentiments expressed by the foregoing speaker, he considers as sure indications of the future emancipation and liberty of India. He attributes these sentiments to the institutions established by the English, and though he admits that the English might have done much more for the good of India, he cannot conceive why they should abandon the English in order to call in men who are professed tyrants not only in practice but in principle. He exhorts his countrymen not only not to join the Russian force, but to oppose its advance; because the Russians, if they once find admittance, will not only completely enslave the country, but will establish their dominion on such strong foundations, that no human power will be able to shake it. But if the British continue possessed of the land, the country will continue to be governed as it has been, and the power of the people to increase, until, at length, liberty ripening under this general aspect of things, will seem rather to fall of itself into our laps than to be plucked with violent hands. On these grounds, he condemns the foregoing speakers, and calls on his countrymen to support the English to the utmost of their power.

Prizes, consisting of Standard Works, were then distributed, by the Most Revd. Dr. St. Leger, to the successful candidates, with suitable remarks on the character of each work; after which, he took leave of the children in an appropriate address, expressing his satisfaction at the progress they had made, and exhorting them to renewed exertions.

Among the prizes, we observed an elegant and uncommonly large silver medal, the workmanship of Messrs. Hamilton and Co., which had been presented by Mr. J. D. M. Sinaes, for the best general scholar. On one side it had a beautiful laurel wreath, encircling 1837, and on the other, the following motto: "in honore boni Dei, et Altarum nostrum."

After the departure of Dr. St. Leger, Mr. Sinaes addressed the assembly to the following effect: He considered this institution as a national one, as the foundation of moral, religious and intellectual inculcation. In fine, as the ground work of inestimable blessings to the rising portion of the hitherto-neglected Catholic community. He therefore considered it the duty of every Catholic to support it. He congratulated the conductors of the institution on the success of their labors, and adverting to the indisposition of the Rev. Mr. Chalwick, he said, it was the duty of every friend of the institution to offer up prayers for his restoration to health.

The remaining portion of the company then partook of the refreshments that had been prepared for them.—Hurkaru, December 23.

THE EXAMINATION OF THE CALCUTTA CATHOLIC FREE-SCHOOL:

This institution was established many years ago, by a body of enlightened Catholic Laymen and made over by them to the Vicar Apostolic of Bengal, on his arrival. From its commencement it has been supported by public charity, and, at present, affords a plain English education, to about 200 boys and upwards of 50 girls of indigent Catholics; the school is, however, open to all persuasions. The details of the school are conducted by a Committee composed of some of the Clergy and Laity, appointed by the Vicar Apostolic of Bengal.

An examination of the pupils of this institution was held on Thursday last, and they were examined in reading, spelling, arithmetic and catechism, which was conducted by the Rev. Dr. St. Leger, assisted by the Clergy and several Lay visitors, among whom Mr. Speed took an active part. The visitors amounted to about 100, consisting of the most respectable portion of Catholics of Calcutta,

At the close of the examination the prizes were distributed to the successful candidates by Dr. St. Leger, who delivered on the occasion a very appropriate address, expressive of his satisfaction at their improvement and good conduct. He then called upon the audience to favor him with their presence a little longer, as the Secretary had prepared a report, and wanted to read it. I went to point out the pecuniary difficulties which the institution had to contend with during the year, and submitted for the consideration of the Catholic community and all friends of moral and Christian education, a pathetic appeal in behalf of the institution. We were much pleased to observe mentioned in the report a donation of 300 Rs. from Lord Auckland, though, we were informed, that Government had refused to aid this deserving institution.

About 150 of the poorest children had been supplied with a suit of warm clothes, for which they are, no doubt, very thankful.—Hurkaru, Dec. 23.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION OF THE PRESIDENCY IN FORT WILLIAM IN BENGAL, FOR THE YEAR 1836.

TO THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.
General Department.

HONORABLE SIRS AND GENTLEMEN.—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your annual report on the examinations of the students at the various colleges and seminaries under your supervision for the year 1836, and, in reply, to obey to the Committee the request of the Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council, that the report may be printed for the information of all persons interested in the progress of education in this country.

2nd. His Lordship in Council desires me at the same time to express to the Committee his acknowledgments of the earnestness of their endeavours to extend the benefits of useful instruction, and to communicate to the natives of this country the means of acquiring a competent knowledge of the languages and sciences of Europe, and of improving their acquaintance with the vernacular dialects used for business, and for the ordinary intercourse of life.

3rd. His Lordship in Council, without following the report through the detail of operations in their bearing upon each institution, directs me to add generally the expression of his approbation of the proceedings of the Committee for the period reported upon.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) H. T. PRINSEP, Secy. to Govt.

Council Chamber, the 30th August, 1837.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE GEORGE LORD ANGLAND, GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

MY LORD.—We have the honor to report our proceedings for the year 1836.

This year has been principally occupied in following out the plans sketched in our last report.

Six new seminaries were established in the early part of the year, as mentioned in our last report. Another was afterwards established at Chittagong, and two, which already existed at Alibonpore and Goruckpoor, were taken under our care, and put on an efficient footing. A college has also been organized at Hoogly on a very extensive scale, instead of the school which formerly existed there. There are, therefore, now 30 seminaries in all, at the following places:—

- | | |
|----------------------|-------------------|
| 1 Agra, | 16 Furruckabad. |
| 2 Ajmere. | 17 Gowahatty. |
| 3 Allahabad. | 18 Ghazepoor. |

| 15 Mahomedan | 30 Saugor. |
| 16 College. | |
| 17 Sanskrit College. | |
| 18 English College. | |
| 19 Oriental College. | |

We have also added to the number of teachers at many of these institutions, and have given some of them an improved organization.

The number of students has increased as follows:—

Christians,	Mohammedans,	Hindus.	Total.	These totals include many pupils, whose religion did not appear from the reports.
1835, 77	596	1,881	3,573
1836, 198	670	3,298	4,654

While the stipends given to students have diminished in the following proportion:—

	MAY, 1836.	APRIL, 1837.	DIFFERENCE.
	No. of stipendary students.	No. of stipendary students.	No. of stipendary students.
Madrasa,	58	42	16
Sanskrit College,	65	57	8
Benares Seminary,	9	7	2

Agra College,	139	107	32
Delhi Institution,	41	25	16
Delhi College,	297	144	153
Total,	676	418	258

The following variations have taken place in the number studying each of the different languages taught.

	Eng.	Sans.	Arb.	Pr.	Mr.	Vernacular languages.
1835,	1,818	473	218	376	40	It is the desire of the committee that all should learn it; but how many actually do so cannot be ascertained from the reports.
1836,	3,511	381	256	385	..

We have steadily kept in view the important object of encouraging the study of the vernacular language concurrently with English. Ten Bengalee teachers have been appointed at Hoogly, two Hindes and one Urdu teacher at Ajmere, and others have been appointed at every place at which the Local Committees have applied for our assistance. There are now few of our seminaries at which provision has not been made to enable the pupils to acquire the habit of writing their native language with ease and correctness, and we hope that these few will soon cease to be exceptions to the general rule. We are anxious that the pupils should be constantly exercised in translating into their own language, as well as into English, from the time at which they enter the seminaries till their departure, and that they should also practice original composition in both languages as soon as their minds have been sufficiently opened to attempt it with advantage.

We have also continued to urge upon the Local Committees the importance of requiring all the pupils who can afford to do so, to pay for the books and stationery used by them. Many advantages would ensue from the general adoption of this practice. Our funds would be relieved; our operations would be simplified by the cessation of the correspondence which now constantly takes place on the subject of books; a very large number of useful books would annually pass into the hands of the people; and, above all, nominal students, who injure the discipline and retard the progress of the seminaries by the irregularity of their attendance, would become much more rare, and some security would be afforded, that no one would apply for admission who was not anxious to profit by the instruction afforded. The general adoption of this rule has now become much more easy than before, as the School-Book Society has established at numerous places in the interior, depositories at which all ordinary school books are sold at the same prices as at Calcutta. At Mohammad Muslin's College we have directed, at the suggestion of the Principal, that those pupils who can afford it, shall pay the full price, and the rest half the price of the books used by them, and we should be glad to see this course generally followed by the Local Committees. Whenever more pupils apply for admission than can be properly instructed by the existing masters, none ought to be admitted, whether they are the sons of rich or poor persons, who do not agree to pay for the books and other things, used by them in school, except the library books, the maps, the globes and other scientific apparatus which must always belong to the institution.

At the Agra College those who can afford it, also pay something for their education, a practice which we should be glad to see introduced, as opportunity offers, at all our seminaries. Boarding-houses are as yet to be established in the immediate neighbourhood of the College for the accommodation of pupils who reside at a distance.

The excessive number of holidays usually allowed to the pupils forms one of the most serious obstacles to the success of our seminaries. We issued a circular letter asking for information on this subject, with a view, if possible, to diminish the number, and to establish uniformity in regard to the particular days to be allowed as holidays; but the answers we received satisfied us, that the matter was one which depended so entirely on the habits and feelings of the people at each particular place, as not to admit at present of any general regulation. The Government has it in its power to enforce the attendance of its servants at the public offices, but the attendance of the pupils at our seminaries is entirely voluntary. We trust, that the Local Committees will gradually remedy the evil, as they find that they can do so without giving offence. We also think that a week's holiday should be allowed after each annual examination; and as a reduction in the number of other holidays is effected, this annual vacation may be extended. This seems to be the best period for an annual vacation, because it is the intervening point between the completion of the business of one year and the commencement of the business of the next; and, because, the annual examination is held in the cold weather, which is the season at which the young men will be most likely to enjoy their holidays, and at which they will be able to return for a time to their homes with least danger to their health.

The supply of teachers of western learning is at present so small in India, that we have been obliged to give high rates of salary in order to secure the service of qualified persons. There will be found in the Appendix, (No. 1.) an extract from a letter from the Allahabad Local Committee, and a copy of a minute which accompanied it by Mr. R. W. Bird, which will serve to illustrate the difficulties we have to contend with in this respect. Our successors will have a much easier task. They will find a large supply of well-trained teachers at all the principal towns, who will be willing to take service for a moderate remuneration, and the sum appropriated for the purpose of national education may then be made to go much further than at present.

The establishment of normal schools would not, in our opinion, effect any material reduction in the rates of salary. Persons competent to become teachers, are also competent to fill a variety of other situations, and we must always pay them, whatever be the manner in which they have received their education, at the rates at which persons of equal respectability and cultivation of mind are usually paid. The real remedy for the existing state of things, therefore, consists in increasing the class of persons from which the teachers are drawn in other words, the class who are liberally educated in the European manner. This is the object to which our attention has been directed, and we consider every seminary which we have established in the great towns in the interior, as a normal school, not merely for training for our seminaries, but for gradually preparing a greatly increased number of well-educated men to fill employments under Government, and to discharge with advantage to themselves and to the country the various duties of private life. It is also deserving of remark, that persons are usually willing to take service at lower rates and are likely to have more influence, and to be more under the control of public opinion in the neighbourhood of their own homes than at a distance from them, and for this reason we think, that the same number of well-educated persons are likely to do more good to the country if they received their training at 30 different places, than if they received it at only one or two.

We anticipate great advantage from the extension of Mr. Adam's inquiries into the state of native education to the central provinces. Extracts from the correspondence on this subject will be found in the appendix, No. 2.

In addition to the Library books ordered last year, we have written to England for books and scientific apparatus according to the lists which will be found in the Appendix, No. 3. Professor Peacock, of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been requested by a member of our body to select the mathematical class-books.

It will be seen from the annexed figured statement that our receipts during the past year amounted to Rs. 3,57,687-10-2, and our disbursements to Rs. 3,55,195-10-5. The sum received by us was less than we might have drawn, without encroaching on our capital, by about 34,000 rupees.

We acknowledge with much gratitude the cordial assistance we have received from all the persons officially connected with the system of national education, from the members of the Local Committees, down to the youngest teachers; and we feel satisfied, that the general desire which exists to elevate the natives by means of an improved system of training the rising generation, supported and encouraged as it is, by your Lordship in Council, and aided by many other causes all tending to the same result, will ultimately produce a marked change for the better in the national character.

Finally, we request to be permitted to publish this part for the information of the Local Committees:

PROCESSION OF FREE-MASONS, &c.

the teachers of the different seminaries, and of the public at large.

About two hundred members of the Masonic fraternity, assembled at the Town Hall, yesterday, at 9 A. M., and marched in procession to the Cathedral, under the banners of Lodge Humility with Fortitude, the Marine and that of the Cameronians. The Rev. Archdeacon Deastry preached a very eloquent and impressive sermon to the brethren on the occasion, taking for his text the third chapter of the first Epistle of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians, from the tenth to the fifteenth verses:—

"10. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon

11. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.

12. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble.

13. Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

14. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward.

15. If any man's work shall be burnt, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."

The Rev. preacher exhorted the brethren, who figuratively described themselves to be builders, to be careful where they laid the foundation of their faith, for that Christ alone was the foundation that would endure—which knew no change, and that those who built upon him, would find their work continue for ever. He further entreated them to be careful what materials they used in the building; for, as the text said, in the end each man's work would be tested by fire and become manifest: those structures which had been built of pure and substantial materials, would remain unconsumed; but those which had been constructed of wood, hay and stubble, would be destroyed,

"And, like the baseless fabric of a vision, Leave not a rack behind."

The Reverend preacher continued, that he was not "at fault with the secrets of the fraternity; but he wished to impress upon their minds, that Christianity alone could save, and that Christianity neither admitted of addition, nor subtraction from, its dictates, and sought no concealment; if the fraternity attempted to deviate from the behests of the Gospel, their work would be naught. In conclusion, he expressed his apprehension, that there were many present, who put not their reliance on the firm foundation—their faith in the Lord; or building on this everlasting foundation, constructed their work of such perishable materials, as would not stand the test of the fiery ordeal at the end; and having entreated them all to repent, and commence, from the moment of his addressing them, to build a more endurable structure, he finished. The masons then marched back to the Town Hall, and after a few moments spent in their mysterious operation, issued again and dispersed.—Hurkaru, December 28.

MASONIC BALLS.

There were two masonic balls given on the evening of the 27th instant, in commemoration of the anniversary of the Patron Saint of the Free Masons, one by a private gentleman, and the other, a subscription one, at Monsieur Depuis's rooms, in the Durrumtollah. There were upwards of two hundred individuals present at the latter place, and the elat with which every thing went off, clearly indicated the admirable arrangements of the Master of Etiquette.

"Bright

The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
Two hundred hearts beat happily; and when
Music arose with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes look'd love to eyes which spoke again,
And all went merry as a marriage-bell."

We deem ourselves very fortunate in having been present, as we passed a very happy evening. Some of the ladies were dressed with surpassing good taste, and we were particularly struck with the appearance of two fair, delicate little creatures, with white wreaths on their heads, who seemed to monopolize a large portion of the attention of the beaux, some of whom were so ardent in the expression of their admiration, that we several times observed the fair girls

"Blush'd at the praise of their own loveliness."

The ball-room was tastefully decorated with festoons of leaves and artificial flowers, with the Master's chair, surmounted with a canopy, and properly decorated with masonic emblems, placed at the head of it, and the supper table was laid out under a bower, erected on the ground-floor, and brilliantly lighted up with chandeliers. Dancing was almost incessantly kept up, with great spirit and glee, until one in the morning, when the ladies went down to a splendid supper supplied by that Prince of pastry-makers, David Wilson, and afforded the musicians half-an-hour's respite. At half-past-one the dancing again commenced, and the party broke up at three in the morning, apparently perfectly happy. The only drawback on the harmony of the evening, was the flowers of rhetoric, which fell from Mr. Orator Schreewell. We entertain the most kindly feelings towards this gentleman, and out of sheer goodness of heart, we would suggest to him, to mend his note before he again displays his eloquence. We have not the most delicate of tympanums, but the full, rich tone of the speaker's voice, was too much for us even to endure, and we are under the impression, that several others of the party including the worthy host himself, labored under the same misfortune as we did.—Hurkaru, December 29.

REPORT.

The Select Committee appointed to enquire into the best means of establishing a communication by Steam with India by way of the Red Sea, and to whom several petitions upon that subject were referred, and who were empowered to report their opinion, and the minutes of the evidence taken before them, have, pursuant to the order of the House examined the matters to them referred, and have agreed to the following report:—

“The sudden termination of the Session having deprived your Committee of the opportunity of that full investigation of the subject which it might otherwise have received; it is with some diffidence they present to the House the impressions which the valuable and important evidences brought before them, and to which they beg leave to call the particular attention of the House has produced upon their minds.”

“Your Committee have learned with much gratification that arrangements have been entered into between Her Majesty's Government and the East India Company, for the establishment of a monthly communication by Steam, from Suez to Bombay, and they hail with satisfaction the liberal spirit in which the Court of Directors have met the propositions of Her Majesty's Government for thus affording a direct intercourse with one portion of the continent of India, and facilitating a communication for letters with all the presidencies.

“That, in as much as, in the opinion of the witnesses who have appeared before your Committee, a direct communication by Steam from the Red Sea to Ceylon, Madras and Bengal, would be practicable at all seasons of the year, by the employment of vessels of adequate tonnage and power; and as under judicious arrangements such extended establishment would appear to offer a prospect of an adequate return for the increased outlay by the conveyance of passengers and of some valuable articles of merchandise, which cannot be expected from the limited communication with Bombay alone. Your Committee feel bound to recommend a continued and zealous attention to the subject on the part of Her Majesty's Government and the East India Company.

"But strongly as your Committee are impressed with a sense of advantages, political, commercial and personal, which would arise from the more extended system of communication, they would earnestly deprecate any interruption of the valuable arrangements now in progress, with which, it appears to them from the evidence adduced, to be perfectly compatible."

TO THE SECRETARY OF THE NEW BENGAL STEAM
COMMITTEE.

4, Leadenhall Street, August 5, 1837.

SIR,—On the 1st July last, I had the honor of addressing you on the subject of Steam Communication with India, and since that time, I have been fully employed in attending to the interests of this measure in its progress before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to enquire into the best means of establishing a communication by Steam with India by way of the Red Sea.

The benefits that were expected to result from this Committee by a full consideration of much valuable evidence and by investigation of recent improvements in steam vessels and machinery, have been partially defeated by the death of our late King, by shortening the duration of Parliament, and by calling members of the Committee to duties connected with their constituency and other important matters, necessarily curtailed examination of evidence.

The enquiry was, however, continued daily to almost the last day of the session, and the evidence and report were brought up on Saturday preceding the prorogation, and ordered to be printed. Not only will the manner in which this question has been hitherto dealt with by Government, and the East India Company be exhibited, but the evidence also affords most satisfactory information for forming an opinion as to the probable working of the partial plan in progress, and also the steps desirable to be taken by parties interested and anxious to bring this question to speedy and complete adjustment. The extent and diversity of evidence examined before this Committee will best show the zeal and ability exhibited by Lord William Bentinck in the enquiry on this occasion; who, besides attending constantly in his place as chairman, also held daily conference at his house during the sitting of the Committee, for the purpose of collecting evidence, and consulting on points bearing on the general question; and it may here be observed, that much valuable information and useful detail connected with science and with the political and commercial considerations of a measure including in its range the interests of England and India, and of intervening nations should, from the cause already stated, have been necessarily omitted in this report. To Mr. Mullins, who gave constant attendance to the Committee, and greatly assisted in the enquiry, and to Mr. Bigelow, who materially aided, the cause is much indebted. Till the evidence taken before the Committee has been corrected and printed, it will not be obtainable for public use, and this is more to be lamented as information contained in the report would enable the Committee in the several presidencies of India to approach the British Legislature on advantageous grounds that could not fail to produce the desired effects.

By no means persons any further exertions may be thought unnecessary. It will be seen in evidence, however, that there are different and opposing opinions at the India House as to this matter, and although I firmly believe it is the honest intention of some to do all they can towards promoting and perfecting arrangements to give to India all that is sought by Steam Communication, the delay that has occurred in proceeding without, and excessive expense and inefficiency hitherto attending the India House arrangements in respect to Steam Navigation, together with periodical changes, in the persons and councils of Directors themselves, renders their plans uncertain as regards even that part of the work at present contemplated, and which is but a portion of what is required for India. Arrangements through the Mediterranean to meet the Indian communication are called for and the employment of the Hugh Lindsay in the Red Sea will incur double the expense in fuel of an efficient steamer, her want of speed is also likely to cause disappointment in the transmission of the mail, besides reducing the Hugh Lindsay another steamer in the Red Sea is indispensable. Having had opportunity within the last few years of becoming acquainted with the numerous parties in respect to this communication, I feel desirous to impress on those promoting it, and, in particular, on those removed parties in India, who have so much at stake and who have so long anxiously sought for it, the necessity of carefully watching the progress of the present measure, and by observing the defects in the system to be prepared for objections that may follow on its adoption, at the same time to point out to others how the substitution of a better system wholly or partially would produce more beneficial results. It appears by evidence before the Committee, that the arrangement about to be acted on, was contained in the Court of Directors' reply, made on the 1st of Feb. last, to a letter from the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, dated 7th December, 1836, requesting to be furnished with the observations of the Court of Directors on the plan and proposal of the London Association, dated 26th November,* to undertake the establishment of Steam Communication with India.

At the time of making this arrangement for establishing the Red Sea communication themselves, the Court gave their opinion, that in order to insure efficacy and permanency of Steam Navigation with India, it should be established and maintained by Her Majesty's Government and the East India Company; and on this ground, independently of the objections to conferring on the projected Company the right of levying postage, the proposition submitted in the report could not be entertained.

This objection to postage raised by the Court might have been overcome by the Government levying postage, and granting compensation in lieu thereof.

No such proposal having been made, although the London Committee were prepared to assent to it, confirmed the opinion that no real difficulty was entertained at the India House, as to the practicability of establishing Steam Communication throughout the year, and that the India Company would do it whenever sufficient demonstration of public opinion should be made to enforce the principle. With this impression I remarked to you in my letter of January, that Steam Communication would be established in consequence of the offers made by the London Association to do it for a moderate sum. In that communication I further observed, that it would be done as sought for by India generally, and this is still my opinion, although the untimely dissolution of this Parliament will cause the complete adjustment of the question to lay over for a period.

During this interval opportunity will be afforded to form a better judgment as to the probable working of the plan now commenced, and I have already urged in the proper quarter at the India House, the necessity of including Socotra in their arrangement, to facilitate intercourse with Point de Galle, and the East side of India.

* A copy has already been forwarded to your Committee.

In the mean time petitions from the India Presidencies, for the purpose of bringing the measure before the next Parliament to have other steps taken to carry out the known wishes of Her Majesty's Government, as expressed in a letter from the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, dated 9th March, to the India Board as given in the evidence of Sir L. Hobhouse:—" Their Lordships of course assume that the question resolved for their consideration will embrace the Communication by Steam with three Presidencies." The Court of Directors by that time will have obtained satisfactory proof of the practicability of navigating the Indian sea at all seasons of the year by voyages made by efficient steamers now in India, and the disposition of that portion of the Directors who are favorable to extend communication will thus be strengthened, and further difficultly to a final and complete adjustment of the question may reasonably be expected to be removed. Not only do such exertions on the part of the public seem necessary to carry out the comprehensive scheme, but also to perfect the plan actually in progress so as to confer benefit, to justify large and more complete arrangements, and further expenditure. The London Committee will take the very earliest opportunity when they can obtain the report of the Committee of the House of Commons to draw up a report thereon, and to recommend such arrangements as may seem best suited to the occasion, and most likely to promote the views and interests of their friends in India, and to advance the object they have been so anxiously contending for. The evidence I heard before this Committee has strengthened the opinion entertained by me since 1830, when I first gave attention to the subject, that it is deeply the policy of this country to promote Steam Navigation with India, not more on the ground of political expediency than as a duty to the people of India to promote civilization, and the commercial prosperity of both nations.

Although further active measures of this association in promoting this object are now prevented by the steps taken by the Government and East India Company, a sincere desire to see it completed, and an earnest hope for its success will ever make me desirous to advance it to the best of my ability, and causes me to offer my ready aid in forwarding the views of the Indian public in any way tending to promote their interests on this occasion. The powerful instrumentality of the press in all questions of this nature, will have been made more evident by proceedings during the last year, in the mode of treating this subject, since it has been under discussion, and before Government. Instructions and arguments in reference to your petitions and the interests of your community to combine all the points included in Steam Navigation cannot be too much attended to, as of course they are not so well or generally understood by individuals in this country. In a few days I hope to have the pleasure of forwarding the report of the association.

I have the honour to remain, your, &c.

C. F. ERAD, Chairman, Provisional Committee.

Copy of a letter from Mr. Waghorn to Colonel Campbell on the subject of the latter's refusing from Muhomet Ali Pacha, the gift of a depot.

To COLONEL CAMPBELL,

Agent to Her Majesty and the Hon'ble E. I. C. in Egypt, &c., &c., &c. Alexandria.

Cairo, 16th October, 1837.

Sir.—I have the honour to state, that your letter of the 12th instant has been duly received by me.

On receipt of it, I had only one course left, which was writing to the Government and mercantile communities of both England and India, exonerating myself from the result of your late refusal of the Pacha's valuable gift to the Steam object, as a depot in Cairo would have been, for coals on their way to Suez.

The Steam object through this country should not have been treated in a political point of view as you have done; it should have been treated as a general object to which the Pacha's aid was of the most vital importance, and that he had a right also to give that aid, because his own interests were interwoven with it, as well as H. M. Government and the Hon'ble Company's, whereas you have treated his aid with contumely.

For, by your refusal of the Pacha's most valuable offer, you have slighted, if not insulted him, and I can you continue to think that thus slighted or insulted you have the power in yourself to do, without his aid and assistance in Egypt, when you well know that through his orders only sufficient camels could be got at any reasonable price, and that (if without such orders we could get them at all) we should have to pay doubly, perhaps treble for, as well as for every thing else requisite for the Steam object.

Sir, you had before you a most gratifying point of benefitting the Steam object by adding to its help and aid that of Mahomet Ali's to its fullest extent, and I thus you have altogether slighted, by your incorrect ideas of false dignity towards your authorities; the which, have led you to treat the man's offers with contumely, who had it most in his power to aid, to benefit, and to economize the object in all its bearings in this country; and, I must say, the true dignity of Her Majesty and the Hon'ble Court of Directors, would have been best upheld in accepting the Pacha's offer in the same gracious manner that it was made, and if either Her Majesty's Ministers, or the Court, had no wish to accept the obligation of such favors, either might have courteously sent a present beyond the value of such favour; and this should have been the course I would have pursued, instead of that you have chosen; the which will mar and defeat all future hopes of economy to the Steam object in Egypt, which can only come from and continue to it, through the Pacha; and, I candidly avow, I consider you have done more harm by the unfortunate course you have adopted, than ought else could happen to the Steam object. However, I shall endeavour by every means in my power to rectify your refusal of Mahomet Ali's offered aid thereto, until I be assured by Mr. Secretary Melvill you have adopted the proper course.

Sir, it is with much regret, that I feel it impossible to continue longer, than the answer from Mr. Secretary Melvill to my letter of 14th instant, under your orders in the Steam question in my public capacity; still I take this opportunity of thanking you for many personal civilities.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obdt. humble servt.

THOS WAGHORN,

Depty. Agent to the Hon'ble E. I. Co. in Egypt.

UNION BANK.

At a special general meeting held this-day, Friday, the 15th December, 1837, at 2 p. m., pursuant to advertisement.

T. Dickens, Esq., in the chair.

The Secretary read the advertisement and letter convening the meeting.

Mr. Holroyd, the chairman of the Directors, addressed the meeting, and stated, that the Directors all approved of the augmentation of stock, leaving the details to be decided by the sense of this meeting.

The chairman then proposed the following resolutions, which he stated, were not precisely the same as published in the papers. He stated, the causes which had induced himself and others to agree to these alterations, which were now submitted for approval of this meeting in their amended form :—

Resolved—1st. That an increase of eight lacks, be immediately added to the Union Bank stock, so as to make the capital forty lacks, and that it is expedient to double the present capital of thirty-two lacks gradually, and as experience shall demonstrate, that profitable employment can be found for further capital in banking business in Calcutta, and the presidency at large:

Resolved—2d. That such addition be made by creating 800 New Shares of 1,000 Co.'s Rs each, to be disposed of as follows, viz. Each holder of four shares on the 15th day of January, 1838, to be entitled to one new share at par on paying for the same in the manner provided for in the 4th resolution.

3d. That such shares as cannot be taken off in the manner provided for by the 2d resolution, because several of the present shareholders each hold numbers of shares not divisible by four, be put up at par and sold by Auction among the proprietors themselves, and the profits of premium applied for the benefit of those not enabled for the cause abovementioned to obtain new shares at par.

4th. That the shares be paid for as follows; viz. one-fourth in one month from the 15th day of January 1838.

One-fourth by promissory notes, bearing interest at ten per cent. payable in two months, from the same day.

One-fourth by note bearing like interest, payable in four months, for the same day.

The remaining fourth by note bearing like interest, payable in six months, from the same day.

Proprietors paying cash down on or before 1st Feb. next, to receive dividends for the full period from 1st January, to 30th June, and proprietors paying cash after the 1st Feb., to receive dividends pro rata from the date of payment.

5th. That such Sale be held on the 1st Feb. next, after the confirmation of these resolutions by a majority of proprietors at a 2d special general meeting, convened for that purpose.

6th. That the period within which absent proprietors must pay up for their additional stock, be for those in Europe and America, the 30th June, 1839, and for those at the Cape, China or New South Wales, the 31st December, 1838, and for those elsewhere and above fifteen days' sail from the presidency, a reasonable period in addition to that allowed to residents of Calcutta, to be fixed by the Directors.

The resolutions on being put to the meeting were seconded by Mr. H. M. Parker, and carried unanimously.

The meeting being special, no other business was brought forward.

Thanks to the Chairman were voted, and the meeting was dissolved.—Hurkuru, December 16.

CIVIL FUND MEETING.

At an adjourned special meeting of the subscribers to the Civil Fund, holden at the Town Hall, on Saturday, the 25th day of Nov., 1837.

PRESENT.

H. T. PRINCEP, Esq., Chairman

J. J. Harvey, J. R. Hutchinson, Braddon, Cracroft, Hawkins, J. A. Dorin, F. C. Smith, D. F. McLeod, J. French, F. J. Halliday, H. Walters, Valpy, Mangles, Louis, Dunbar, Tucker, James Shaw, Carruthers, Wilkinson, D. C. Smyth, H. T. Raikes, J. F. T. Reid, H. M. Pigou, T. C. Scott, and W. H. Martin.

The chairman submitted to the meeting that the requisition directed by the resolutions of the meeting of 30th September, had been addressed to all the subscribers whose votes had not been received on that date, and an abstract of the state of the votes had likewise been circulated, that there were still a majority of subscribers who had expressed no opinion at all on the propositions submitted; but as all had had the opportunity of voting, and it was to be hoped, that under the invitation given by the circular many of those who had expressed no opinion in writing would be represented at the meeting through powers transmitted to members present, it would be the business of the present meeting to decide finally upon each separate proposition, taking upon each the written votes, of which an abstract prepared to the day was laid on the table, and adding to them such as might be offered by members present on their own part or on the part of absent subscribers, whose written authority they might produce.

This mode of proceeding being agreed to by the Meeting, the chairman put in succession each of the votes and propositions submitted to the subscribers at large, when it was found, that the following rules were carried by large majorities, namely, Rules I., II. and III., with the third amendment, also Rule IV. Part I.

In lieu of Rule IV. Part II., which was found to be negatived by a majority of written votes, with all its amendments, the following proposition from vote Paper No. 1 was found to be carried. It will stand, therefore, as Rule IV. Part II., viz., "that the existing deficit be made up by increasing the contributions of all subscribers according to their allowances."

The following propositions from vote Paper No. 1, were in like manner declared to be carried by large majorities of the recorded votes

1st. " That a surplus be annually provided.

2nd. That the surplus be 25,000 Rs."

Which votes were determined by the meeting to supersede the propositions forming Part III. of Rule IV. as originally submitted.

Mr. Cracroft then proposed the following resolution, which was seconded by Mr. French—

" That the managers be instructed with reference to the votes upon Rule IV. Part III., and to the votes on Paper No. 1 B 1, (whereby a surplus of 25,000 rupees has been voted, but the means of raising it are not afforded) to invite the subscribers to provide for the surplus by means of a collateral fund, as determined by the votes on Paper No. 1. A. 1. to be created by additional subscription from those having families to be provided for from the Fund; it appearing to this meeting that, excepting by such a construction of the votes, no means are afforded of providing for the surplus determined in the affirmative by the large majority of 161 against 10."

That resolution was carried by 13 votes to 7, of members present.

Rule IV. Part. IV. regarding periodical revisions for declaration of the deficit being declared to be carried with the specification of 3 years for the period of each revision.

It was proposed by Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Dorn—

" That the whole of what is called the capital of the fund is available for the immediate payment of pensions prospective as well as present."

Whereupon the following amendment was proposed by the chairman, seconded by Mr. Cracroft—

" That the existing capital being for the most part invested in public securities yielding interest, which interest is required for the payment of existing annuities and provisions, and is therefore assigned so long as the income from both interest and subscriptions is not sufficient to pay the annual demands on the fund, no appropriation of capital can be made at the sacrifice of the said interest until there shall be a surplus of income from both sources."

The amendment being put to the vote was lost, whereupon the resolution of Mr. Lewis was put, and the votes were ayes 25, noes 4.

The votes upon Rule IV. Part V. being declared, were in favor of the rule, but as the previous rule for fixing a higher rate of subscription for married and widower subscribers who desire to retain their interest in the fund is not carried, agreed, that effect can only be given to this rule in its bearing upon the collateral fund proposed by Mr. Cracroft, as a means of providing the desired surplus.

The following rules were declared to be carried by large majorities.

Rule IV. Part VI. and Part VII. (subject to the observation recorded upon Rule IV. Part V.) Rules V. VII. VIII. (as amended) Rule IX. Rule X. (as amended) Rules XI. XII. XIII. Part I. and II., Rules XIV. XV. with amendment—XVI. XVII. XVIII. XIX.

Rule XX. being read from the chair, the state of the votes upon the proposition submitted in vote Paper No. 1 A 2, viz.

" That so much of the existing deficit be met by reduction of allowances as will be met by limiting the total income of widow incumbents to £300 a year (that is to say) by disallowing the £100 a year from her own fortune now allowed without reduction of allowance."

For the reduction of the widow incumbents	82
Against.....	80

The personal and proxy votes of subscribers present at the meeting being taken on the same proposition, the ayes were 3, against 18 noes.

The proposition therefore to reduce the income of any widow incumbents, was declared to be carried in the negative.

It was then moved by Mr. Mangles, seconded by Mr. Halliday, and carried by 20 votes against 15 of the subscribers present, that prospectively £300 be the limit of income to be made up to widows by the fund, and that Rule XX. Parts 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, be carried, with alteration of the word four hundred, where it occurs in respect either to pounds sterling or rupees to three hundred.

Rule XX. Part 6, as amended, was declared to be carried by a large majority, so also Rules XXI. XXII. XXIII. with the third additional clause.

Rule XXIV. being then read, the votes were declared to be for it 60 against it 65, the amendments were lost by large majorities. The votes of subscribers present being taken on this rule, it was carried, modified as follows, to suit the result of the votes on the other propositions:

" No family becoming hereafter dependent on the fund shall receive from the fund an allowance exceeding in all six hundred pounds sterling per annum, or in India six hundred Co.'s Rs. per mensem, and the reduction shall be made rateably."

All the additional clauses were declared to be negative.

Rule XXV. being then read with its amendments, agreed that the result of the votes is in favor of the sum of Co.'s Rs 25,000 as to be made good by a retiring subscriber in order to insure to his family the benefits of the fund.

Mr. Pigou then moved, seconded by Mr. Walters, that the following resolutions in explanation and modification of Rule XXV. as passed at this meeting, be put in circulation, in order that the sense of the service be taken thereupon.

The families of those retiring Civilians who shall, previous to resignation of service, have paid up principal and interest included) the sum of 26,000 rupees, shall be entitled to the full benefit of the fund.

The families of retiring subscribers who shall similarly have paid the sum of 20,000 rupees, shall be entitled to a contingent benefit to be calculated rateably.

The families of retiring subscribers, who shall have paid up similarly the sum of 15,000 rupees, shall be entitled to a contingent benefit not exceeding £400 per annum.

The families of retiring subscribers who shall similarly have paid up the sum of 10,000 rupees, shall be entitled to a contingent benefit not exceeding £300 per annum.

This rule to take effect from the date on which the new rules are adopted. Each subscriber at period of resignation, shall specify in writing to the Secretary the class to which he chooses to belong, and shall pay up the balance required to make up the full sum. Subscribers omitting to give this notice, or neglecting to pay up the difference, shall only be entitled to the contingent benefits of that class, the amount of subscription to which is covered by his payments.

A Member (Mr. McLeod) asked if it was intended that the family should benefit rateably in the proportion of the amount made good to the required sum of 25,000. The mover assented at first to the introduction of the words "to be calculated rateably," but subsequently retracted and proposed, that any new rules, that might be passed, should stand with the amounts as maximum limits of the benefit to be secured by each payment.

Agreed to allow the propositions to stand on the proceeding of this day, and to be submitted to the service for future consideration.

Rule XXVI. was then declared to be passed.

Rule XXVII. was then declared to be passed as modified by the third amendment.

Rule XXVIII. was also passed as modified by the 5th Amendment

Rules XXIX. and XXX. were also declared to be adopted, and Rule XXXI. as modified by the 5th amendment, and the first additional clause. Rules XXXII. XXXIII. and XXXIV. were also carried, and rule XXXV. as modified by the second amendment.

The additional Allahabad Rules were declared to be negatived by large majorities.

The meeting having thus ascertained the state of the votes and determined the result upon each of the new rules and propositions submitted to the subscribers at large.

It was unanimously Resolved—"That the managers be instructed to prepare rules for the fund according to the result of the votes taken at this meeting, and to lay the new rules before the annual meeting in January next.

That the new rules be drawn so as to take effect on the 1st January, 1838, from which date the deficit will be assessed rateably on existing subscribers, and the collateral fund will take effect, if agreed to by the subscribers.

Resolved.—That the votes of the service on the new rules proposed by Mr. Pigou, be taken at the same annual meeting.

Resolved.—That the managers prepare and submit to the same meeting an address to the Hon'ble the Court of Directors, praying their sanction to the new rules, and forcibly representing the claim of the families of their Civil Servants to an increased donation proportioned to the increased number of servants, and their reduced average incomes and means of making independent provision for their families, more especially, with reference to the compulsory subscription imposed on their servants since 1823.

MILITARY FUND.

The Directors beg to submit to the subscribers, of the Bengal Military Fund, the case of Mrs. Dyart, widow of the late Lieutenant Dyart, 2d Native Infantry, who died on the 7th March, 1837, without having subscribed as a married member.

A claim on the part of this lady was made first, by Lieutenant-Colonel Stacy, Commanding 32d N. I.; secondly, by Lieutenant Colonel R. H. Sale, Her Majesty's 13th Light Infantry—both of which applications were duly considered by the Directors, and, under their instructions, answered by the Secretary to the effect, that, as the deceased had not availed himself of the option open to him, of subscribing as a married officer, his widow had no claims upon the institution; and, thirdly, by Captain H. J. Wood, of the Horse Artillery, and 10 other subscribers, requesting that the appeal of Colonel Sale, on behalf of his daughter, Mrs. Dyart, might be circulated to the subscribers generally.

The original decision of the Directors was not questioned by Colonel Sale in his second letter of appeal, (No. 1) against permitting which, no ground for the same existing, the Directors were unanimous.

Consequent upon this necessary rejection—for, though the case was deemed a painful one, yet the duty of the Directors was clear,—Captain Wood and other subscribers at Kurnaul solicit (see No. 2), a reference of the claim to the favorable consideration of the Army.

In pursuance of that requisition, the relative papers having been immediately re-circulated, a Special Meeting of the Directors was convened, at which the question of submitting the application on behalf of Mrs. D. to the subscribers was considered.

It was then and there resolved, that the said requisition should be complied with, as in doing so the Directors would be enabled to state their own views to the army, viz., that the rejection of the claim should be upheld as proper and conformable to Article 13 of the Regulations, and that to circulate the appeal was contrary to Rule 40, which declared that those cases only should be referred to the subscribers at large, which might not be specifically defined by the regulations, provided also, that the reference were approved by the Directors. Both these elements of qualification are wanting in the present case. But notwithstanding their unchanged opinion as to the absence of any ground of claim, and that the appeal is against the letter and spirit of a particular rule, the Directors, in deference to the wishes of the Kurnaul officers who have signed the requisition are willing that the case should go forth to the Army through them.

The Directors are most anxious to avoid all appearance of standing between the liberality of the Army and a proved case of great distress; but they have a responsible trust to execute and prescribed public duties to fulfil, which do not permit them to yield to private feelings, or to compassionate considerations, by which the interests of the Society would be greatly injured.

The present case is not singular, and a dangerous precedent will be created by the success of the claim; another similar instance has just occurred in which the same neglect or delay will be attended with an equally distressing result.

The subscribers will observe, that the assurance which Colonel Sale gives, that it was the deceased's intention to have subscribed had he been but spared for a very short time longer, is vouched by the Kurnaul appellants as being well known to them.

The Directors do not doubt it, and wish that every benefit should be allowed to the appeal, that such evidence may warrant. But, in a precisely similar circumstance, where also there was no doubt of the subscriber's wish and intent, this was ruled by the Army to be insufficient. The case alluded to was that of Brevet Colonel Cave.

It may be added, that Government has decided that it is optional to an officer to subscribe as a married man, although, as having entered the service since 30th August 1826, it is compulsory upon him to subscribe as a bachelor.

By order of the Directors,

H. MARTINDALL, Secy.

No. 1.

Kurnaul, 9th June, 1837.

To H. MARTINDALL, Esq.,
Secy. to Bengal Military Fund.

SIR,—On behalf of my daughter Mrs. Dysart, widow of the late Lieutenant Dysart, of the 2d Regiment N. I., I have the honour to request you to solicit for her case the favorable consideration of the Directors of the Military Fund.

I can assure you, that it was her husband's intention to have become a married subscriber to the Fund, had his life been spared for but the short space of one month, and that the postponement of entering himself as much was caused, not by a forgetfulness of, or a disregard for, the benefits of your excellent institution, but from the praise-worthy motive of paying off a little debt which he was necessitated to incur on his marriage, and which was all but liquidated, when a melancholy accident cut short his life.

I am aware, that this explanation, though it must acquit him of having been neglectful to his wife's interests, in the event of her survivorship, will not constitute a claim of right on her part to the benefits of the Fund; but I feel confident, that it will have a great influence over the known kind and liberal feelings of the Army in inducing them to grant to their late brother officer's widow (otherwise quite unprovided for, save by the pittance from Lord Clive's Fund) the indulgence of being enrolled as an annuitant on the Fund, upon my paying up for her whatever sum the arrears may amount to, which Lieut. Dysart would have paid had he subscribed in proper time; and, I can assure the Army, that my daughter will ever reflect on their kindness with feelings of the deepest gratitude, and that those feelings will be participated most cordially by her family.

If, therefore, the Directors will be good enough to submit her case to the subscribers at large, I have every hope, that it will be favorably dealt with (under the explanation I have frankly given,) by that liberal body.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

R. SALE, Lieut.-Col. 13th L. I.

No. 1.

To H. MARTINDALL, Esq.

Secretary, Bengal Military Fund.

SIR,—Understanding that the Directors of the Military Fund do not consider themselves authorized by the rules of the institution, to circulate the accompanying letter from Colonel Sale, Her Majesty's 13th Light Infantry, to the subscribers to the Fund, we, the undersigned, being informed, that in present form it may go forward, request you will submit the same to the Directors (well knowing that it was the late Lieut. Dysart's intention to have subscribed as a married member, and his being a bachelor subscriber to the time of his death) for the purpose of collecting the votes of the Army; and, they trust, notwithstanding Lieut. Dysart's forgetfulness, that his widow may be enrolled as an Annuitant on the fund.

We have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servants,

THE NEW TARIFF.

To H. T. PRINSEP, Esq., Secretary to Government, General Department, Fort William.

SIR,—We take the liberty of appealing through you to his honor the Vice President in Council, against the erroneous, and in most cases exorbitant, valuations, put on China and country produce by the New Tariff. We shall, in this communication, merely confine our remarks to the article tea, of which, according to the tariff, there are but two classifications, viz. "Hyson Skin," valued at rupees 32 for whole chest, and "Hyson" and "Black" valued indiscriminately at rupees 85 per chest, whereas, it is a notorious fact, that there is no article of commerce possessing so great a variety of characters and value as "tea." Had the framers of the New Tariff regulations referred to the Custom House books, they would have ascertained that "Hyson Skin" tea, (of which the whole-sale market price here is seldom more than frequently less than rupees 20 per chest) has been hitherto generally passed at a valuation of rupees 18 per chest; while the very best "Hyson" and "Black" teas of which, in times of the greatest scarcity, the whole-sale market value seldom exceeds rupees 80 a 90 per chest, have paid duties on a valuation ranging between 60 rupees and 80 rupees per chest; and the inferior qualities, which seldom bring more than rupees 30 a 35 per chest, have been passed at proportionately low rates.

In proof of this assertion we beg leave to enclose 3 bills for duties paid by ourselves on teas imported within the past few months. The valuation of "Hyson" and "Black" teas ranges, as you will observe, from rupees 22 to rupees 78 per whole chest; the greater portion, by far, being valued at rupees 22 a 40; while only 49 chests are valued at the higher rate of rupees 78, and in no instance is "Hyson Skin" appraised above 18 rupees! Surely, no additional argument is necessary to convince the Government, that the framers of the New Tariff could not have informed themselves sufficiently on these points, before obtaining the sanction of the Legislature to their schedule of valuations!

Of the teas imported into India, by far the greater portion is of the most inferior "Hyson" and Black, selling at rupees 25 a 35 per chest, for consumption in the Upper Provinces; and "Hyson Skin," which is most difficult of sale, even at rupees 20 a 22 per chest. In proof of this we may here state, that the greater portion of the inferior teas imported by us under the enclosed duty-bills, is still on our hands unsaleable.

We have been chiefly led to make the foregoing observations, in consequence of the enormous loss we shall be subjected to if forced to pay duty at the Tariff valuation on a recent large importation to us per Bark "Cowajee Family," which valuation, as per Bonded Ware-house keeper's certificate herewith sent, is not less than rupees 42,350, whereas the very outside market value of the teas is not more than rupees 21,000: thus subjecting us to a tax of nearly 22 per cent., instead of the legitimate one of 10 per cent.!

We are informed that previous to the passing of the Tariff Act, the schedule of valuations was laid before the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce for their approval, and that it was approved by them after some slight modifications. If such were the case, it is probable, that the gentlemen composing the Committee merely looked over the items coming immediately within their own range of business, and that finding them, generally, correctly estimated, they took for granted, that all other articles were equally so.

But we are prepared to prove, not only that most articles of China produce or manufacture, but of the produce and manufacture of this country also, are rated in the New Tariff at prices far above the general average procurable, while, on the other hand, several others are under valued. We would therefore respectfully suggest, that his Honor the Vice President in Council, should authorize the appointment of a Committee of merchants selected from all branches of trade, to revise under the direction of the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, the valuations imposed by the New Tariff, and that pending such revision, the Collector of Customs be authorized, as heretofore, to levy duties on goods at the appraised or market value of the day.

* If, however, His Honor in Council does not see fit to sanction the latter part of this suggestion, we have to request permission to sell off by public auction, the whole of the teas imported by us per bark "Cowajee Family," (now lying in the Bonded Ware-house,) and to pay duty, on the net proceeds thereof, instead of on the arbitrary valuation now put upon them.

We have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

Calcutta, November 24, 1837.

We, the undersigned, are also concerned in the China trade, and join with Messrs. Rustonjee Cowajee and Co. in soliciting the attention of Government to a revision of the New Tariff valuations.—Hurkaru, December 1.

ASIATIC SOCIETY.

The monthly meeting of the Asiatic Society on Wednesday evening last, seemed to have been generally forgotten by its members amidst the festivities incident to the visit of the young Prince of Orange, for neither President nor Vice-President attended, and but half-a-dozen members were to be seen in the room. Fortunately, (for the credit of the society) General Ventura did not avail himself of the invitation to be present upon the occasion. In consequence of the paucity of attendance some matters of importance were postponed; among the rest, the question, whether to accept the offer of purchasing a valuable and extensive collection of objects of natural history tendered by Dr. Evans, which, in the event of his offer being declined, are to be forwarded to England. The collection was spread out upon the table, and nearly covered the whole of it. Besides the above, the following interesting objects were exhibited.

Three skeleton heads of the wild bull of Java, sent by Prince Henry of Orange for inspection.

A portion of General Ventura's copious collection of Bactrian coins; among which were a copper Heliocles, a silver Lycias, and some new types of the Atos and Mages; also, some antique entaglyphs in cornelian and garnet, one or two of them evidently the work of Grecian artists, with the peculiarity of having Hindoo names in Sanskrit upon them.

A set of native pictures representing Punjaub costumes, also sent by General Ventura for inspection.

Specimens of a mineral used for dying the red slipper at Bassorah, and some very large perfect crystals of salt from the Persian Gulf, both presented by the Hon'ble Colonel Morrison.

A collection of antiques and minerals from Egypt, presented by Lieutenant Young of the Bengal Engineers.

Specimens of coal and iron ore from Syria, discovered by Mr. J. C. Brettel, and given by him at Cairo to Lieutenant Nesbit, who presented them to the society.

A specimen of flexible siliceous sandstone, sent for inspection by Major-General Sir David Ximenes.

A larger specimen of the same very curious mineral, sent by Mr. Trevo. Plowden from Meerut, and presented to the society by Mr. Parker on his behalf. Dr Falconer's description of this mineral was published some time since in the society's Journal.

A large collection of minerals from Bourbon, presented by Dr. Langstaff.

Accurate facsimiles on cotton cloth and paper (three copies) of the inscription upon the Allahabad pillar, by Captain E. Smith, Engineers.

A large collection of rock inscriptions presented by Colonel Sykes, which he had made many years ago in the south of India, and presented to the society at Bombay, who transferred them to the Royal Asiatic Society of London, neither of which societies had turned them to any use. The language of the whole of them is the Pali, and the character that of the inscription upon the Delhi Lath.

A letter was read from Lieutenant Hutton, at Simlah, accepting, subject to permission from the Commander-in-Chief, the offer of the society to engage him on an excursion to explore the shell deposits in the Himalaya range, for which object the society have contributed 1,000 Rs.—Calcutta Courier, Dec. 8.

Wednesday Evening, the 6th December, 1837.

WILLIAM CRACROFT, Esq., C. S., in the chair.

Mr. Joseph Willis, Dr. Colin James Macdonald, Major A. Irvine, and Captain H. Drummond, proposed at the last meeting, were ballotted for, and duly elected members of the society.

Nawáb Jabar Khan, proposed at the last meeting, was upon the favorable report of the Committee of Papers, elected an honorary member.

J. H. Batten, Esq. proposed by the Secretary, seconded by Mr. Macleod.

Bábu Conoy Lal Tagore, proposed by ditto, seconded by Mr. Hare.

Charles Elliot Barwell, Esq., proposed by Mr. Cracroft, seconded by the Secretary.

Maulavi Abdul Mojid, requested the loan of the Harishamin and the Suwaiq Mahriqa, to collate with an edition he is now printing.

He also made an offer of 1000 rupees for the broken series of the Patawa Alemgiri, undertaking to reprint the first two volumes at his own expence—referred to the Committee of Papers.

Read a letter from Dr. McClelland, accepting a seat in the Committee appointed at the last meeting for the superintendence of the museum.

Bábu Ramdhan Sen announced, that he had completed the second volume of the Itaqa, and in compliance with his agreement, presented 50 copies of the work to the society for distribution at their discretion.

Letters from the President of the Geographical Society of Paris, M. Roux de Rochelle, and from the Baron Macguckin de Slane, forwarded their publications.

The following extract from the Baron de Slane's letter will interest oriental scholars.

"Sachant combien vous vous intéressez, Monsieur le Président, au progrès de la culture des langues orientales, je profite de cette occasion pour vous informer que la première livraison du texte Arabe de la géographie d'Aboultéda sera publiée dans peu de jours; l'impression de cette ouvrage, (qui a été confiée par la Société Asiatique de Paris à mes soins) à ceux de mon avant collègue Monsieur Reinand de l'Institut, s'avance rapidement, et nous espérons pouvoir bientôt en offrir un exemplaire à votre Société.

Library.

The Secretary laid on the table a catalogue of the Arabic, Persian, Turkish and Hindu works in the Society's library, prepared by the society's maulavi, and printed in Persian for general circulation.

Antiquities.

Major P. L. Pew wrote from Delhi, that at his solicitation, Mahárája Hindu Rao had handsomely presented the ancient pillar, lately lying in Colonel Fraser's grounds, to the Asiatic Society.

Major Pew stated, that the fragment containing the inscription, was the largest of the whole, and that its weight was very considerable so as to render it difficult to remove it from its present situation for transmission to Calcutta. It was suggested, that as the shaft was already broken, and the written part considerably mutilated, it would answer the society's object to cut off the portion containing the inscription, which would thus be reduced to portable dimensions.

Resolved, that thanks be given to Mahárája Hindu Rao for this liberal gift, as well as to Major Pew, for his kind exertions on behalf of the society; and that a letter be addressed to Government, on the strength of the permission lately accorded, requesting, that the executive engineer of the Delhi division may be authorized to effect the conveyance of the pillar to Calcutta at the public expence.

With reference to the same pillar, Mr. T. Metcalfe, C. S., forwarded a copy, made by hand with every care, of the inscription.

Major Pew's impression has anticipated this work; and it is curious to remark the errors committed by the eye in copying even the more perfect passages of the inscription.

Bábu Conoy Lal Tagore, begged the society's acceptance of the Belá Sena copper-plate he sent for inspection at the last meeting.

Lieutenant Kitson forwarded a facsimile of the ancient inscription on the Khandgiri rock, of which an imperfect copy is given in Stirling's Report on Cuttack.

Lieutenant Kitson had seized the first moment to run out by rák to the spot, a distance of forty miles, in order to effect this object. He was obliged to construct a scaffolding to get at the writing, and the transcription was continued even by torch-light; being much worn, it was found, that the morning and evening shadows allowed the faintest chance of restoring the doubtful letters.

The result of this spirited undertaking has been to bring to light a very curious document, entirely different from those hitherto read, in the lat character. It is of a somewhat later date, and there are already several modifications of the alphabetical forms.

Colonel Sykes, Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, transmitted from London, copies of a few of the inscriptions on the caves of the Dakhan which he had collected long since, and had presented to the branch society of Bombay.

He had remarked on them, many of the Buddhist symbols noted on the early Indian coins, and, he was in hopes, the inscriptions if he deciphered, might throw some light upon them. The Secretary was happy to state that he had read the whole of them at once, and they presented another valuable link in the chain of the primitive alphabet, which would materially aid the labours of the Rev. Mr. Wilson, Mr. Wathen, and Dr. Stephenson, on the west of India.

Dr. A. Burns communicated copy of another copper plate grant from Kaira in Gujerat.

This plate on being deciphered, has also led to a discovery, the value of the numerals corresponding with the alphabets of the third century, hitherto a desideratum. It is applicable to the inscription at Bhilsa, and to several documents published lately without explanation of the numerical signs.

Captain Edward Smith, Engineers, forwarded impressions on cloth and paper, of the whole of the inscription on the Allahabad pillar.

The mode of executing this difficult task, and the utility of it towards the correction of the highly curious historical details disclosed, were described in a note by the Secretary, (printed in the present number.) The cloth impression, suspended from the ceiling of one side of the meeting room, spread over several chairs, after touching the ground! Capt. Smith states, that the chief difficulty of the undertaking lay in the pillar, not being perfectly straight, which prevented its readily turning or rolling over.

Captain Smith had submitted to the Military Board, several improved designs for the pedestal and capital of the pillar, adopting the Buddhist Sinha for the surmounting ornament.

Captain F. Jenkins communicated a translation and analysis of the Ahom fragment published in the January No. of the Journal, made by Jaggoram Khargarya Phokan, Sadar Amin of Gohati.

Major Ouseley forwarded from Hoshangabad the sketch of a Jain image in possession of a Khandatwal banya, with Prakrit inscription of 300 years old.

Lieut. Madden also sent from Nimach, copies of inscriptions on various Jain images, dug up in that neighbourhood.

General Ventura, Honorary Member, submitted for inspection some Bactrian coins, and Hindu antiquities from the Panjah.

Among the coins, besides a number of Apollodotus and Menander silver, were a small silver Lysias, a copper coin of Helicetes, unique; new varieties of Mayes and Ases, and a Kolusa Kadaphes. Among the intaglii in cornelian and garnet, a female head with inscription Kesava dasaga, another of Ajita varma, and others. Also a Buddhist seal of black pottery, bearing the ye dharma formula.

The General also sent for exhibition a series of drawings of the costumes of the Panjah, and a portrait of Ranjit Singh, by Mr. Vigne.

Lieut. C. B. Young, Engineers, presented some Egyptian antiquities, mummied alligators, &c.

H. Walters, Esq., gave, in the name of Captain Bogle, a set of African griffin weights.

His Royal Highness, Prince Henry of Orange, entrusted to the Secretary for exhibition, a bronze vessel formed of a cup soldered to a dial, containing, thus hermetically closed, a small quantity of water.

This vessel was found in an old temple at Java; local tradition stated it to contain Ganges water carried thither in times of yore by some pious pilgrim.

Physical.

The reply of Lieut. Hutton was received, accepting the society's commission to explore the Spiti valley, should he be able to obtain leave of absence.

H. R. H. Prince Henry of Orange, sent three heads of the wild bull of Java (Tandoo Banding) for comparison with the Garu of India.

Dr. Evans pointed out remarkable specific differences in the forehead and position of the horns of the two animals.

Mr. H. M. Parker, forwarded, in the name of Mr. Trevor Plowden, of Meerut, a large slab of the peculiar flexible sandstone, described in a note from Dr. Falconer, some meetings since.

A thinner slice of the same material sent by General Sir David Ximenes showed its properties in a very striking manner. On examination with the blowpipe and with acids the cement which unites the particles of sand proves to be silicious, but in very small quantity. The stone is easily friable, and bends to a small extent only when it seems checked as with a hinge. The motion is in any direction, and is made with very slight force.

Specimens of salt from the Persian Gulf in large cubical crystals of copper ore, and of the mineral used in dyeing the red slippers of Russorah (red ochreous lithomarge?) were presented by the Hon. Coloured Morrison.

Lieut. Young presented gypsum and other minerals from Egypt, collected in his journey to India. Lieut. Nesbitt also added samples of the coal and iron ore (a rich carbonate) from Syria, lately mined by the Engineers in the service of the Pacha.

Lieut. H. Siddons, in compliance with the society's request, forwarded a register of the tides on the Chittagong coast for October.

Dr. McClelland placed on record a descriptive catalogue of the series of geological specimens collected by himself while employed with the late Assam deputation, and now deposited in the museum.

Lieut. Eyre presented, in the name of Dr. Langstaff, a collection of specimens of the volcanic rocks of Bourbon and Mauritius, with a descriptive catalogue and notes.

The tables were covered with a portion of Dr. Evans's fine collection of objects of natural history—birds, animals, reptiles, insects, shells, and osteological, which the proprietor tendered to the society for purchase on virtue of the late communication from Government; but the meeting was so thinly attended that it was decided to postpone the discussion of Dr. Evans's proposition.

A note from Colonel MacLeod, Chief Engineer, acquainted the society with the progress of the experimental boring in the Fort.

The tubes had reached a depth of 450 feet, and had met with some impediment to their further descent; though the sand continued to enter below. A rolled fragment of vesicular basalt had been brought up from this depth.—Journal of the Asiatic Society for November.

MEDICAL COLLEGE.

The distribution of prizes and certificates to the successful members of the chemical class of the students, took place about half past ten o'clock on Saturday morning, at the theatre of the Medical College, in the presence of His Honor the Deputy Governor, the Hon'ble T. B. Macaulay, the Hon'ble H. Shakespeare, the Committee of Public Instruction, Dwarkanath Tagore, Ram Comul Sen, Russomoy Dutt, Rajah Kaleekissen and a respectable assemblage of European and native gentlemen. On the Deputy Governor's taking his seat, Dr. O'Shaughnessy, the Professor of chemistry, detailed the nature of the examinations (on arsenic) and the precautions taken to render the essays the bona fide productions of the several writers. After this the following paper was read:—

"I have carefully read through all the chemical examination papers submitted to me by Professor O'Shaughnessy, as opportunity offered. This interrupted scrutiny has necessarily prevented my so carrying in my mind the precise contents of each paper, as to state correctly their respective merits; I have, however, made a few memoranda on each as it passed under review, which have assisted the classification now to be attempted.

"In the first place, I may remark generally, that all the essays are extremely creditable; indeed, the extent and accuracy of the information on the single subject selected to test the abilities of the pupils, has far surpassed my expectations, and I do not think that in Europe any class of chemical pupils would be found capable of passing a better examination for the time they have attended lectures, nor, indeed, that an equal number of boys would be found so nearly on a par in their acquirements. For none of these papers betray idleness or ignorance, or superficial apprehension of what has been taught. The differences are those rather of different age—different natural ability or retention of memory. The faults of explanation are trifling. Grammatical errors are more numerous, but allowance must be made for them in boys writing in a foreign tongue, in the rudiments of which they have been unequally instructed.

"Many of the papers shew, that besides attending to the words of the lecturer the writers have studied his manual; indeed, some seem almost to use his very words; but I, by no means regard this as a fault, on the contrary it proves attention and interest in the subject of their studies; one or two go farther and quote other authorities to which they must have had recourse in their 'reading up,' and as it could not be known what subject would be placed before them, this betokens a considerable acquaintance with chemical authors. One pupil, indeed, details the whole series of toxicological tests for discovering arsenical poisons, and I should be inclined to award the highest place to him, were there not some inaccuracies in his too brief notice of the general properties of the metal.

"On the whole, I assign the first merit to a well written paper having the motto OU KLEIJE though muriate of morphia" is in some respects superior. The latter contains more originality, and it introduces properties strictly chemical, which are not alluded to in many other papers, and shews a precision in nomenclature and classification. 'Zero' speaks of having repeated Marsh's experiment at home with success, and others of having aided in the experiments in the College dissecting room; but I must refer to the notes in the accompanying tabular statement for the remarks which have occurred to me on each candidate.

"On the whole I beg to congratulate Professor O'Shaughnessy on the progress of his class, and on the highly creditable result of this examination.

November 20, 1837.

J. PRINSEP."

His Honor the Deputy Governor then handed the prizes and certificates to the students, according to their respective merits, and of which the following is a list:—

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's apartments, the 2nd December, 1837.

A letter from the following gentlemen was read:—

From — Smith, Esq., of Penang, requesting that his name may be withdrawn from the list of members, because of the distance of his station from the presidency, and the consequent uncertainty of receiving any communications from the society.

Mr. Richard O'Shaughnessy presented an account of an operation wherein he had removed an enormous tumour from the upper jaw of a Hindoo. The tumour was of a fibro cartilaginous character, nearly equal in size to the patient's head. The whole of the superior maxillary and malar bones of the left side were removed, the patient lost no more than 8 ounces of blood, and very little constitutional irritation followed the operation, which was completely successful, the wound being nearly healed although less than three weeks had elapsed since the tumour was removed.

The case was accompanied by a preparation of the tumour, and some drawings very beautifully executed by Mr. Grant.

A long discussion arose upon a proposed alteration of some of the rules, when it was finally determined, upon a proposition by Dr. Steward, seconded by Mr. W. A. Green, that a Committee composed of Drs. Bell, Corbyn, and Goodeve, should be formed to revise the laws and constitution of the society, and to suggest such alterations as may appear desirable with reference to the present state of the society.

It was proposed by Mr. McCosh, seconded by Dr. Bell, that the periodicals of the society, be upon the library table for two weeks after their receipt, and that they be hereafter circulated amongst the members.

A paper upon inquires of the heart by Dr. Villane, of Bourbon, was then read and discussed.

MOTIONS.—The President brought forward the motion made at the last general meeting, prefacing it by some remarks on the present condition of the society, viz.

“Proposed by the President, seconded by Dr. Jackson and resolved, that in reference to the increasing correspondence and labors generally of the Secretary, a salary be awarded to Mr. Bell of 300 rupees per month. Carried non. con.”

MOTIONS SUBMITTED TO THE MEETING.—1st. “Moved by Mr. W. Storm, seconded by Mr. Bell, that an application be made to the Admiral commanding in India, requesting him to give instructions to any of Her Majesty's ships of war touching at Otsheite, to bring such quantity of the sugarcane of that island, as they may be able conveniently to carry for the use of this society.”

2d. —“Moved by Mr. Cracroft, seconded by Dr. Wallich, that from the report of the Caoutchouc Committee (vide notice hereafter) and examination of the specimens, it appears to the society that Lieutenant Vetch's exertions, and experiments have been eminently successful; he has produced and laid before the society a larger quantity of the gum of a quality superior to any yet brought to their notice. Circumstances prevent his placing at the disposal of the society a portion of the weight specified in the society's advertisement (though the despatch is nearly three times that quantity) nevertheless, the society, anxious to mark their sense of his exertions, it is proposed to award a gold medal on his forwarding on an early date the quantity specified in the advertisement (one pound) not inferior in quality to that brought to their notice by Dr. Wallich.”

3rd. —“Moved by Mr. Bell, seconded by Mr. Storm, that a machine, &c.” (for the entire of this motion, see after Mr. F. Sanday's communication on a new method of raising water in the subsequent part of this report.)

RESOLUTIONS.—Read the Committee's report on samples and prices of cotton sent to the Hon'ble the Court of Directors, signed by Messrs. Storm, Adam, Willis, Colvin, Syers, Huffleagle and Bell.

Read also Mr. Earle's note concurring in the report throughout, but declining to sign in consequence of “not having attended to the matter lately, nor read, at least recently, the Court's letter.”

Read also Mr. G. A. Prinsep's minute appended to the report.

Proposed by the President and resolved, that the report of the Committee be printed, together with Mr. Prinsep's note on the society's transactions.

Read the Caoutchouc Committee's report on specimens produced by Assist. Surgeon Scott, of Assam, and on samples presented by Mr. Cracroft, the produce of Penang and South America.

The President proposed, and was seconded by the meeting, that a part of each of Surgeon Scott's samples be sent to the Society of Arts, and to the Agricultural Committee of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland.

Resolved further, that the report be adopted and published in the society's transactions.

Read Minutes of the Caoutchouc Committee in a letter from Dr. Wallich to the Secretary, dated the 4th December, accompanied by samples of gum taken from a chest, in transit to Europe, prepared by Lieut. Vetch, of Assam, soliciting attention to these specimens, and suggesting that Lieut. Vetch be awarded the gold medal, for his exertions with reference to the quantity then in Dr. Wallich's hands, which far exceeded the quantity required by advertisement, although he (Dr. W.) was not authorized to retain any portion of this Caoutchouc agreeably to the conditions of the resolution, that had been previously passed in regard to encouraging the collection of good caoutchouc.

Upon these minutes Mr. Cracroft based his motion, already noticed under the proper head.

Read the Nursery Committee's report, which was accompanied by a very neat and well-executed plan of the ground as now laid out.

Resolved, that the report be adopted, and that the best thanks of the Society be offered to Dr. Hufnagle, for the trouble he has taken in surveying the Nursery.

Read the Report of a Special Committee, appointed to report on Mr. Bell's guinea grass cultivation, accompanied by a plan of the ground, which by actual measurement occupied in guinea grass 10 biggahs, 7 cottahs 13 chittis, $5\frac{1}{2}$ feet.

Resolved, that Mr. Bell is entitled to the 2d class premium and silver medal, for cultivation.

And in the 1st class premium for seed from such cultivation, provided no other competitors appear before the 1st January, 1838.

Read the Sugar Committee's report on the suggestion of Mr. Payter, of Bendorah, to hire a vessel to bring a cargo of Otaheite cane from the island direct.

Resolved, that the Committee's report, which is unfavourable to the scheme, be adopted.

Read proceedings of the Silk Committee on the subject of a further supply of the Area cocoons forwarded by Capt. Jenkins, through Messrs Cantor and Co. A portion of each sample has been sent by Mr. R. Watson to Guttaul, for another experiment as to the possibility of winding off the silk.

Mr. Blake, of Dhoba, who was present, presented samples of fine qualities of sugar, some Heacle and rum, of which he has promised to favor the society with particulars, as to opinions in England, and prices hereafter.

Mr. Chas. Devering presented in person samples of Upland Georgia, Sea Island, and New Orleans cotton, grown at Kaleepool, Je-nore, from American seed, supplied by this society; and promised to give particulars as to returns, cost of production, &c., when the whole crop is taken off.

Dr. Hufnagle presented specimens of Upland Georgia cotton in the pod, grown in his garden at Cosipore from acclimated seed. Dr. H. also noticed the result of an attempt to obtain potash, from "soudry" wool ashes. The residuum furnished less than 4 per cent. of the alkali, and the quantity of muriate of soda amounted to about 70 per cent.

Dr. H. states, that there is a possibility however, that the wood used in experiment had been saturated with salt water.

Some samples of cotton twist and cloth made from the Pernambuco cotton forwarded by Mr. Blundell, were sent in by J. S. Crawford, Esq., but are now before the Committee.

From W. Griffith, Esq., dated Cherra, November 1st acknowledging the receipt of the Secretary's letter of the 3d of October, and of the copy of the proceedings of the Committee of Enquiry that accompanied it.

From J. M. Sinclair, Esq., of Lucknow, offering on the part of Mr. Fortier, of the same place, a supply of Otaheite sugar cane at 10 rupees per 100, but stating that they were of inferior quality. Mr. Fortier's note had been circulated to the Agricultural Committee, who decided that it would not be advisable to accept the offer with reference to the stated inferiority, and the risk attending its transmission, the last supply from Lucknow having been received in very bad condition.

From O. Burnett, Esq., Adjutant, Mhairwarrah Local Battalion, dated October 27th, promising to forward by the hand of Dr. Maclean, samples of cotton produced from seed, sent by the Society to Captain Dixon, as also samples from seeds of the first year's produce.

From R. Davidson, Esq., of Calcutta, dated 5th December, enclosing extract of a letter from a friend dated Beaur or Mhairwarrah, 18th November. "I have the pleasure of enclosing a small sample of uncarded cotton (grown in our garden) from American seed, which is pronounced to be of a fine quality."

Memo.—(The sample is referred to the Cotton Committee for opinion.)

Jamieson, dated Masulipatam, October 24th, forwarding a memo, of the cost of shipping, &c. per Barque Soubrow, the graft apple plants consigned to his care on account of the Agricultural Society and Mr. Storm.

From Mr. S. Jamieson, to the Secretary, dated Masulipatam, October 31st, enclosing a note from Major Moore, dated 14th September, regarding the transmission of the above grafts, and advising the despatch of them from that Port per Barque Soubrow.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 9th December, enclosing the following report of Mr. Masters on the condition of Major Moore's grafts, received by the Secretary from the Soubrow, on the 7th, and forwarded to the Botanical Garden.

"Botanical Garden, December 8, 1837.—Received three boxes containing six plants of species of apple in six flower pots, nearly all dead. Two of the grafts are alive, but they are on very unhealthy stocks, the other four grafts are entirely dead; all of them have been injured by the bandage, which appears to have been made of oil cloth, which did not give way by the swelling of the grafts."

(Signed) J. W. MASTERS.

A letter was read at the last general meeting, from J. Little, Esq., Secretary to the Bombay Agricultural Society, dated 20th September, enclosing a receipt, for a box, despatched by the same unfortunate Barque Soubrow, containing four vine plants and four dozen cuttings of the same. The receipt was sent on board, and a verbal message returned, that no such box was on board.

The Secretary called upon Captain Smith to explain, and Captain Smith, intimated to the Secretary, that in consequence of the very disastrous passage, all the plants died, notwithstanding the attention paid to them by passengers on board, and that the box was thrown over board.

From H. C. Tucker, Esq., of Azimghur, dated 18th November, acknowledging the receipt of seeds, forwarded to his address by the steamer.

From Captain Jenkins, on the river, dated 27th Nov., acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter on the subject of cacoucheou, under date the 5th Nov., and which advises the despatch of a wooden form, &c.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 28th Nov., annexing extract of a letter from Dr. Wight of Madras, dated the 14th ultimo.

"My object in now writing to you, is to send you, a specimen of my lithograph of the dye lichens for presentation to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, and to say, that if it should be esteemed a desirable addition to their next volume of transactions, I think I can supply 500 copies for that purpose; now, pray lose no time in letting me know the result, as I am as yet but indifferently supplied with lithographic stones, and it is no small loss to be deprived of the use of such an one, as that from which the impressions have been taken, &c."

The Secretary, with reference to Dr. Wight's desire to have speedy reply, had ventured to anticipate the concurrence of the Committee of Papers and of the Society, to have so desirable an acquisition, as that which Dr. Wight had offered, and had expressed his conviction to this effect to Dr. Wallich.

Since then, he had calculated the drawings, and extract, which had obtained the consent of the Committee, with a desire to express their obligations to Dr. Wight for his polite offer.

Proposed by the President, seconded by the meeting, that the best thanks to the society be offered to Dr. Wight for his liberal donations.

From Thomas Waghorn, Esq., dated Cairo, 22d October, 1837, advising despatch per Steamer Atalanta, to Mr. Secretary Little, of the Bombay Agricultural Society, for transmission to this presidency, of a chest containing a quantity of the best Moho cotton seed in Egypt, which he begs, may be presented to this society in his name.

From Dr. Campbell, of Nipal, dated 28th Nov., in reply to the Secretary's letter of 20th November, asking for a small supply of each size and quality of paper manufactured at Nipal for experimental purposes; intimates his intention of transmitting a quantity, and suggests, that samples of each variety be forwarded to the Chamber of Commerce.

Encloses copies of a correspondence that has lately passed between Mr. T. C. Scott and himself on the subject of this paper, as likely to prove interesting to the Society.

From Captain Sanders, Secretary to the Military Board, dated December 6, annexing copy of letter to his address from Major Gwatkin, Superintendent of the Haupper Stud, under date November 23d, requesting information regarding the cultivation, &c. of guinea grass, and desiring a supply of seed from the Society's stock.

From D. B. Syers, Esq., dated 25th Nov., offering to furnish to the society, at the original costs and charges, a quantity of fresh New Orleans cotton seed, imported per Ott orporel.

From R. Montgomery, Esq., of Azimghur, dated 14th Sept., transmitting a copy of regulations framed for the guidance of the Branch A. and H. Society, recently established at that station. Requesting assistance from the Parent Society in supplying seeds.

From the same, dated 27th Sept., forwarding a map of the district, together with replies to the Agricultural queries circulated by this society, drawn up conjointly by H. S. Fucker and R. Montgomery, Esquires, also giving much valuable information on other subjects connected with the district in question.

Memo—These interesting communications ought to have been submitted in October, but from their outward appearance, they were mistaken by official returns of grain and left at the General Post Office with all these documents, pending a reference to Government on the subject of postage. They were then immediately transferred to the Secretary of the Statistical Committee, and only recovered on the 11th instant, on application to that gentleman by the Secretary of this society, under a supposition that they might be among these documents.

From H. Fiddington, Esq., dated Dec. 10th, presenting to the Society a few heads of rice from Carolina seed.

The following presentations were made in addition to those already enumerated with their respective communications.

A plan of the Agricultural Society's Nursery, as at present laid out, drawn and presented by Dr. Huffleagle, 16 specimens of lichens, from James Prinsep, Esq., Secretary of the Asiatic Society.

Samples of tobacco, from Persian seed, and of Upland Georgia and New Orleans cotton, grown in the Branch Society's garden at Burdwan, but not alluded to in Dr. Cheek's letter already noted.

2 quarts of Saudoway tobacco seed presented by Capt. Bogle of Arracan.

Library of Useful Knowledge, one volume. Cattle, their diseases, breeds and management, by A. R. Jackson, Esq., M. D.

Presented by the Secretary, Beell's Comparative view of external commerce of Bengal.

22 seeds of guinea grass seed, a root of the ole, from stock brought from the Persian Gulf.

From H. Walters, Esq., dated 12th Dec., presenting on the part of Mr. P. Wise, two specimens of tea grown in the Tipperah Hills, and prepared by the natives for common use. One sample is the leaf in its dried state, the other undergoing maceration with salt in a bamboo, preparatory to use. A few leaves accompany this communication dried in their natural form. Mr. Walters says, "the tea plant found wild in the Tipperah Hills may not be the same as that cultivated in China; but as it is evidently a plant of the same family, as will be apparent from inspection of the dry leaves enclosed, there can, I imagine, be little difficulty in introducing the tree to the same locality."

From John Francis Sandys, Esq., dated Garden Reach, 12th Dec., forwarding models of 2 machines, (invented by Teignmouth Sandys, Esq., C. S., Arrah) for drawing water, either from a reservoir or well.

THE BR-LEVER BALANCE CRANE,

"Jack and Jill."

"The principle of the machine is of the simplest kind. It is, in short, the application of the common endless chain, operated on by two levers, balancing evenly, and alternating on this principle, work a counterpoise attached to one of the said two levers; which, though not the chief, yet forms its secondary force. The chief, or the moving power, is the weight of men, or of large animals, walking in and out of both the levers; thereby creating the actions of ascent and descent."

These models are so accurately constructed and described by Mr. Sandys, that they will amply repay a visit to the Town Hall to inspect them and as one is a working model, the principle will be understood at a glance.

The machine invented by T. Sandys, Esq., combines simplicity and cheapness, but its greatest recommendation is the vast saving of labor.

Proposed by the Secretary, seconded by W. Storm, Esq., that a machine be constructed after Mr. Leighmouth Sandys's model No. 2, at the tank adjoining the sugar-cane cultivation on the Society's Nursery, in order that its utility may be fairly tested, and that a minute account of the expense of construction and working be kept, as a guide for those who may be disposed to adopt the Bli er-crane. Further, that the Nursery Committee and Committee on Implements of Husbandry and Machinery, be requested to co-operate in superintending its erection and application, and to report upon it.

Proposed by the President and resolved, that an estimate of the expense of erecting this machine be furnished by the Committee on Implements before the next meeting.

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be offered for all these communications and presentations.

JOHN BELL, Secretary

Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India.

Agricultural and Horticultural Society's Office, Town Hall, Calcutta, December 13, 1837.

NURSERY COMMITTEE.

A meeting of this committee assembled at the Botanical Garden on Saturday evening, the 18th November, 1837, at 5 p. m.

PRESENT.

N. Wallich, Esq., M. D.	W. F. Gibbon.
Wm. Storm, Esq.	Dr. Haffangle.
Capt. Leach.	John Bell.

Proceeded to visit the Nursery. Found that, with reference to a resolution passed at the last Committee Meeting, the Otaheite canes had been cut and planted out after the West-India plan, in holes 12 inches deep, and a considerable accession made to the general cultivation by adding plants from the original stock of Mauritius cane in the Botanical Garden.

The China cane has been also extended by the same process as adopted above. There are now upwards of 23 beegahs of sugar-cane cultivation, and it is expected, that there are yet available canes to plant out 5 or 6 beegahs more, for which, land is already prepared.

Dr. Wallich informed the members, that advice had been received of a supply of cane having been shipped from Bourbon, and it was resolved, that ground sufficient be prepared against its arrival, and reserve the same proportion of time by which the old sugar-cane lands have evidently benefited so much.

The sugar canes planted out are coming up remarkably well, and hardly one has failed, a fact which is worthy of notice, as an opinion is prevalent in India, that cane-cuttings, unless subjected to the process of being first planted in a hopper, will not answer, a circumstance to be kept in view, as the mode of forcing the vegetation in the hopper, is detrimental to the proper and gradual development of the cane.

The Singapore canes first sent here by Dr. Montgomerie are most luxuriant, and if any fault exists, it is in its too great luxuriance.

The Committee resolve, with a view to experiment, that one half of these first plants be cut up, and re-planted to extend the cultivation, we shall thus see whether the plant in its natural state, will give a better cane, than when it has had the advantage of a free circulation of air, and room to expand.

The new plantation of canes has been laid down perfectly in unison with the plan of holing in the West Indies, and reflects great credit on Mr. Masters, who has superintended the nursery operations.

Dr. Wallich proposed, and was seconded by Mr. Storm and the Secretary, that the best thanks of the Committee be offered to Mr. Masters for the great care he has bestowed, in laying out the canes according to the West India plan of holing.

The West India-Ginger is looking very well, and it has been resolved to extend the beds as soon as the roots are fit for the purpose, and that no roots shall be distributed, until it shall appear recommendable to the Committee.

Dr. Wallich informed the Committee, that he had given Mr. McCullag, the gardener to the Pasha of Egypt, a few roots of the ginger, as he had expressed a great desire to take a plant or two and has promised to send the society a collection of agricultural seeds from Egypt.

GUINEA GRASS.

With a view to keep up a constant supply of this superior grass, it has been resolved to set apart a plot of ground, not exceeding one beegah, for this special purpose, the Secretary to supply roots from his garden.

The Sorghum-Vulgare, of which seed was received from Madras, for Capt. Jenkins, and a little retained here, has vegetated freely.

The cotton is looking well, the young plants from seed supplied by Dr. Wight of Madras, are progressing, having had a good loosening about the roots, within the last month.

Resolved, that the Egyptian cotton plants be allowed to remain, as they are yet yielding seed, which is the object of leaving them, to be cut down immediately before the setting in of the rains.

Resolved, that henceforward the Nursery Committee shall meet and visit the Nursery on the Thursday preceding each monthly general meeting, and on the 1st Wednesday following each, monthly meeting, unless some special occasion interfere to prevent the regularity.

Signed Thos. Leach,	Signed Wm. Storm,
" Chas. Haffangle,	" N. Wallich, M. D.
" W. F. Gibbon,	" John Bell.

Note.—The Committee have the pleasure to announce Dr. Haffangle's plan of the Nursery, presented to the Society by that gentleman.—Herkara, December 15.

FOURTH SESSION, or 1837.

Before Sir E. Ryan, Knt., Chief Justice.

The 4th Session of this year opened to-day, and after the Grand Jury had been as usual impanelled and chosen, I. A. Dorn, Esq., their foreman, the Chief Justice addressed them on the nature of the indictments, which were to be submitted to them during this session. He informed them that he was happy to observe that the Calendar was very light during this session, and with the exception of two murder cases, there were not any very heavy cases calling for his observations on them. After this the Chief Justice detailed the leading features of these two murder cases, and described their particular nature as far as they had fallen under his notice, and pointed out the law as bearing on them, and then he dismissed the jury to take into consideration the several indictments which were to be submitted to them during this session.

After the Grand Jury had retired the Petit Jury was impanelled, after which the Grand Jury returned a true bill against Dost Mahomed Khan, who was charged with having, on the morning of the 14th of September last, stolen several gold and silver articles to a considerable value, and some of them set with precious stones, from the shop of Gunga Gobind Roy. This prisoner was then put on his trial, and after he had pleaded not guilty, his case was investigated and the proof being very clear against him, the learned Judge, at the conclusion of the case, recapitulated the evidence, pointing out its leading features and the law as bearing on the case. The Jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of guilty against the prisoner, who was then sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the common jail of Calcutta. After this trial had been ended, there being no more cases to be called on to-day, the Court adjourned till 11 o'clock a.m. to-morrow morning, which is the hour at which it commenced business to-day, and this is the hour at which the learned Judge has determined that the Court will open every day until the sessions are finally closed.

In the course of this day the Grand Jury returned true bills on the following indictments:

1st. Bu-solheer-oddeen, charged with having stolen seven gold and silver ornaments on Saturday, the 15th of August 1837, from the shop of Shank Paunchoo, goldsmith, in the town of Calcutta.

2d. Kinnah, Sirdar, and I-surchunder Konmar, charged with having on the night of the 2d November last, stolen 450 gannies from the shop of Chundychurn Doss of Calcutta.

3d. Khoodiram Seal, Guddahur, Noben, and Choonee Bose, charged with having at Calcutta, on the 17th November last, stolen from the shop of Rammohun Dutt a parcel containing in silver Company's rupees 61, sicca rupees 16 and sicca and company's half rupees 16, and 37 sicca and Company's quarter rupees.

DECEMBER 9, 1837.

The Grand Jury found to-day true bills against the following persons, Buddinauth, for the wilful murder of Konnye.

Peter Garret Heuleger and George Lloyd, alias David Lloyd, for feloniously entering the house of Richard Baker at Goomthur, in the town of Calcutta, and stealing therefrom several articles of value.

Sheo Bhurum for feloniously receiving stolen goods—the property of Beesee Radha, knowing it to be stolen property.

Rammamur, for feloniously entering the house of Ram Ramoo Sert, in the town of Calcutta, and when apprehended, violently assaulting Gung govind Sing.

Covinath, sirdar and Isachunder Koor, for stealing from the shop of Chund-yehurn Dass, of Olive Street, 450 gunnies, valued at five rupees.

Seetanath Datto, with abetting a forged promissory note and representing it to be from Kallen Baboo to Nueconito sircar, in order to defraud the said Nueconito and the Proprietors of the Bank of Bengal.

After that Sir John Peter Grant, the Senior Palace Justice of this Court, came into the Court, and was sworn in his allegiance to the Queen, by the Chief Justice.

On account of the prisoners on several indictments, yesterday and to-day, even after having been warned by Mr. King, the Jailor of the Great Jail on their entrance into it, that they can subpoena any witness they may choose to prove their case at the ensuing trial, having still neglected to subpoena them, and now praying postponement to subpoena their witnesses, the Judge, after postponing two indictments to-day, desired Mr. King to inform all the prisoners below, that they can subpoena any person they like now before their trial comes on, and if they neglect to do so, their future excuses in this point will not be heard, and no further postponement allowed them.

Queen on the prosecution of Richard Baker versus Peter Garrett Heyleger and George, alias David Lloyd, for robbery.

The prisoners pleaded not-guilty.

Richard Baker deposed, that he resided on the 7th October, 1837, at Gloomghur lane. On the morning of that day, when he arose, he found the outer door of one of the out offices of his house broken open; this excited his suspicion, and he searched his house and found that he had been robbed of two gold seals, one gold chain, two silver watches, a fowling piece, some seaman's papers and wearing apparel. Prosecutor kept quiet for some days, and desired his friends to be on the look out. Some days afterwards one of them gave him some intimation of the thief, and he went to the Police Office and had the prisoner's arrested. Subsequently he accompanied Mr. McCann to a native police shop where he had heard some of the articles were to be found; and he there found the two gold seals and the gold chain, and the seaman's ticket. Then prosecutor then identified his property.

J. J. McCann deposed to his having accompanied the prosecutor on the night of the 10th October last at nine o'clock p. m. to the shop of Sooroo, podar, in Chunan lane, where he received the articles mentioned by the prosecutor; he subsequently, whilst Lloyd was in custody, went to his house in Cosjullah lane, which was pointed out to him by McMullen, and he there found the fowling-piece under a couch. Then Morgan was arrested on the charge. Whilst in custody, Morgan told deponent that he had got the gun and the gold chain from Mr. Baker, and that he gave them to Heyleger. After this statement he was released by the Magistrate.

Sooroo Chundur, podar, deposed, that the prisoner Heyleger used to have cash transactions with him; he on the 8th October last brought to the deponent's shop to deposit there, the two gold seals, and the other articles which Mr. McCann and the prosecutor have sworn to have received at his shop from him.

R. Baker, on cross examination, by Heyleger, admitted that he was acquainted with Heyleger, and he has often left him in charge of his house and even trusted drafts to him, and he always had reason to be satisfied with his conduct. Dependent never did on the night of the robbery quit his house to go to Witchlaw in company, of Heyleger and leave his house open. Knows Morgan; he is an African, and used to come to his house.

Win. McMullen, proved that Lloyd had, on the night of the 7th of October, mortgaged one of the watches to him for four rupees, and that his Khidmatgar found the next morning one of the stolen seals in his compound.

E. W. Gaskin, proved his having seen the stolen chain in the prisoner Heyleger's possession on the evening of the 8th October, at the last witness's house.

Amberan, deposed, that she is a cook-woman, neighbour of Mr. Baker, and she saw from the roof of her master's house an African man break the door of the out office of Mr. Baker's house at about 11 o'clock a. m.

Heyleger deposed, that the watch chain and the seals were pledged by Morgan to him for the 10 rupees which Sooroo, podar, advanced him by his order, and the gun was left at Lloyd's house by Morgan.

Lloyd said that the gun was left in Heyleger's presence in his house on the night of the 6th October last by Morgan and the seal has been in his possession for a long time, he purchased it at the bazar.

Isaac Moses deposed, that Morgan had brought a watch to be mortgaged to him and it had a chain; but he declined to receive it as a pledge; he could not recognise it again. Hanne was present at the time. Hanne confirmed this statement.

Haguet proved, that on the 8th Morgan met Heyleger in his presence and offered a chain to him for pledge on 10 rupees; he did not see the chain.

Rose Appeny deposed, that she saw on the night of the 6th, Lloyd came with Heyleger and Morgan. Morgan had a gun with him, which he left in the house, and Lloyd next morning left word with deponent that if Morgan called for the gun to give it to him. She put it under the bed to prevent her brother's children having it. J. Appeny, the deponent's son, in addition to this, said that Morgan wanted to mortgage the gun to Lloyd for five rupees. Lloyd refused to lend the money, and Morgan said as the gun was too heavy for him to carry home at that hour of the night, he would leave it there and send for it the next morning. He further proved that Lloyd had bought a seal and ring in the bazar, but he could not identify them.

J. Brown deposed, that the house in which he was found was rented by Mr. Molten and not Lloyd.

George Green deposed, that when Morgan came to see these prisoners at the Jail, Morgan then acknowledged that he had left the gun in Lloyd's house.

This having closed the case for the prosecution, the Chief Justice addressed the Jury, and in summing up the case dwelt on the inconsistency of the Magistrate who made this commitment, in not committing Morgan, who, by the evidence of Mr. McCann, which although it is not strict legal evidence, still is true evidence. By this it appears that Morgan, by his own admission, was a party implicated in this robbery, and yet the Magistrate has released him, and what is more strange, he has not even made him a witness in this case. In conclusion, he said, that the indictment charges not with having stolen goods in their possession, but of their having been the actual robbers. And this is the doubtful point; for we have no proof who had committed the robbery; there is from the evidence as much probability that Morgan might have committed it as any of these prisoners. That the stolen goods have been found in their possession there is no doubt; but perhaps they might have obtained it, as they said from Morgan, who might have been the actual thief. Lastly, the Judge said, if the Magistrate who had made this commitment was now in Calcutta, he would certainly have called on him to explain his extraordinary conduct in releasing Morgan after his statement, without even making him an evidence in this case.

The Jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

After this verdict the prisoners were discharged, and the property was ordered to be kept in Mr. McCann's possession for the present, for the Judge said that he must have a further investigation into this extraordinary case.

After this the Court adjourned till Monday, 11 o'clock.
P. M.—HURKUR @ December 11.

DECEMBER 11, 1837.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight.)

During the trial of the cases, after the Grand Jury had disposed of the indictments submitted to them, the foreman, on behalf of his colleagues and himself, delivered the following presentment of the Judge:—

"To the Hon'ble Sir EDWARD RYAN, Knight, Chief Justice.

The Hon'ble Sir JOHN P. GRANT, Knight, Puisne Justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court at Calcutta.

The Grand Jurors of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, do present, that the class of persons on whom the duties of Grand Jurymen in this city devolve, are for the most part men of business, who have full occupation for their time; that however willing to devote a reasonable portion of their time to the discharge of a public duty, a fair and equitable division of the labor among those liable to serve should be secured to them. If the list of Grand Jurors bearing the signature of the Clerk of the Crown be a correct one, it should not fall to the lot of any individual to serve on a Grand Jury, more than once in two years, whereas, many of the present Jury are called upon to serve much more frequently, while others whose names are on the list appear to evade the duty altogether.

The Grand Jurors further beg to remark, that a reduction of the number of Grand Jurors from 23 to 16 (to which they understand there is no legal objection) would afford considerable relief.

The Grand Jurors next beg to call your Lordship's attention to the state of the roads, both as regards repairs and watering; the inefficiency of the former, and the partial or total absence of the latter, on the grand lines of communication intersecting this city, are nuisances of great magnitude prejudicial alike to the health and property, and dangerous to the lives of Her Majesty's subjects residing within the jurisdiction of Her Court here established. If the means available for the removal of these nuisances are not sufficient, the present Jurors take this opportunity of expressing their willingness to be taxed for municipal purposes, provided they are allowed a voice in the application of the tax levied from them, or in the election of the Magistrates or others who are to have the control of the produce of the tax. That they are not satisfied with the results of the present system of management and, as rate payers, would prefer to have some voice in the application of the sums raised by assessment and otherwise for lighting, watering, paving, or cleansing the town, all of which they consider capable of immense improvement. That they consider many parts of the town a disgrace to any civilized capital, and respectfully yet earnestly press on the attention of the Court, for presentation in the proper quarter, the necessity of a thorough improvement in these matters."

His Lordship, after he had perused the presentment, stated, that regarding the first point mentioned in this presentment, in which the Jury complain of the insufficiency of the Grand Jury list, by which many persons are very often, to the detriment of their business, repeatedly summoned to serve on the Jury, whilst many, whose names might be added to the present Grand Jury list, are omitted; this point the Court will consider, and issue the necessary order on it afterwards.

Regarding the second point, the Judge observed, he feared very much, that he could not hold out much hope to them on that subject, viz., that of reducing the number of the Grand Jurymen from 23, the present complement, to 16, as prayed for in this presentment; for as the existing practice requires 12 Jurymen to form the majority on every indictment submitted to them, it is requisite that the number 23 must be maintained to keep up the nearest minority without paralyzing the votes on a question of returning a true bill or throwing out the indictment.

Regarding the third point, the Judge said, that he certainly would, as prayed for by the Jurymen, submit their presentment to the proper authorities—he approved of their resolve in wishing this presentment to be laid before Government.

After this the Grand Jury were discharged for this session.—Bengal Hurkur, December 12.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knt.)

The Grand Jury returned true bills on the following indictments:

True bill against Ramchand, for returning from transportation from the S. E. coast of Martaban.

True bill against Buddinath; for the murder of Jeetun, his wife, at Shamponkur, in the town of Calcutta.

True bill against Buddenchander Doss and Hurroo, for stealing from the house of Michael Newton, the livery stable-keeper, several articles of silver plate, &c.

True bill against Isshurchander Doss, for forgery of a 700 Rs. document.

True bill against Lall Mohon, Cheenbaugh Podar, Bis-umbhur, Shoochul and Toonoo, for being accessories in a theft committed by Khoodeeram Seat and others, in the shop of Ram Mohon Dutt, in Dhurramhatta Lane, in Burrah Bazar, in the town of Calcutta, and a true bill against Khoodeeram Seat, Guddahur, Nobin Podar, and Cheenbaugh, for being accessories in the above theft.

There were two private indictments for assaults, on both of which the Grand Jury returned true bills; but we could not, owing to the low tone of voice in which the Clerk of the Crown read their names, learn them; we believe, however, that the parties are natives. There are many private indictments brought before the Grand Jury this session, which will no doubt prolong and lengthen their sittings.

The Grand Jury ignored the following bills and threw out the indictments, against Thakoordas for forgery, and against Ashmutollah and Sheikh Paunchoo for robbery.

After the Petty Jury had been impannelled to-day, the Judge, previous to dismissing the remainder of the jurymen whose names were not called, desired the Clerk of the Court to call again those jurymen who had not answered to their names. The Clerk of the Court then called Messrs. John Peter Maillard and Willoughby Fraser Hair, who were summoned to attend the Petty Jury during this session, and on their not answering the call, they were fined 50 rs. each.

Sheikh Bushur-odden was tried for stealing from the house of Sheikh Paunchoo, in Thustuneh Lane, in Calcutta, on the 5th of August last, several gold and silver ornaments and silver coins, the property of Sheikh Paunchoo and Joomnee Raur.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Sheikh Paunchoo, deposed, that on the evening of the 5th of August last, shortly after nightfall, he was informed that his house had been robbed. He was then in the house of his master Rajah Narasinghunder Roy, and on receipt of this intelligence he went home and found that his trunks had been broken open, and several ornaments of his wife Joomnee, abstracted. Here he detailed the ornaments and their weight, but he could not swear to their value. At 3 o'clock p. m., he perceived a person steal out of his house with a bundle in his hand. He followed and challenged him, but obtained no reply, and he then seized the man, who shook him off with a jerk. Deponent then called for help, and Nizamoodien chokseedar came to his assistance, and secured the prisoner and took him and the bundle to the thana, where he recognized his property and stated the prisoner at the bar to be the thief. On cross examination he admitted that Joomnee was only his mistress. The Judge questioned him why Joomnee was not subpoenaed in this case to prove what had occurred in his house during his absence, for she was not of that respectability to preclude her coming to the court, but the prosecutor would give no satisfactory reply to this question.

Mr J. P. Namey, Interpreter to Mr O'Hanlon, the magistrate, produced the property found on the prisoner, which he said he had received from Nizamaddeen peon.

Nizamaddeen deposed, that he found them on the prisoner and the prosecutor identified them to be his property.

In this part of the trial a great discrepancy was manifest between the testimony of Nizamaddeen peon, who swore that when he took the prisoner to the thana and Captain Birch, only the prosecutor and the thannadar accompanied him, whereas Jeetan Sing, the Naib thannadar, who although he at first deposed to the same effect, on cross examination admitted that there were other persons present, on both these occasions, and that Nugeena, the prosecutor, the prisoner's landlady, was also taken into custody at the same time, and after being detained for two days was released by the Magistrate. He said that at first he had forgotten these circumstances.

The Judge closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner, in his defence stated that his hut adjoins Joomnee Raar's. She is the mistress of Sheikh Paunchoo and Nizamaddeen, and his many visitors, being a woman of ill fame. Prisoner remonstrated with her on this subject and wished her to change the position of the door of her hut, as it annoyed his wife and family. This led to a quarrel between him and Joomnee Raar, and she, in conjunction with Sheikh Paunchoo and Nizamaddeen first robbed his house on the 4th August last, and then, afterwards charged him with robbing them. The property in court he said, belonged to his wife, who has absconded since his apprehension. He called Nugeena, his landlady, to prove the truth of his allegations.

Nugeena deposed, that she had heard on the day previous to this robbery, that the prisoner's house had been robbed, and she identified some of the silver jewels to be the property of the prisoner, and that there existed an ill-feeling between the prosecutor and the prisoner.

The Judge closed the prisoner's defence.

The learned Judge then briefly summed up the case, and after detailing the several counts of the indictment, and explaining the law and the evidence as bearing on the case, left it in the hands of the jury.

The jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of guilty on the 6th count, viz., that of stealing the property of Joomnee Raar.

After this verdict had been recorded and explained to the prisoner, the Judge ordered him to be remanded and to be brought up again on the last day of the sessions to receive his sentence.

Throughout the trial this prisoner was so very garrulous and so often interrupted the Judge, that he was more than once obliged to desire him to desist from needlessly interrupting the trial. And once Mr. W. S. Smith, the interpreter, rebuked him harshly for the same conduct. The Judge immediately took notice of this, and censured the interpreter for speaking harshly to the prisoner whilst on trial.

Ram Isahar, was tried for having, on the night of the 5th of October last, broken into the house of Baboo Rajh Koomai Seng, with an intention to commit felony, and with having further on that day, wounded Gunga Beehen Sing, the prosecutor's servant, with an iron crowbar, when he, after the discovery of the theft, attempted to arrest him.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty on both the counts, and after this trial had proceeded to some length, it appearing that there was no evidence to prove a burglarious entry into the prosecutor's house, it having been deposed that the prisoner might have got to the room where he was first detected in the act of breaking a portion of the wall, without being obliged to break open any doors or walls, he was acquitted on the charge of burglary, and tried on the assault charge.

It appeared by the evidence of Gunga Beehen Sing, the durwan of the prosecutor, that at about 11 o'clock, p. m., on the night of the 5th October last, Dookeram, the prosecutor's khandama, came and desired him to assist him in searching for a thief who had been attempting to break into his employer's house. Deponent accompanied him, and after searching the house they, in an empty room to the northward of prosecutor's house, saw the prisoner. No sooner did Dookeram shut the door of that room, than the prisoner struck him with an iron bar on the shoulder, and knocked out the light from his hands. Dookeram immediately receded, and said that he had been struck by a person in the room. Deponent then went into the room, and the prisoner, after giving deponent a shove, ran out and jumped from the terrace in front of this room into a dilapidated house adjoining the prosecutor's house to the eastward. Deponent jumped after him and seized him on the neck with one hand, and held him down with his foot on his breast. The prisoner then wounded deponent under his right rib with the iron crow bar, and deponent put his hand on the hurt, and the prisoner having disengaged himself from the deponent's gripe, wounded him on the knee. Deponent then called out for help to Dookeram, who shortly afterwards came with a light, at likewise some of the neighbors. In the interim, the deponent had seized the prisoner by the hair, and by this time the Police peons having arrived at the spot, deponent made the prisoner over into the custody of the Naib jemadar of Shaukatullah thanah. When the prisoner was questioned by the Naib jemadar respecting the manner in which he got into the prosecutor's house, he acknowledged that he came down a lane to the east of the house through the dilapidated house, and that he might be able to do without committing a burglarious entry. After this the deponent retired, and Dookeram scoured the spot where the prisoner was apprehended, and found the iron crowbar, which is now produced in Court. The deponent was subsequently ordered to attend the native hospital at the Chandney Choke, where he attended 72 days. He went daily in a palankeen, and Dr. O'Brien attended him. When the deponent saw the prisoner, he recollected him to be a person who used occasionally to visit Mohan the prosecutor's khandama.

The deponent identified the prisoner to be the person who had wounded him, and the iron crowbar which Nizamaddeen police peon, produced in court, he said he had received from Dookeram.

Dookeram deposed, to having found the iron crowbar where the prisoner was arrested on the morning of the 6th October last. He further deposed that at 11 o'clock p. m., on the night of the 5th of October, when he went to give his master a chillum, he heard the noise of some person breaking the north wall of the prosecutor's room; and he then after saw some of the plastering fall; he then alarmed his master and by his order called Gunga Beehen Sing to search for the thief. The rest of this witness's evidence corroborated that of Gunga Beehen Sing, except that he added that after the prisoner had been taken into custody he inspected the wall of the room in which the prisoner was first discovered, and there he saw that the prisoner had made a breach one cubit square in the wall, and only one layer of bricks more was required to be taken out to complete the opening.

The prosecutor confirmed the evidence of these two witnesses, as far as he was concerned.

Jeetun, Nriob of the Sushetulah thanna, proved the confession of the prisoner when he was arrested. He said that to induce the prisoner to confess, he had promised to release him. On hearing this the Judge asked deponent how long he had been employed in the police office, and deponent replied 11 years; when the Judge asked him how it came about, that he, after having been so long employed in the police office, did not know that it was forbidden and illegal to endeavour to obtain any confession from any person charged with a crime either by threats or promises, for such confession cannot hereafter be received in evidence during the prisoner's trial. After this the Judge desired Mr. McCann to bring this extraordinary conduct of this deponent to the notice of the Superintendent of Police. He said that he did not wish to impute any criminal motives to the deponent in this affair, but it seems surprising that police officials after such a length of service, should be either so unacquainted or neglectful of their duty. He then intimated to the jury that after what this deponent had stated his evidence regarding the confession of the prisoner cannot be received in this case.

P. O'Brien deposed, that Gunga Beshen Sing was on the 6th October last, brought to the Native hospital in a palkee. He was an out door patient for 12 days. He came every day in a palkee, and deponent attended him. He had a severe contused wound on his right knee, such as the iron cylinder might inflict. If the wound had penetrated the integument the patient must have lost his legs; as it was neither his life nor legs was in danger.

This closed the case for the prosecution. The prisoner in his defence said, that he had gone from the house of his employer Cossanath Chatterjee at 11 o'clock p. m. on the night of the 5th October last, to get his clothes from his friend Mohe Chunder, when he was taken into custody on suspicion of having endeavoured to commit a burglary, and for having wounded Gunga Beshen Sing. He denied all knowledge of this crime and called two witnesses, who both deposed that they neither knew the prisoner nor any thing of this affair. This closed the defence.

The learned Judge then read the indictment and explained the law on it, after which he commented on the evidence, as far as it bore on the case, and detailing both the law and the evidence minutely, left the case in the hands of the Jury.

The Jury, after a short consultation, found the prisoner guilty.

After this verdict had been recorded and explained to the prisoner, he was remanded and ordered to be brought up on the last day of the Session, and the court adjourned at 6 o'clock p. m. till 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow morning.

DECEMBER 12, 1837.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight)

IN THE CASE OF HAJEE RAJUB BULLUS versus MUSSOON AND OTHERS FOR AN ARSA LT.

Mr. Cochrane moved, that the prosecutor be ordered to pay the costs in this case, amounting to 106 rupees, on the grounds that the prosecutor had the case put off last sessions to this, on undertaking to pay the costs of the defendant in this prosecution. Since this the costs have been taxed and an alliciter issued from the Master's Office, and notice served on the prosecutor without avail. The council then prayed that a contempt warrant be now issued against the prosecutor to enforce the payment of these costs, and in support of his motion, he quoted Hullock on costs, page 652, and Chitty's pleadings of 1834, page 726.

The Judge replied, that he did not know how he could take up the matter of a case traversed last sessions in this. All that he could do was to grant an order to prevent the prosecutor proceeding with the case in this sessions on grounds of not having fulfilled the conditions on which the case was traversed; for in England the court of Assizes ceases to be a criminal court immediately the trials pending before it are ended, and the parties can seek their relief in the court of King's Bench for costs. However, he would order the Clerk of the Crown to enquire into this matter, and in the meanwhile, grant an order for the prosecutor to show cause, why the prosecutor should not have a warrant issued against him on this motion, and he would in the interim consult the Chief Justice on this affair, and issue the necessary order.

Mr. Cochrane said, that as there was no court of Banco here, this Court he imagined to be competent to take up this matter and issue the order prayed for on this motion. He then bowed and retired.

Ramchand was indicted for having returned from transportation, after having been sentenced in the 4th Sessions of 1834, on a conviction for robbery to transportation for life to the S. E. coast of Martaban.

This prisoner, after repeated warning from the bench, pleaded guilty, and said that he had been forced, on account of very severe ill treatment, to abscond from the place to which he was transported.

The Judge replied, that if he had been advised by the court and pleaded Not Guilty, his case could be enquired into, but as he has persisted in pleading Guilty, all that he can now do is to present a petition to the court setting forth the hardships he complains of, and craving its mercy; and the court no doubt would give his petition every consideration in their power.

After this the prisoner was remanded to the last day of the Sessions to receive his sentence.

The trial of Isserchunder Cower and Cassinath, for stealing, was further postponed till to-morrow, to enable the prisoners to serve their subpoenas on their witnesses.

The case of Seetanath Dutto, for forgery, was on the same grounds, postponed till Friday the 15th instant.

The trial of Buddenrunder, sircar, and of Sheikh Haundon, for stealing from the house of M. Newson, was postponed till to-morrow, for witnesses.

Koodeeram, Guddadhur, Nobin Podar, Chreeneebaush, Sreenath, Bishumbur, Soobul and Tonnoo, Chreeneebaush Podar, case for stealing, was called on, and they requested a postponement again; but as they could not show sufficient grounds, their request was refused, and the case ordered to be tried.

Ram Gopal Ghose, J. P. Maitland, and Mathew Johnson, who were summonsed in the sessions, not answering to their names, were fined 50 rupees each, — Bengal Hurkaru, December 13,

DECEMBER 12, 1837.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight.)

The trial of Khoodeeram Seel, Guddadhur, Noobeen Podar and Chreeneebaush Byraagee, for stealing from the shop of Rammohun Dutto, a parcel containing several silver coins, and Laullmohun Chreeneebaush Podar

Bishumber, Soobul and Todnoo, for being accessories in this theft, and having the stolen property in their possession, knowing it to be stolen.

The prisoners pleaded "not guilty."

Kallunath deposed, that on the 12th of Novr. last, the prisoners Khoodeeram, Guddadhur, Nobeen Poddar and Cheeneebaush Byraghee, came to his master's shop in Dhurmhatta Street and demanded four quarter rupee peices for one rupee. After they had paid the batta one pie, deponent took out a cloth from a trunk in which were the coins, with an intention to give the four quarter rupees. On perceiving this, Nobin Podar began to ask deponent for the loan of his ink-stand, and whilst he thus distracted the deponent's attention, Khoodeeram snatched up the bag of coins and handed it to Guddadhur, and they all ran away. Deponent succeeded in apprehending Khoodeeram, and made him over to the chokaydar, who took deponent and the prisoner to the thana from thence, at the request of Khoodeeram, who said that if they would accompany him to his house at the Mutchua Bazar, he would return the money. Whilst the naib and three chokedars were proceeding there, deponent met his master Ram Mohon, and when they arrived at an upper-roomed house where Khoodeeram took them, they perceived the other eight prisoners handling the coins. Cheeneebaush Byragh, had the cloth under his thigh, and on Khoodeeram pointing them out the naib took the bag of money from under Cheeneebaush's leg, and deponent recognized it. After this the prisoners were arrested and taken to the police office. Here the deponent detailed the coins contained in the bag, and recognized the bag and coins in the Court. The witness, after much prevarication, admitted, that when he recovered that bag he found 12 annas wanting, and he promised the prisoners that if they would restore this sum to him he would release them.

The judge, after he had admonished this deponent for these prevarications and the impropriety of his conduct on this occasion, informed the jury that any confession the prisoner might have made after this, cannot be received in evidence; but his acts can, for they are facts.

Ram Mohon, this deponent's master, the naib of the thana and the police peon, confirmed that portion of this deponent's evidence which related to them.

This having closed the case for the prosecution, the prisoners each made an ambulatory defence, which, as they had not evidence to support it, went for nothing.

The judge then summed up the proceedings, and detailed the law, and the evidence on the case, and left the case in the hands of the jury.

The jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of Guilty against Khoodeeram, Nobin Podar and Guddadhur, of stealing, and against Cheeneebaush Byraghee, of having stolen goods, the property of the prosecutor, in his possession, and acquitted the rest.

After this verdict had been explained to the prisoners and recorded, the judge ordered the release of those prisoners who were acquitted and remanded the prisoners who were convicted, and directed them to be brought up to receive their sentence on the last day of the sessions.

Besides the property recognized by the prosecutor, there were some pictures which were purchased from the 12 annas deficit to the prosecutor's money, and also some coins found on their persons.

After this the Court adjourned till 11 o'clock p. m. to-morrow morning.

December 13, 1837.

Haundoo was arraigned for stealing from the house of Michael Newson, several silver spoons, the goods and property of the said Michael Newson.

The prisoner pleaded guilty, and informed the Judge, that the police peon who was sent to arrest him from his house, had bound, and extorted, at the village where he resided, 12 Rs. from one of his relatives, before he would release him.

The Judge remarked, that if the prisoner had any observations to make to the Court, in mitigation of his sentence, he could do so when he would be brought up to receive his sentence, in the meantime he is remanded. The Judge continued to say that if any act of extortion had been exercised towards him or any of his relatives, it was very right for him to bring it to the notice of this Court; the matter would be investigated, and if the men are convicted, they will be dealt with according to their deserts. After this the prisoner was remanded to the last day of the sessions.

After the Jury had been empannelled, the names of Thomas Tosh and John Longdon, two persons who were summoned in this Jury, not having been responded too, they, on their being called again, were fined 50 Rs. each.

Mr. Langdon came in some time after, during the trial of Isshur Chunder Koomar and Kossinath Sirdar, and stated to the Judge, that this is the first time that he had ever been absent in his attendance at the Jury, and that he had already served one day during the present sessions, and he had been prevented by a press of business from attending at the prescribed time to-day.

On reference, the Clerk of the Crown reported, that Mr. Langdon had served on the Petit Jury last Monday, but that he had not answered to his name on Saturday last, yet he had not been fined on that occasion.

The Judge said that in consideration of his having served last Monday, he remitted his fine this time, but cautioned him to be more punctual in his future attendance, as he could not on another similar occasion expect his fine to be remitted.—Hurkara, Dec. 14.

DECEMBER 13, 1837.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knt.)

Isshurchunder Koomar and Kossinath Sirdar, were indicted for stealing on the night of the 2d November 1837, from the shop of Chundychurn, gunny bag merchant, at Clive Street, in the Town of Calcutta, 50 bundles containing 450 gunny-bags, valued at 35 rupees.

The prisoners pleaded "not guilty."

Chundychurn deposed, that on the night of the 2d November last, he locked the door of his shop and went to his house about one mile distant: when he returned to his shop next morning, he found that one of the valves of his shop door had been enlarged, and 450 gunny-bags stolen therefrom, and the padlocks of the doors were missing. Subsequently, on receipt of some information from the chowkeedar of the division, he proceeded to the Police office, and from thence, with constable Meines, to the shop of the first prisoner, which he searched and found 280 gunny bags which had been stolen from his shop and the padlocks of his shop door. Isshurchunder was likewise a gunny-bag merchant and had small gunny-bags to what were stolen from his shop in his shop, but prosecutor can distinguish his bags from prisoner's bags by a private mark; and, further, the keys of the padlocks of the prosecutor's shop were tried before the Magistrate, and fitted the locks found in the prisoner's shop. After this the prisoner was taken into custody.

When the bags were produced by Mr. McCann and the locks by a Police peon, and identified by the prosecutor to be his property. The prosecutor on being asked questioned, gave the prisoner Ishurchunder a good character.

Maherollah, chokeedar, who was with Jooke, deposed, that on the night of the 24 Nov. last, at 1 o'clock a. m., he perceived the prisoners carrying away some gunnee bags from the shop of the prosecutor towards Ishurchunder's shop in the same street. Deponent challenged them, and not receiving any answer, he seized Kassinath Sirdar, and Jooke laid hold of Ishurchunder Koomar, who slipped from his grasp and threw the gunnee-bags into his shop and got in. Jooke, when he perceived this, shut the door on him and kept watch there. Maherolla then proceeded with the prisoner Kassinath to the thanah and returned with the Naib thanadar to Ishurchunder's shop, opened the door and arrested Ishurchunder. The keys found in the possession of the prisoner, likewise fitted the locks on the prosecutor's door.

Here the prisoners wished to cross examine Mr. McCann, and as there was some delay in his appearing, the Judge censured him for leaving the Court before the prisoners had had an opportunity of cross examining him. He likewise censured Mr. Smith, the Interpreter, about the manner in which he put the questions given by the prisoner to the witness.

Meeroo, the constable, and the naib thanadar, were then examined, and confirmed the depositions of the former witnesses regarding them.

The prosecutor said, that his gunnee bags had no particular mark, but they differed widely from the prisoners' gunnee-bags. This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner Kassinath, in his defence, denied all knowledge of the crime laid to his charge, and the prisoner Ishurchunder said, that the gunnee-bags were his property, and he is a gunnee bag merchant. The chokeedar, during the Doorgah Poojah holiday, asked him for a doerur, and when the bonus was denied to him, vowed to be revenged on the prisoner on the first favourable opportunity. He called some witnesses to prove that these gunnee-bags had been purchased by him at the bazar; but they could only prove that he had been dealing in gunnee-bags; but whether he had these gunnee-bags in his shop before the robbery was committed or not they could not say.

Khooteet Parbut Baboo, who was subpoenaed in behalf of the prisoner, not answering when he was called, his recognizances were forfeited. This closed the case for the defence, and the prisoner, Ishurchunder, showed the private marks he had on these gunnee-bags, viz. 3 long stripes the whole length of them.

The learned Judge then summed up the case, read the indictment, and detailed the evidence in the case as far as it talked with or deviated from the indictment, and commented learnedly on it, marking the distinction between grand and simple larceny, and left the case in the hands of the jury.

The jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of not guilty.

This verdict had been recorded, the prisoners were ordered to be released, and the court adjourned till next day, tomorrow morning.

During this trial, one of the prisoners asked Mr. [unclear] a question regarding the deposition of Maherollah at the Police office, whether that deponent had deposed to the Magistrate that he had seen the prisoners carrying these gunnee-bags from the prosecutor's shop; but as the examinations were taken by Mr. O'Hanlon, Mr. McCann could not answer that query; and the Judge, after having perused those depositions, remarked to the jury that he regretted that this question had not been put to the witnesses at the Police office; in fact he was sorry to find that the whole of the depositions in this commitment are very brief, much more so than what was requisite for the preparatory evidence in this commitment.—Hutkura, December 15.

December 14, 1837.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight.)

After the Petit Jury had been impanelled, the name of Michael Newson livery stable keeper, who had been summoned on the Petit Jury for this session, was called, and he, not answering, was fined 50 rupees.

Mr. Thomas Tosh, builder, who had been fined for non-attendance as jurymen yesterday, swore to an affidavit in Court to-day.

Buddenchunder Sircar, was charged with biggig, on Friday, the 1st December, 1837, robbed from the person of Mohonchaund Sircar, a servant of Hydeaut Hossain, Zemindar of Soorah, 2 Union Bank notes, Nos. 407 and 55 of Co.'s Rs-100 each, while the Sircar was on his way to the Union Bank, the notes being the property of the said Hydeaut Hossain prosecutor.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Hydeaut Hossain deposed, that he had sent the 2 Union Bank notes, Nos. 407 and 55 of 100 Co.'s Rs each by the hands of his servant Mohonchunder Sing, to be cashed at the Bank. Subsequently he heard that they had been stolen from the sircar on the road; he had therefore stopped payment at the Bank. Afterwards, on the 1st of December 1837, he went, in consequence of information received, to the Police office, where he saw the prisoner in custody and one of the stolen notes, No. 407, at the Police Office. In this stage of the proceedings Mr. J. J. McCann produced the note, which he swore had been put into his hand by Bhurum-jut Sing, a peon of the Union Bank, on the 1st December inst., and the prosecutor identified the note to be one of those which he had entrusted to Mohonchaund to get changed.

Mohonchaund deposed, that he, on the day on which this transaction is stated to have occurred, received 2 notes from his master to take to the Union Bank to get cashed. After his arrival at the Bank he met the prisoner who asked deponent what he required, and on being informed that he had come to get some notes cashed, the prisoner replied that deponent would have a long time to wait for the money, unless he would avail himself of his assistance and entrust the notes to him, for the cashier was his relative and he could get the money for him soon. Deponent refused to entrust the notes to a stranger, but the prisoner snatched away the memorandum which the deponent had received at the Bank, and the notes, and desiring deponent to wait till he brought the money. He disappeared in the crowd. After deponent missed the prisoner he gave information of his loss to the Baboo at the Bank and to his master.

Roopchand Dart, a money-changer of the Barrah Bazar, deposed, that on the 1st December last, the prisoner came to his shop and after giving the security of Tarachund Datto, an umbrella merchant at the Barrah Bazar, discounted for cash the 2 notes said to be stolen from the prosecutor in this case. Tarachund Datto, the next day after the Note No. 407, had been stopped at the Bank, produced the prisoner, and deponent and he took him to the Police office and made him over to the officials.

A phomasta of this witness confirmed this evidence, and swore that Tarrakund Datto has since absconded, and another proved that he took the note, No. 407, to the Union Bank to be discounted, when it was stopped on the grounds that it was stolen property; and deponent and the note were under the custody of a peon of the Bank forwarded to the Police office.

Shamaachurn Chuckerbuty proved, that on the 1st Dec., early in the day, the first witness in this case had brought the 2 notes which are stated to be subsequently stolen to be cashed, and deponent had, after making the usual enquiry, given him a memorandum for the cash.

Lurchuader, another sircar of the Bank, proved the Bank note to be a genuine one.

Another sircar proved that one of the cashiers of the Union Bank is absent on leave, and the other is busy paying cash at the bank and cannot come.

P. O'Hanlon, the magistrate, proved the confession which the prisoner made to him at the time he committed him. To a question of the Judge, deponent replied, that he had no distinct recollection whether he cautioned the prisoner before he made this confession; but it is his habit usually to do so; certainly there were no threats used nor promises held out to him to enforce them from him. Mr. Namey interpreted the confessions to deponent. Mr. Namey confirmed the same.

Cross examined by the prisoner.—Prisoner said that if he were permitted to go to search for the man who gave him this note, he could point him out, and deponent referred him to Mr. McCann. Here the prisoner observed that, after he had quitted the Police office, he wished to go with the Police peons to point out the person from whom he had received these notes; but the peons said that it was now near 5 o'clock and they could not go, and thrust him into the Town Guard. Prisoner brought this circumstance subsequently to the notice of Mr. McCann.

Here the prisoner's confessions were read, in which he said, that he had been a servant of Baboo Radha Kissen Biswas, who owe him 36 rupees for wages. He met him at Jackson's Ghaut street, and demanded payment of these wages: when the Baboo gave him the note in question and desired him to get it changed and pay himself the 36 rupees and give him the balance. He had the note changed on security at the police's in the Burrah Bazaar, and after paying himself 36 rupees and the balance of the change to Radha Kissen Biswas, who resembles prisoner in age, height, color and features, therefore he imagines that Rad in Kissen Biswas cheated Mohonohand sircar, and he has mistaken the prisoner for that person. Radha Kissen Biswas is a shop braman, and lived at Shamooker. This was the substance of the prisoner's defence to-day.

He called two witnesses, who attempted to substantiate his statements in a vague manner.

Mohonohand sircar, was recalled, and on cross examination by the prisoner he admitted, that after the prisoner had taken the notes from him and desired him to wait and he would bring the money, he acquiesced to wait, and went out to eat, and on his return he missed the prisoner and gave the notice.

This having closed the case, the learned Judge summed up the evidence, read the indictment, and laid down the law, respecting the fraudulent obtaining of the notes. This would make it a misdemeanor if prisoner took the notes at first to get the money, and the purpose of appropriating them to himself afterwards entered his mind; but if he took them with an intention from the first to steal them, then the theft is constituted. This was formerly a very doubtful point in law, but in late decisions the law had decided that if any person prevails on another to part with any property on a false pretence, and he appropriates it to himself, he is still guilty of the theft; for though the owner actually assigns the custody of the goods yet the law holds him still in possession of them, so that the purport of the law might not be defeated. However, on that legal point he would consult the Chief Justice, if the verdict should be against the prisoner; it is for them only to determine on their verdict by the evidence and facts of the case.

The jury after a short consultation, found the prisoner guilty.

The Judge, after the sentence had been recorded and explained to the prisoner, remanded him and ordered him to be brought up on the last day of the session to receive his sentence.

Both the prosecutor and the podar who changed the note No. 407 for Co.'s No. 100 claimed it. The Judge remarked that the podar had bought the note from a thief, and he could have no property in it, as the thief had none; and by the Act of Parliament the notes must both be given to the prosecutor. If the podar was not satisfied with this, and the prosecutor would consent to this arrangement, the podar could lay a claim before both the Judges of this Court, and be guided by their decision; otherwise he could sue the zemindar and let the law decide the point of proprietary. He certainly has an action to recover against the prisoner's security, the umbrella merchant. After this the matter was left to the consideration of the Judges.

The Court then adjourned till 11 o'clock A. M. to-morrow morning.

DECEMBER 14, 1837.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knt., Judge.)

After the Petit Jury had been impannelled, the names of J. I. Sim and J. Langdon, who had been summoned on the Jury and did not answer, were called again and on their not answering they were fined 50 Rupees each.

Ram Gopal Ghose, who had been fined on a former occasion, having brought a certificate from Dr. Jackson to shew that he could not have attended on that day, his fine was remitted. He served on the jury body, although the Judge said that if he felt indisposed he could be excused.

Ram Gopal Ghose objected to be sworn in the present mode, and wished to be sworn by a form which he held in his hand, and quoted the case of Russac Krishna Mullick in the year 1834, who was sworn in a similar form during one of the Sessions of that year. The form was submitted to the Judge, who approved of it, and said that by the act he was entitled to swear on any form which he may think most binding on his conscience.—Hurkaru, December 16.

DECEMBER 15th, 1837.

Case of Murder.

Boddinath was tried for having, on the 10th of Sept. 1837, at Shamookeria, murdered Jeetan, his wife.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Khoojunce deposed, that she was a widow and resided at Maniktulla, Raja's Bagan; she knew Jeetan who lived to the northward of her house, and was the wife of the prisoner at the bar. On Saturday the 10th of Sept. last, deponent heard a noise in prisoner's house at night; she went there in consequence, and when she arrived there she saw a crowd of his dowry, and the prisoner was beating his wife, who was crying out "he is murdering me." They were both drunk at the time. After a short stay deponent returned home; when she returned she saw the prisoner sitting in her bed, and Jeetan took up her child and began to give suck. Jeetan died on that night.

The Judge here warned this witness and told her to recollect that she was on oath and she was not to state anything but the truth, and that she had been already examined on oath before the Coroner, and if the two statements were contradictory they both cannot be the truth and one of them must be false; and she is liable to be punished for perjury if she deposes false.

After this warning the prisoner deposed that Hoddinath is a shoemaker; whilst she was at their house she saw Jeetun strike the prisoner 3 blows with a stick and abuse him grossly. Boddinath on being struck, took up a sharp instrument used in cutting leather, and stabbed her with it; deponent attempted to prevent the blow, but the prisoner shoved her aside and struck the deceased. Seeing her interference to be vain, deponent left the parties and ran home. Deponent cannot say on what terms the prisoner and deceased lived previous to this quarrel.

During the translation of this deponent's evidence, regarding the abusive terms the deceased had used towards the prisoner, some of them being of a very indecent nature, and Mr. Smith, the interpreter, attempting to explain their meaning to the court by softening the expressions, the Judge said that Mr. Smith must not do so—the trial being of life and death to a man, Mr. Smith must not stand on matters of delicacy and punctiliousness in a Court of Justice, which was not a Court of Etiquette.

The Judge, on dismissing the deponent, reprimanded her sharply. He said the former part of her evidence varied vastly from the evidence she had given since being warned: she then attempted to conceal matters which she has now revealed; this was very improper, and showed a wish to defeat the end of justice; and had it not been that she was an aged and ignorant woman, he would have committed her to jail for pervarications in her evidence in this trial.

Kooranee deposed, that she was a neighbour of Buddinath and the deceased. She saw the prisoner on the 16th Sept. last beating the deceased for having abused him, and she then went and called the deceased's parent, and on their arrival at the prisoner's house, the prisoner and his mother-in-law and father-in-law interfering, struck them with a stick. The deceased was then dying insensible on the ground, and the prisoner beating her with his clenched fists. Deponent then went home. She subsequently saw the bloody corpse of the deceased lying in her hut; but previous to that the prisoner had been arrested. This deponent said, that at the time this transaction occurred, neither the prisoner nor the deceased were intoxicated.

In this state of the proceeding the Jury questioned the deponent as to whether she had not in the former part of her evidence said, that the prisoner was drunk at the time, and on her denying it, the Judge remarked, that if the Jury wished to meet this point to ascertain the credibility of this witness, by his notes, it does not appear that she had ever stated that the prisoner was drunk at the time; but if they wish to stir this enquiry on a legal point, he begged to inform them that drunkenness was no excuse for crime, particularly for one of such a nature.

Juggernath deposed, that he is the father of the deceased. In consequence of information, which he received from Kooranee, he went to the prisoner's house; he there saw him beating his wife. He desired him to desist; but the prisoner, when he saw him, took up a stick and beat him with it on the head, which cracked his skull and felled him to the ground. He then with another blow broke the deponent's arm, and he was three months in the hospital before he could use it again. Deponent's wife, attempted to interfere, but the prisoner struck her also with the stick and broke her head, and she likewise fell senseless on the floor. At this time the deceased was lying senseless on the floor on her back. After this the prisoner went to the deceased, and put his foot on her body and ripped up her belly with an instrument used in cutting wood; her entrails immediately protruded, and she gave a convulsive start, flung out her arms, gasped, threw out her tongue, and expired instantly. Deponent did not see her abuse nor strike the prisoner at the time. The prisoner was not drunk at the time he did this. Shortly after this the Police peons came and arrested the prisoner. The prisoner and the deceased had some quarrels before—they did not live on amicable terms.

Nondoll deposed, that on the 16th of September, the prisoner and his wife, made their market and having dined, the prisoner took up his work and the deceased went out. The prisoner not perceiving her, called her, and she went to him immediately. The prisoner, when he saw her, seized and began to beat her, and Kooranee went to give information to Jeetun's parents of this quarrel. The rest of this witness's evidence was but confirmatory to the evidence given by the former witness.

Soaker Mohammed, Police peon, deposed, that he saw the prisoner stab his wife with a sharp instrument under her right breast. Deponent desired him to desist, and the prisoner on hearing deponent's voice ran with the instrument towards him, in a threatening manner; but on his remonstrating and threatening him, he dropped the instrument. Deponent then seized and bound him, and took him and the instrument to the thanna. When the prisoner inflicted this wound deceased was dead from the effects of the former maltreatment. The deponent produced the instrument with which the prisoner had killed the deceased.

Nujubollah, thannadar of Shampookaria, deposed, that he knew Jeetun, the prisoner's wife; she had been murdered on the 16th September last, and he pointed out her body to Dr. Bain for examination, who examined it in his presence.

Dr. R. H. Bain, Police surgeon, deposed, that he examined the body of Jeetun on Monday the 17th September, at Shampookaria. He said there were 16 wounds on the body, one over the left eyebrow, one on the left side of the neck, nine over the situation of the liver and the stomach, one on the left forearm, just below the elbow, one on the right forearm, another on the right elbow, two on the back between the shoulders close to the neck. There was a large quantity of coagulated blood on the floor of the room, where the corpse was lying. The left jugular vein had been divided, and the bones cut through. Deponent opened the chest and abdomen, the eighth and ninth ribs were divided, the liver was wounded in eight places, four of the wounds passing through the liver; the lower part of the right lung was wounded, to the extent of one inch and half, the stomach was pierced in eight places, a large quantity of the contents of the stomach was found in the abdomen, and had got out at the external wounds. Most of the wounds were about one and half inch in length, others were from three and a half to four inches. It is possible that by the repetition of plunges the same instrument which caused the smallest wounds might have inflicted the larger; they must have been inflicted by a sharp edged instrument. An instrument like the chisel produced might cause such wounds. The deceased, in deponent's opinion, died from the effects of these wounds. In the first place the dividing of the jugular vein would cause an hæmorrhage, and the wounds on the stomach, the liver, and the left side of the neck were mortal, and they would cause the instant death, and were the cause of the deceased's death.

Soonah, a witness who was examined by the Coroner, and the grand jury, was put into the box, and the prisoner was asked whether he wished to examine him.

during the case for the prosecution complete without him. The prisoner declined examining him. In the manner Noother, another witness, was called, and declined by the prisoner.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner in his defence said, that he was quite drunk at the time when this transaction is said to have taken place, and was sleeping on his bed, and so was his wife. When he woke he found her murdered; who killed her he did not know but his neighbors taxed him with it. Why should he have killed her, she was a good, upright woman, and the mother of five children by him, and he was always fond of her. He called two witnesses, but none of them knew any thing regarding the transaction which was the basis of this investigation.

This having closed the defence, the learned Judge addressed the jury, and said, that if they deemed it requisite he would detail the evidence to them, but if they thought the case clear without it, he would not do so.

The jury said, that they had most of them taken notes of the evidence already.

The learned Judge then briefly summed up the facts proved by the evidence, and after explaining the law and informing them that the life of the prisoner depended on their verdict, left the case to their decision.

The jury retired, and when they left the jury box, Mr. B. Preston, the Crier to the Court, swore the constables who had charge of the jury. On this the Judge remarked that the constable ought to have been sworn before the jury left the box.

The jury, after a short retirement, brought in a verdict of guilty.

This verdict was then recorded and explained to the prisoner.

The Judge informed the prisoner, that after a very careful investigation of his case, the jury have found him guilty of murder, and it is his most painful duty now to pronounce on him the most awful sentence of death, and he knows not what he can say to him which may be of service to him now; but if he has any feeling in him he must be tortured by remorse for his atrocious crime, a crime which all religions and mankind abhor. The Judge then pronounced the sentence, that the prisoner be taken to the jail and thence to the place of execution on Monday, and there hanged.

The prisoner after this sentence was passed, asked for permission to see his daughter and begged 5 rupees to leave her, and said that as he had not drunk any liquor for these three days, he begged that at the time of his execution a bottle of liquor might be allowed to him.

The Judge replied, that he could see his daughter at any time he wished, and if he made an application for the 5 Rs. it would be given to her; but the liquor he should not get. After this the prisoner was removed.

The Court adjourned till 11 o'clock a. m., to-morrow morning.

December 18, 1837.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight.)

After the Petit Jury had been impanelled the name of John Isaac Sin, one of the Petit Jurors, summoned to attend on the Jury during the present Session, was again called, and as he did not answer, the Judge fined him 50 rupees.

Buddinath was indicted with having on the 31st August, 1837, at Baman Butee, in the town of Calcutta, inflicted several mortal wounds on the back and the head of a person named Kunneah, from the effects of which wounds he died at the Native Hospital on the following day.

This prisoner, although repeatedly admonished by the Judge either to plead guilty to this indictment, persisted in saying that he was quite drunk and senseless at the time when this occurrence is stated to have occurred, and he cannot speak with any degree of certainty as to what he might have done whilst in that state; therefore he declined either to plead guilty or not guilty, as he would not utter a falsehood in Court.

After repeated and vain remonstrances to induce him to plead either guilty or not guilty, the Judge informed the prisoner that the act of Parliament and provided for the non-postponement of the trial of persons, who might persist in the line of conduct adopted by this prisoner which was to record the plea of not guilty and put the prisoner on his trial.

The trial of Buddenath for the murder of Kunneah at Baman Butee, on the 31st August, 1837.

Soorjee, widow, deposed, that she has been the mistress of the prisoner for twenty-five years. She knew Kunneah, he was her nephew, and he is dead. He lived at Baman Butee in the same house with the prisoner and the deponent. On Thursday, the 31st August, at about 10 o'clock a. m., Kunneah desired deponent to cup him on his feet which were swelled. Prisoner was at the time milking his cow. Deponent pleaded indisposition and referred him to his mother to bleed him. Kunneah then applied the cups and desired her to incise the parts with his razor, which she did, and bled him. After this Kunneah went to a grain merchant and bought some doll and rice and desired his female to cook them for him, and asked deponent for some vegetables, which as she had none she could not give him. Kunneah then abused her. He then went repeatedly to a spirit shop behind the prisoner's house to drink, and came back and continued abusing her. This was at about midday. This is not the first time that he had abused her for not giving him victuals; he was an habitual drunkard. He then went out after taking his meals, but returned at 5 o'clock p. m., when he renewed his abusive language and struck deponent in the face. Deponent then entreated him to go away till his passion subsided, and he went towards the door, and whilst deponent went to shut the door on him, he lifted her up and threw her with such violence on the ground that she became senseless. When she recovered, she discovered that Kunneah had been wounded. This induced her to give the alarm, and the chokeydars came. Deponent did not see what had occurred between the time that Kunneah had thrown her down and gone out, and the time that she recovered herself; and after a severe admonition from the Judge she still persisted in this evidence, and said that on former occasions she had given the same evidence. The prisoner Mircha, the mistress of Kunneah, was standing by him at the time. Kunneah was wounded on the arm, the forehead, and the belly, and his equills were protruding. There was a knife lying covered with blood on the spot at the time.

In this part of the investigation the Judge remarked to Mr. Smith, the interpreter to the court, that he did not give the replies of the witnesses to him fully. Mr. Smith replied that he did, but perhaps from the deponent not wishing to speak whilst he was interpreting her answer, he might, by the confusion caused thereby, not have been able to hear her distinctly. To this reply the Judge said, then "I wish you would speak so that I may hear your replies clearly." He likewise warned the witness to be very careful in her depositions, for she was not the only person who witnessed the transaction she was relating. Dependent then replied that there was grass on the spot where these wounds were inflicted. After the chokevidar came, Kunneah in his wounded state closed with Buddenath, and whilst they were struggling the mother and father of Kunneah came to the spot, and had the prisoner apprehended. Here this deponent, whilst identifying the knife, turned round weeping and addressed pathetically the prisoner "Buddenath, what have you done?" On hearing her the prisoner replied in a sharp, angry tone, and abusing her desired her to cease her communication to the Judge and not address him, adding that she was perjuring herself, for the sake of her paramour.

The Judge, after reprimanding the deponent for her irregular conduct, in interrupting the proceedings and desiring her not to do so again, informed the prisoner that he was only interrupting the trial, and behaving in a very disrespectful manner towards the court, in thus angrily abusing this witness, and this conduct of his could not be in any way beneficial to him.

The prisoner replied that he had no wish to interrupt the proceedings, or to behave disrespectfully towards the court, in any way, all that he required was that none of the witnesses may speak to him during the trial.

Rohem-oolah, chokevidar, deposed, that he apprehended the prisoner and that at the time when he did so the prisoner was lying over the deceased with a knife grasped in his hand and the blade in the body of the deceased, who was lying senseless under him. He sent the prisoner to the thanna and the deceased to the hospital. Dependent likewise identified the knife.

Jumoor Jooddeen, nurb of the Bamun Bastes thanna, deposed, that he pointed out the dead body of Kunneah on the 1st September 1837, to Dr. R. H. Bain, the Police Surgeon, who examined the corpse in his presence on that day.

Cross examined. Buddenath, previous to striking the deceased, had desired him to quit his house. Kunneah refused to quit it on that day because it was a Thursday, and Buddenath then threatened to beat him. Kunneah replied, that if Buddenath struck him he would retaliate. This angry altercation ended in a mutual assault which led to the prisoner wounding the deceased.

In this stage of the proceedings, the Judge again warned this witness to be very careful in her evidence, and to speak the truth strictly.

Dependent added, that there was no struggling inside the hut before these wounds were inflicted, the fatal occurrence transpired at 5 o'clock P. M., outside the prisoner's grounds near dusk—both parties were drunk at the time.

Mr. J. J. McCann, produced the knife and witness identified it to be the prisoner's property.

Muttichas, the widow of Kunneah, deposed, that on the evening of the 31st August, in consequence of Kunneah refusing to bleed Kunneah, a quarrel ensued between them. Buddenath desired Kunneah in consequence thereof to quit his house, and Kunneah said, that he would do so the next day. Buddenath then threatened to beat and turn him out, and Kunneah replied, that if he did so, he would retaliate. Buddenath, who was then cutting straw, rose and brought a knife, and whilst Kunneah was sitting down, the prisoner came suddenly upon him and wounded him with it on the forehead. Kunneah on being struck rose and closed with the prisoner who kept wounding him with the knife first in the arm then in the belly, and then in the breast under the ribs, until the deceased fell, with the prisoner on him with the knife in his grasp thrust into the deceased's belly. Dependent attempted to draw the knife out and cut her finger in the attempt. She then gave the alarm and Ruheem and another chokevidar came to the spot, seized the prisoner and snatched the knife out of his hand and dispatched Kunneah to the Hospital, where dependent accompanied him. She was with the deceased all night, he died the next morning. At the time the prisoner wounded Kunneah, he was drunk, but Kunneah never drank liquor in his life. Soorgee was present when the prisoner struck the deceased, she was quite sensible and standing close by at the time. Here the witness pointed to Mr. Voulintzky as the person who had attended on the deceased and examined his body, she likewise identified the knife with which the prisoner had struck the deceased to be the one now produced in the Court.

In this stage of the examination, the Judge found fault with the interpretation of a passage in which the deponent said, that when the prisoner struck Kunneah, he closed with him, and whilst they were struggling, the prisoner kept wounding the deceased till he fell senseless on the ground. Mr. Smith, the interpreter, replied that the idiom of the Hindoostany language differs very much from the idiom of the English language, and he is therefore obliged to give the replies of the witnesses in a manner conformable to the expression used in conveying the same meaning in the English language, if he were to give them verbatim, they would in most cases be unintelligible. The Judge observed rather sharply, that it is not the interpreter's duty to criticise and adapt the idiom of one language to another as it may seem conformable to him, but to give them verbatim. Never mind, if the sense of the passage may be distorted in English, it is much better to get the verbatim words of the witnesses, to enable the Judge and the Jury to judge their purport, and it is not for him to put his construction on them, and he requested him to abide by these directions of the Court to him in his future interpretations, nor would he enter this interpretation until Mr. Blacquiere informed the Judge that it was correctly given.

R. W. Bain, Esq., the Police Surgeon, deposed, that he examined the body of Kunneah at the Native Hospital at Dhurrumtollah, on the 1st September last, after it had been pointed out to him by last witness. There were four wounds on the body, one on the left eye-brow, one on the right arm, a large superficial wound measuring seven inches over the situation of the stomach, and one wound on the left side of the chest, which had penetrated the chest and abdomen and measured three and a half inches. Dependent opened the chest and the abdomen, and found that the 8th rib was divided and also a part of the 9th rib. The diaphragm was wounded to the extent of four and a half inches, the stomach and the transverse arch of the colon, lay on the cavity of the chest pressing on the left lung. The descending portion of the colon was also wounded and a large quantity of the contents of the bowels found in the chest. The wound on the left side was a mortal wound and the cause of the deceased's death. In his opinion a knife like the one produced in court might inflict such wound.

P. O'Brien, an Assistant in the Native Hospital at the Dhurrumtollah, deposed, that the prisoner arrived at the Native Hospital with the wounds above described on the evening of the 31st August last, and that he died perfectly sensible the next day; he was all the time, whilst dependent attended on him, aware of her approaching end. He made no particular communication to dependent.

This having closed the case for the prosecution, the prisoner declined either to examine the witnesses or to make any defence at all, saying that he was quite drunk at the time when these transactions are alleged to have occurred, therefore he could not say whether he committed the crime imputed to him or not, and thus left his case in to the hands of the Judge and the Jury.

The learned judge, after having read the indictment, and detailed the evidence, pointed out the parts in it either in favor of the prisoner or against him, and after informing the jury that drunkenness was no excuse for crime, told them that if they thought during this altercation between the prisoner and the deceased, which has been sworn to to-day, that the deceased had first struck the prisoner who at the time held the knife in his hand, and that he instantly at the excitement of the movement on being struck stabbed him, the crime would then be manslaughter; and if they came to that conviction they could not legally give a verdict of manslaughter on an indictment of murder, but if they believed that on mere mutual abuse or altercation the prisoner, as stated by Meerutches, got the knife out and stabbed the deceased, then abuse is not a palliation recognized by him to reduce the crime to manslaughter and they cannot but pronounce a verdict of murder against the prisoner, although his life is the penalty of such a crime. That the prisoner killed the deceased there is not the slightest doubt; it is for the jury to determine on the nature of his crime. After this the Judge left the case in the hands of the jury, who after a retirement of about one hour returned a verdict of guilty of murder. The verdict was then recorded and explained to the prisoner.

The learned Judge informed the Jury, that they had discharged a very painful duty, but they had discharged it in a manner that coincided with his view of the case. The prisoner here claimed that all his debts due to him and his goods and chattels in the custody of the thinnadar, be delivered to him. The Judge said, that after this conviction all his goods and chattels became forfeit to the King. The prisoner wished to know now in that case his wife and four children were to support themselves.

The Judge said, that it remained only for him to pronounce the awful sentence of the law, with regard to the laws of this, and the Judge believed, of all countries. The man's goods become forfeit to the Queen, but if the woman who has lived with him, petition the Queen on this subject, no doubt the Queen's grace will be extended to her, and he doubted not, and recommended to Mr. King to instruct her to make this application, for it is a commendable act of charity. The Judge wished that he had expressed one-tenth part of the commiseration towards the man he murdered as towards his concubine, if he had done so he would not have been brought to this fatal crisis. It is now requisite to make his death an example to others, to control the violent ebullitions of passion to which he has given way in a fit of intoxication, and that all the poor of this land may know that the strong arm of the law can, and will always punish such crimes with the severity they deserved. The Judge added, he supposed that what he could say to him now could have but little effect on him, and that he would employ the little interval allotted to him to the repentance of his crime. The Judge then sentenced the prisoner in the usual form to be executed on Monday morning, the 18th instant, between the hours of 6 and 9 o'clock a. m.—Hurkara, Dec. 16.

DECEMBER 18, 1837.

Shoo Shurram, was indicted for having in his possession 10 gold armlets, the property of Radah Beesbee, who had been murdered at Churkhar Dargah, knowing the same to be stolen property.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty. And as on the former trial he again to-day stated, that Sumbhoo Chunder Bongerjee was the person who had committed the murder of Radah Beesbee, and afterwards gave him these armlets, and desired him and others to go for the present out of Calcutta, until this matter was hushed up, and he did at that time give to each of them some money and a portion of the deceased's property to pay their expenses, during the period they would keep themselves aloof, and during the cross examination of Sumbhoo Chunder Bongerjee, he examined him very minutely on these transactions, giving a very clear and correct account of it, but Sumbhoo Chunder Bongerjee denied the whole of the prisoner's account to be correct; and, as it rested only on his own ipse dixit and was unsupported by evidence, it could not be legally believed. We have refrained from giving the minute particulars of this case, at the publication of this prisoner's former trial, for the murder of Radah Beesbee, for which he was tried during the last session and acquitted, which trial was published in the Benjal Hurkara and Chronicle, during the month of August last, containing all the details, which transpired during this trial, and it would be useless to re-publish them now. He called a witness to depose to an account which that witness had heard of this murder from Beesbee Bannoo, the mistress at that time of Gour Bahad, the brother of Biboo Sumbhoo Chunder Bongerjee; but the Judge said, that he could not go into hearsay evidence, for if the prisoner required that statement to be made in this trial, he should have subpoenaed Beesbee Bannoo. After the trial and the defence of the prisoner was concluded, the presiding Judge summed the proceedings in this case, explained the indictment, and detailed the evidence, commenting on it and laying down the law, and thus left the case in the hands of the jury, who, after a consultation, returned a verdict of guilty of having received stolen property knowing it to be stolen.

After this verdict had been recorded and explained to the prisoner,

The Judge said to him that the finding was very correct, and it was very plain that he knew the whole of this transaction, and although a merciful jury had acquitted him on his former trial of the capital offence, yet it is very plain that he did know that a murder had been committed and concealed it, therefore he in consideration of this passed on him the heaviest sentence the law allowed in his case. The prisoner was then sentenced to 7 years' transportation to the S. E. Coast of Martaban.—Hurkara, December 19.

Dec. 18, 1837.

Seetanath Datto, was indicted with having uttered a forged promissory note on the 11th of November, 1837, purporting it to be from Kaulloo Biboo to Nikaantho Sircar, with intent to defraud Nikaantho Sircar and the proprietors of the Bank of Bengal, for Company's rupees 1,300.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty. Madutcheunder Seal, an assistant in the Bank of Bengal, after looking at a promissory note, which Mr. H. Holroyd produced in Court, said, that he had received it from Mr. C. K. Robison, the committing magistrate in this case. Dependent deposed that he had seen this note before, and he recognized it by a mark which he put upon it when the prisoner brought it to be discounted. Dependent did so because he suspected the signature of Nikaantho Sircar to be a forgery, for it did not in his opinion correspond with the signature of Nikaantho Sircar, as witnessed before by this Dependent. The prisoner was a stranger to dependent, and came on the 11th November, 1837, at 11 o'clock a. m., and represented himself to be the Sircar of Nikaantho Baboo. Dependent

The prisoner was called again at 2 o'clock a. m. In the meantime the deponent sent a sircar to Nilkantho Sircar's house, to inform him of this transaction. A sircar then came from Nilkantho Sircar's house, who on production of the promissory note, declared, in the presence of Mr. Uday, the Secretary to the Bank, that the signature was a forgery. Mr. Uday, after this information, desired deponent to send the prisoner to him whenever he may call again. The prisoner called again shortly after 3 o'clock p. m. Deponent took him to Mr. Uday, who sent him in custody of two peons with a letter to the Police Office, where he was committed for trial. Kaulloo Baboo is a stranger to deponent.

Nilkantho Sircar, deposed, that he is a ship Banian; the prisoner at the bar is a total stranger to him, and he never sent by this deponent any promissory note to be discounted. Here this deponent looked at the forged document and said, that the endorsement purports to be his name, but it is not written by him, nor can deponent conjecture who wrote it. Knows Kaulloo Baboo, but though deponent has dealt with him he did not receive this draft from him.

Baboo Kaulloo, deposed he is a shop keeper. Looks at the forged draft and says that the name in it is his, but it is not written by him. He never gave such a draft in favor of Nilkantho. There is another person named Kaulloo Sing, a broker, and a person named Neeloo Sing, a sircar of the prosecutor in this case.

Mr. J. J. McCann deposed, that the prisoner was brought in custody to the police office before him. He then stated that he had received the forged draft from Nilkantho Sircar. But before the magistrate on his commitment, he said that he had received it from a person named Lall Sing, and so the magistrate giving him some peon to accompany him he pointed out Lall Sing, who when brought to the police office, denied all knowledge of the prisoner and of the draft in question.

Lall Sing, broker, deposed, that this prisoner is a stranger to him and that he was on a case of his brought up before the magistrate at the police office. Deponent never gave prisoner the draft in question, and never saw it till it was produced before him at the police office.

This closed the prosecution.

The prisoner in his defence said, that he had received the draft from the last witness, but as he has denied giving it to him and his witnesses are not in Calcutta, he declined making any defence.

The Judge then summed up the proceedings, explained the indictment, and detailed the evidence, commenting on it, and left the case in the hands of the Jury.

The Jury after a short consultation, returned a verdict of guilty of uttering a forged document knowing it to be forged. After this verdict had been recorded and explained to the prisoner the Judge said, that from the evidence the case was very clear against him, and the verdict very correct. He had attempted to defraud the Bank of Bengal a considerable sum, and as it is requisite to this large commercial city that offences of such nature should be severely visited for the sake of public safety, he sentenced the prisoner to 7 years' transportation to the S. E. Coast of Mauritius.

After this came on the case of Gourmohan versus Ramchunder Day and Kistamohan Chatterjee, for conspiracy. The defendants pleaded not guilty, and as neither the prosecutor nor the witnesses in this case were in appearance, the Judge directed and the Jury accordingly pronounced the prisoners not guilty. The Judge ordered, that as the prosecution was a private one, the recognisances of the prosecutor and his witnesses should be forfeited.

The Advocate-General wished a case in which he was counsel for the defendant to be called on, but as the prosecutor was in jail on a civil process, and it would require some time to bring him up to court and the hour was already late, the Judge postponed the hearing of the case to 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Judge desired Mr. King to bring the remaining prisoners in the jail up on Wednesday, when he could hold a jail delivery at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Court then adjourned till 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow morning.

DECEMBER 19, 1837.

Queen on the prosecution of Hagee Alee versus Mestoom Sircar. Sheikh Morad, Sheikh Noor Mahomed, Byram Dursee and Sheikh Abdool Hossain.

The defendants were indicted with having on the 31st day of May, 1837, forcibly entered into the house of the prosecutor in this case, in the town of Calcutta and broken into his zenannah.

Attorney for the prosecutor, Mr. Manjiddell.

Attorney for the defendants, Mr. N. Hudson.

Counsel for the prosecutors, C. R. Prinsep and J. F. Leith, Esqrs.

Counsel for the defendants, J. Pearson, Esq.

TRAVERSE CASE.

In this case, the Chief Justice remarked, an application had been made by Mr. Leith for an attachment on behalf of the prosecutor for cost before Mr. Justice Grant, therefore the Judge said that before he could call on this case he must see what Mr. Grant had done on that motion in this session.

Mr. Leith replied that the case was called on now by a notice from the defendants.

Mr. Pearson for the defendants replied, that they were obliged to do that or else they would forfeit their recognisances.

After a short desultory conversation, the Judge retired to consult Mr. Grant.

After a retirement of about a quarter of an hour, the Judge returned, and he said that he has seen Mr. Grant on this case, who said that an application had been made by Mr. Cochrane in this session for the prosecutors to pay 185 rupees, the costs of the defendants in this case. It appears that this case had been traversed from the last session to this on the very ground that the prosecutor would not pay all the defendant's costs up to the end of the last session; therefore, the Judge remarked, before he can take up this trial the prosecutor must be in a condition to pay up the defendant's costs. If he cannot do this, the Judge added, he would not charge the jury on it but order the case to be struck out of the traverse board.

Mr. Prinsep replied, that the prosecutor is already in the big jail as a debtor, and brought up now on a writ of Habeas Corpus, therefore he cannot possibly be in a condition to pay the defendant's costs. After this the Judge ordered the case to be struck off the board, but he said that the indictment would remain.

Mr. Pearson, for the defendants, replied, that they are now in custody having surrendered themselves, and applied to have them discharged from their recognisance by an order of court.

The Judge replied that they were not in custody, for he had not charged the jury with them, he merely would order the case to be struck off the board, and leave no further order on the subject.

After this the case was adjourned for the jail delivery to 2 o'clock p. m. to-day.

The jail delivery of the prisoners tried during the 4th Session of Oyer and Terminer of the year 1837.

Bunnsheer oldeen, who was convicted of stealing from the house of Sheikh Panuchoo, in Mutchun Bazaar street, several silver articles, the property of Joomnee, prosecutor's mistress, to the value of 136 rupees. The Judge sentenced the prisoner to be confined in the House of Correction for 12 calendar months.

Ram Essar, who was found guilty of cutting Gurgoa Essar with intent to do him some serious bodily harm, the sentence of death was recorded against him, the Judge informed the prisoner that he was doing for two capital felonies, viz. burglary, cutting and maiming; of the former charge he was, by the direction of the Judge, acquitted, from some deficiency in the evidence; but for the other indictment of maiming the person who went to apprehend him for his thieving, with a deadly instrument, the severe sentence of the law was thus for such offence, but the Court, taking into its merciful consideration the prisoner's case, sentenced him to 7 years' transportation to the S. F. Coast of Marathra.

Ramchind who had pleaded guilty of having returned from transportation before the period of his sentence had expired. This prisoner put in a petition stating, that he had an insufficient food and severe ill treatment had occasioned him to abscond from the place of his transportation.

After this sentence of death had been recorded, the Judge informed the prisoner, that in order to make the punishment of transportation a severe punishment, it is requisite that the return from it should be severely punished, and had this prisoner's sentence been for a limited period, he would increase it, but as his sentence is aliey for life he could not increase it without sentencing him to death. He was not inclined to deal with that severity with him, and therefore sentenced him to be sent back to the S. F. Coast of Marathra for life.

Khondraam Seal, Guddahar, Cheenebakh Byragy and Nohin Podar, who were convicted of stealing some rupees from a money-changer. These three prisoners put in a petition saying, that they were lodged with Khooderam and knew nothing of this offence.

The Judge informed the prisoners who had pleaded guilty of larceny, that they were sentenced to 12 months' confinement in the House of Correction, the first and last month in solitary confinement, and the other 10 in hard labour.

Haidoo, who had pleaded guilty to an accusation of larceny in a dwelling house to the amount above 50 rupees. After the sentence of death had been recorded against him, the Judge said he would deal mildly with him, and he, under all the circumstances of the case, sentenced him to six months' imprisonment in the House of Correction, and one month in solitary confinement.

Gour Mohan, who had been convicted of stealing 3 Union Bank Notes of 100 rupees each from the person of Mohan Surcar, the property of Hydesant Thosah, of Sealdah.

The Judge, after hearing the petition of the prisoner, told him, that he had been convicted of larceny on clear evidence, and under all the circumstances of the case, sentenced the prisoner to 12 months' confinement in the House of Correction.

After this Panchoos and Osmah Ollah, who were indicted for a felony, and the full against whom was thrown out, were brought up and discharged by proclamation.

After this, as the Sessions were about to break up, the prosecutor in the case of R. Smith versus J. Perreux, obtained by application and mutual consent, leave from the Court to speak to his defendant—Harkara, December 20.

INSOLVENT COURT.

Dec. 23, 1837.

(Before Sir E. Ryan, Knight.)

IN THE MATTER OF JOSEPH SWINERT MORTON, INSOLVENT, vs. NEWSON THE OPPOSING CREDITOR.

Insolvent's Attorney Mr. Martindell Mr. Newson's Attorney Mr. W. D. Shawe, Ditto's Counsel The advocate-General.

Insolvent it proved, he has one book of the firm of Morton and Newson in Court, there are other books of that firm which Mr. Newson left with Mr. G. F. Hudson, Attorney at Law, who has a lien for costs on defendant. Subsequent to 19th May 1837, when the firm of Morton and Newson was dissolved, deponent deposited some books of his private accounts with Mr. Board, the Sheriff's Officer, to whom deponent owes some money: there were none of the firm's books among them. Deponent received a note from Mr. Shawe in whose name it was deponent does not know, nor does he believe that it was for the joint keep of horses by the firm. Deponent believes it was for a debt due to him previous to his joining the firm. Deponent paid it away in part payment for rents of the premises No. 23, Durrantellah, when the firm of Morton and Newson carried on business after the sale of deponent's property. This note was returned by Captain Fitzgald to deponent, who gave it over to Mr. Board. Deponent likewise held several accommodation notes, one for 700 Rs. and the other 400 from Mr. Newson, and an account current of a debt of 389 rupees due by Lt. Beecher, at Bazar, for which Mr. Newson was security. Deponent likewise deposited with Mr. Board another note of hand for 600 rupees and a bill for the sale of a horse, showing a balance of 165 rupees in favor of Mr. Newson. Mr. Newson and deponent had a private account between them, of which deponent does not know.

Mr. Newson to render an account, but deponent has his account ready.

The Judge, on looking into the Schedule, said that the statement of valuation of a box containing papers, &c. would not do, Mr. Board must specify what are the securities in his hands.

Defendant deposed, that he has no property besides his clothes. He is not indebted to Mr. Newson, and he believes that Mr. Newson is indebted to him 10,000 rupees. Deponent has stated in his Schedule the debts due by the firm of Morton and Newson, but none of the debt due to the firm. Deponent said that he perceived 2 books of the firm of Morton and Newson on the table which he did not know before, had been in Mr. Board's possession. Nabob Chowder Jung is indebted to the deponent from 6 to 800 rupees. In this stage of the examination, the Judge said that he could not discharge this applicant on this ground, because the Schedule listed a true one. His plea of the books being in Mr. Hudson's or Mr. Board's possession, will not be a sufficient plea, he can apply for them through his attorney, Mr. Martindell, and if they refuse, then the insolvent's attorney can make an application to the Court to compel him to get temporary possession of them, to enable him to file both the credit debt statement of the account; and Mr. Martindell must file the amended Schedule and serve notice of the same to the insolvent's creditor 42 days before the re-hearing of this Insolvent's case, which was fixed for the 24th January 1838, or the Insolvent Court-day next; and the Judge was to give public notice of this by advertisement in the paper.

During the delivery of this decision by the Judge, Mr. Board interposed and said that he had the books

But he was ready to follow them up to the necessity to enable the insolvent to turn up his hands. The Judge told Mr. Board stupidly, that he would not hear him; but after the proceedings were over, the Judge returned to Mr. Board, if he was willing to give any more for the purposes mentioned by him as the applicant's attorney, could do so, and that would be the better way.

The judge then informed Mr. Pearson, the counsel for Mr. Newman, the opposing creditor, that he could not to place in any order, and returned the papers to Oswald in school.

-In the matter of Garind Chunder Keer, Mr. R. F. Allen made a motion for the arrest to be brought up and examined by the Attorney, Mr. J. W. Alexander. In doing so he stated a party which the attorney had made he had read that in this "El-Furud" and which he believes to be the

BUDDER BOARD OF REVENUE

We learn from authority on which we place much confidence, that Mr. Gault, who has recently returned from Europe, will be appointed officiating secretary to the Federal Board of Revenue. We hear also that the junior member Mr. Walters, is about to proceed to England.

f. We learn that Government, having some intention of repealing section 55 of regulation XX, of 1814, which imposes on moonshiners the duty of detaining and selling property in satisfaction of arrears of taxes, have called on the Board for information relative to the subject. The Board have set forth the replies of the various moonshiners to whom a circular has been addressed, and have forwarded to government separately the statements of the members.

The Senior Member remarks, that in the paper submitted by government, it appears to be proposed to restrict the enactment which constitutes moonshine the officers who are ordinarily to sell property seized by process of a court, that on the ground that those officers have mis-conducted or neglected the duty, but merely because they are placed under the control of the judicial authorities; and the duty of deciding summary suits has been transferred to revenue officers. He apprehends if the proposition of the Sugar Bazaar Association to appoint separate officers to perform the duty throughout the country be adopted, that the principles of sub-division of districts, and separation of departments would be carried to an objectionable extreme; for in addition to the three sorts of judicial officers now in existence, viz., one for revenue, one for criminal, and one for civil suits, there would be added, for police, and the third for government revenue, there would be a fourth class, expressly charged with distressed property on a fee of one anna per acre, and a compensation that in large cases (where an acreage is low) would be excessive; while in the small cases, which amount to nine tenths at would be so small, that it may be fairly inferred, the officer would almost always be between landlords and tenants. He is not sure by bringing an officer and all, they might be able to discharge a competent maintenance, which is a question that has not as yet already thoroughly been settled by the public authorities. Mr. Mr. Pottle it seems quite clear, in these matters, to consider the special duty, and to have a separate class of officers in England to relieve the revenue officers, by constituting a set of magistrates to decide upon customs and excise rates, because those duties are connected with the commissioners of custom and excise, who are not judicial officers. Mr. Pattle thinks, if the dignity of the judicial departments can be considered compromised by a moonshin receiving instructions from a collector, that the speaker may be by mistake to be produced by the parties taking out the decess, or any other form may be adopted by which the collector shall not directly interfere with the moonshin. Under those circumstances the senior member is led to conclude that instead of especially establishing a set of newly persons, having nothing but the scanty and uncertain remuneration to be referred to for their livelihood, it will be preferable to continue the moonshin in the discharge of the duty until, at least, they complain that they cannot execute same, or until it is discovered that another existing set of public officers is available, and has more time and capability to perform the duty. It is no small recommendation of the present system, the senior member observes, that the people are accustomed to it—that they are contented with the manner in which the moonshins discharge their duty, and that they have now, from long continued practice, mutual confidence in each other.

The temporary member, Mr. Walters, is of opinion that there can be no objection to the moonshiners being released from the duty in question, but he thinks that if separate commissioners or the assessors appointed by the judges for the sale of property in satisfaction of decrees of the purgation courts, are specially employed, in either case it will be necessary, and is a duty incumbent on government to consider how a sufficient remuneration is to be provided for them, so that none but respectable persons may be employed in the performance of a duty, which, placed in the hands of ill-paid and irresponsible individuals, might, and undoubtedly would, be converted into an instrument of mockery and arbitrary oppression.

The officiating member, Mr. Tucker, in view of opinion, that the moonlight ought to be returned as the duty, which was in Cretaceous, Ammon, Stricken, and Hattatong, where nature must stand as they are at present, might be advantageously illustrated to the purpose of cases; but he also considers that common sense is applied properly for the purpose will not appear, as the fact would not afford an adequate compensation for the trouble, and there is no reason why the government should bear any part of the expense. — Englewood, November 11.

A letter in circulation, very respectfully addressed to the Governor-General, expressing a petition that the hills of Darjeeling are a very fertile tract from the base of the plains of Bengal, and that the Local Board should be authorized to send an Agent to Council to examine the land, and to recommend the station fit for the reception of immigrants, in whom a general firmness of character, and a good knowledge of the English language, were become necessary. The letter is signed by many persons of simple means, very earnestly urging the establishment of this station as a means of its proximity to Calcutta which will put it within the means of the middle classes to remove to it, when compelled by ill health or a desire for recreation.

and places them in a similar, being at a distance which makes a visit to it almost as obligatory and severe as any voyage to Europe.

RECENTLY DELIVERED.—The medals and prizes for the examinations in chemistry, at the Medical College for this year, were delivered on Saturday morning at that institution by the President of the Council, Mr. Ramesh. There were a great number of European and Native gentlemen present, amongst whom we noticed the Honorable Mr. Macaulay, Mr. Sutherland, Capt. Birch, Messrs. Sutherland, Fitzgerald, J. C. Chip, Drs. Jackson, Craigie, and Henderson, Baboo, Ramesh Datt, Ramchandra Sen, Rajah Kalikrishna Bahadur, &c., and of course the liberal donors of the prizes, Dwariknath Teja & Co.

DISPENSARY.—Dr. Hansen has been appointed. There is a report current, that the institutions of the numerous dispensaries is intended to provide situations for the medical students of the College, and that Dr. Hansen is to be Superintendent of Dispensaries. The students are to be designated sub-assistant surgeons, and one to be appointed to each dispensary under the ailing surgeon, who is to have 50 rupees per mensem for his extra occupation.

GENERAL HATTA DISPENSARY.—On this, that the General Hattia Dispensary is about to have arrangements made for the lodging of a certain number of patients in it. It is stated, that the plan of the additional buildings has been ready for some time, and they would have been commenced before this, had it not been for the difficulty which exists towards obtaining the necessary quantum of ground for the purpose.

LABORATORY AND INDIAN PHARMACOPEIA.—Dr. O'Shaughnessy, it is said, is to have an experimental laboratory for the preparation of medicine, now intended for from England, and the duty of arranging the Indian Pharmacopoeia is to devolve on him.

JOHN BRYAN, M.D.—It is to be, it is said, professor of Materia Medica in the College, in place of the situation of professorship of clinical surgery, declined by Mr. Chapman.

CHOLERA.—The cholera morbus is raging very dreadfully in the suburbs of Calcutta, at Phool Bagan in 1 mile. On the 20th instant, no less than 8 natives fell sacrifice to this disease, and several natives, for fear of contagion have sold their grounds in that division and removed to another quarter. One on the 19th instant, sold 10 upstake through fear, for 100—and removed into town. PROGNOSIS OF CHOLERA.—The examination of the pupils of the several seminaries of Calcutta, has been highly satisfactory, as showing a vast improvement in the system of education now adopted.

BARBER SCHOOL.—The English school, which was established by the Rev. Mr. Hatherlin at Barakat and which went on very well for some years, has been closed for some time.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The Chamber of Commerce have presented as a nuisance the Intemperance of men at which the Government functionaries enter their several offices. To the public whom they have occasioned communications personally with the head of office, it is of course very inconvenient not to find them there before noon, though in many cases it is well known that their absence is occasioned by the press of public business which cannot be got through except by taking home property and passing a long morning unattended in disguise and waiting upon them.

THE OPPIUM SALE.—The opium sale of the 1st inst. consisted of 150 chests of packaged French opium, namely, 125 chests of Patna and 25 Benares, and a small lot of 10 chests of Patna and 50 Benares, which are by far the best. The whole of the Patna was bought by Messrs. Jacobson, an eminent dealer connected with Bombay, the first lot at 950 and the rest 960 and 965 averaging 955-12 per chest; the Benares was taken by six or eight different buyers at 910 to 925, averaging 916-12 per chest.

The total weight of the French Opium advertised for the public sale on the 22d instant was sold at 955 rupees per chest.

FAILURE OF THE COMMERCIAL GRAIN CONTRACTORS.—The failure of the commercial grain contractors was lately announced, with the expression of a hope, that the Government, indulgently regarding the unfortunate circumstance which has caused this result, would liberally remit the penalties incurred. The Government, upon the representation and recommendation of the proper authorities, have expressed their intention to relinquish the claim which they have upon the contractors, and to resort to commercial agency for future supplies.

NATIVE FAILURE.—A considerable failure in the bazar was announced on the 30th of November, the firm of Sebnim Paul and Co. and Co. a house of seventy years' standing, reputed the oldest shop in Calcutta. Their transactions are said to have embraced about twenty-five lakhs of rupees, but, we are told, the failure is limited to about a couple of lakhs, and that it has been forced upon the acting partner, Cosminath, by a quarrel with his brother about joint responsibility for losses on opium this year, which the latter is supposed to have ample means of making up.

SALTING IN THE SALT WATER LAKES.—A discovery has been recently made which promises no slight addition to the luxuries of the table in this country. Herrings have been caught in the Salt water Lakes, of which the flavor is pronounced to be delicious. The natives are buying up all they can procure for salting, hoping to put them off, at an evident advantage, as importations of the present season. The sentiment, it true, is curious, is not having hitherto fallen with the scope of chance to obtain this description of fish, its production hitherto in any part of India, being altogether unknown.

UNCOVENANTED SERVANTS' FAMILY PENSION FUND.—It is now, that the Local Government have, in anticipation of the sanction of the Court of Directors, all along allowed six per cent. upon the accumulating assets of the Uncovenanted Servants' Family Pension Fund.

DISTRIBUTION OF STIMES.—A great number of indigent persons assembled at Calcutta on the occasion of the Shraut of the late mother of Baboo Sibrain and Anund Narain Ghose, of Pantooria Ghaut, which took place on the 22d of November. Their number was according to some between fifty and sixty, according to others between seventy or eighty thousand—men, women and children. Had there been no restriction on the entrance of the town, by the police, their number would of all probability have exceeded a lakh. About five o'clock the following morning they were collected into the compounds of large native houses, and the distribution commenced about seven o'clock; the Muslins had half a rupee and others without distinction of creed, age, or sex, a quarter rupee each. No accident happened. At the house of Baboo Motchur Sen, in Nantullah street and of three beggar women was delivered of a son, and every care was taken to be taken of the mother and infant, who have been safely conveyed home.

NATIVE CONVERTS.—It is said, that a number of the native Christians at Purneah, in Allahabad, who had originally been Hindus, had lately embraced the faith of their forefathers by wearing bead necklaces, and announcing publicly that they had abandoned Christianity. It is stated further, that not content with proceeding thus far, they took forcible possession of the chapel where they used to perform Hindu service, brought an image of Kariakumari, and worshipped the same in a Hindu fashion, on the fourteenth of November. The same question was of a very low origin, being of the Hindu faith and extremely ignorant, and expressing the same sentiment to the effect that, when the converts embracing Hinduism were asked which system they preferred.

SAVES AN ANIMAL.—On Saturday evening last, some Natives broke into the Bible Depository and carried away 100 bibles and the same number of prayer books, with other religious tracts. The pious depositories effected their entrance by climbing the door of the church in Mission row, standing upon which they broke a pane of glass, and inserting their hand removed the iron bar. It is hoped the rogues will profit by what they have stolen.

SEAMEN AND WAR BOATS.—It is said, that the Esperanza steamer, which is now coming down with the Bishop, is to be despatched to Africa on her arrival at Calcutta, also, that Government have sanctioned the building of two war-boats, carrying two traversing 32 pounder cannonades, capable of conveying troops, baggage, stores, &c.

The tender of the Calcutta Docking Company for building the two war boats for Africa, has been accepted. The Company undertake to complete the boats in three months. The dimensions of these craft are, length 60 feet, breadth 16 feet, depth 6 feet, constructed at a draft of $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet water.

THE CREW OF THE WRECKED.—On the 1st instant, seventy men, a portion of the crew of the Herford foremast, were put off at Clive Street Wharf. The payment commenced at about mid-day and lasted till past 5 o'clock p.m. The sum to be paid to them amounted to several thousand rupees, as each of the men received from two hundred to two hundred and fifty rupees.

PREPARING TO LEAVE.—We hear that the cabin of the Linard, which vessel sails to Calcutta the first week in January, is nearly all engaged. General Ventura and Lieut. Arthur Comilly have determined to proceed to Europe by the overland route, and we may hope to be favoured with the journal of some of the gentlemen, who travel through Italy and France for the benefit of those who may hereafter take the same route to England.

MY KICKED UP AT SEA.—A Chinaman, commander of a Chinese junk, which has a rival fleet in Calcutta about 13 days ago, on his voyage from Kingston to Calcutta, picked up at sea 41 Chinese men in a baulk, from off the coast of China going. These men were destitute of provisions, and had they not been that providentially saved by this Chinaman, it is probable they would shortly have perished. He then stated, that they were casting along the Chittagong shore, a few days previous to their being picked up by the Chinese junk when it was suddenly overpowered by a violent storm off the island of Suu Jeep, which broke the cable of their vessel and drove it out to sea where they were tossed about at the mercy of the elements, until they were providentially saved in the manner already stated.

OUTRAGE AT DUM DUM.—It is said that a party of police constables went up to Dum-Dum a few days ago, and under the pretence of having a search warrant to seize run-away men, entered encampments where they conducted themselves in the most disorderly manner. They proceeded to the house of Bhaia per Bhaia full, who had retired for the night, and marched on having him called up. When interrupted by the sentry on duty, one of them exclaimed that they were on His Majesty's service and demanded why they stayed there in the execution of their duty; that if he had had his pistol by him he would have shot the sentry for stopping them. They are all regretted to have behaved in a state of great rudeness, and to have disturbed in no small degree the quiet of the cantonment.

SEVERE AFFRAY.—A man arrived from the Mofussil, stating that a great fight had lately taken place in Zillah Kamnagore, between the people of an Indian planter and Kanipressoon Bahadur, of Oorissagore, Zepidar. The men on both sides were armed with sticks, but those on the part of the Indian planter being more numerous than those on the part of the Kanipressoon, the former got the better, of the latter, men on both sides being mangled and wounded.

DEATH FROM SEVERE AFFRAY.—Joseph King, the Gomastah of an Indigo Planting, the permanent proprietor of the Mouza Mossut, in the Parganah of Bahin, Zillah Hooghly, having within the last fortnight, caused a severe beating to be inflicted upon a Mossutman, for non-payment of revenue due by him, the poor man breathed his last in the process.

SUICIDE.—On the night of the 21st instant, a Pootna woman, aged between twenty five and thirty, committed self-destruction by hanging herself by the neck; in which state she was found on the morning of the 5th, by her son. She appears to have committed the atrocity in consequence of a quarrel that she had the preceding evening, with the man under whose protection she lived.

FIRES.—Several fires have occurred during the month, and one of them which took place at Bang Bazar, consumed property to a considerable amount.

MR. SMITH'S EXPERIMENTS IN INDIA.—Mr. Robert Smith, of the Military Board Office, is the incursive individual who has been experimenting in India rubber, and the experiments, as far as they have been conducted, have proved very successful, exceeding the most sanguine expectations of those interested in the undertaking. Mr. Smith has had the fruits of his labours, in the form of samples of boxes, bottles, knives and pouches before the approving authorities, and has elicited from them the strong expression of their thanks and commendations, which will no doubt ultimately obtain for him the distinguished patronage which his achievements so deservedly demand. The lithographic art, introduced to Mr. Smith for the discovery of the simple application of rollers, earth, or engraved matter in radiating impressions on stones, for which purpose it has hitherto been used, to the great saving of the stones, and the employment of labour, which has been considerably diminished by the practical adoption of his useful discovery.

TAX ON CONVEYANCE.—It is said that it is in the contemplation of Government to levy a tax on the conveyances plying in the streets of this city. The amount is to be sixteen rupees per annum for each buggy or two wheeled conveyance, and thirty-two rupees on every coach, carriage or four wheeled vehicle, and the sums raised by this tax is to be expended in watering and repairing the roads.

RUBBISH CANTS. It is stated, that the Chief Magistrate, shortly previous to his leave of absence, at the suggestion of Lieut. Abercrombie, the Superintendent of the Conservancy Department, passed an order, that no Conservancy cart shall remove from the streets opposite to the gate of any house more than two cart loads of rubbish, under any circumstance, and the removals are to be limited to the sweepings of the house solely, and all other kind of rubbish must be removed by the owner of the house at their own expense.

CHINA NAPOLEON.—Letters from China, Nagpore, say that the Cold-water-tunn has been successfully quelled, and the chief of the insurgents captured. On 5th Dec. 1, which for some time had been under marching orders, awaiting only the final order to move, has received respite, to the great joy of the luckless wallahs and hangers-on and great inconvenience.

THE BHOOTAN MARCH. Letters from Goalpoor announce the arrival there of the Mission according to Bhutan, on the 25th ultimo. They went to Subhina (that route by water as far as Guwahati), and thence to attend the hills through a path lying due north, avoid Mr. Turner's route.

MOFUSSIL.

WORK.—Government has authorized the building of a new hospital, for the European soldiers, at this station.

A dinner recently took place at the station Restaurant to arrange the constitution of a new association and he called the Agri Beef Steak Club, for the improvement of the dairy and other social relations.

The 5th Regiment Nitro Infantry arrived on the 22nd, and continued their march this morning.

The cholera which had remained quiescently, has again broken out with violence. The quality and quantity of the food on which a large portion of the population now subsists, render the poor wretches peculiarly obnoxious to the disease.

The inhabitants of Agri, have determined on preventing a divorce to Sir Charles Metcalfe on his approaching departure from the country.

NEW ROAD.—Government have directed a line of road to be surveyed, and reported on, for the use of public mails, to and from Calcutta and Bombay. It appears that the road is, at first to be on a small scale, though well constructed and calculated for horsemen or light carriages. Captain George Fraser, Assistant to the Resident at Nagpore, has been taken the instruction of that portion of the road, which runs through the Nagpore territory.

POST OFFICE COMMISSIONER.—The Post Office Commission have recently visited the establishments of this department throughout India, the date fixed upon for giving effect to such alterations, as are deemed necessary, is the 1st of January, 1838. The salary of the Post Master at Delhi has been raised from 114 to 100 rupees per mensem, and from 14 to become a Subsidiary Post Office, with Minor Subordinate to it. The pay of the Assistant Post Master has been fixed at 175 Company's rupees a month.

MAJOR.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief reviewed Colonel Skinner's corps of irregular cavalry at Hanoi, on the 14th, and the Haurinah light infantry battalion under the command of Captain Grant, on the 15th of November. The gallant Commander maintained his well earned reputation; notwithstanding the violent character of the illness in many of his men the manoeuvres were well and steadily performed, and His Excellency was very much gratified with all that he saw.

WINTER.—The last year has been very dull for attendance light, and the show horses poor in the extreme.

WINTER.—It is stated here that the magistrate has adopted an excellent plan of ending the extortion of the Barkundates. The old and emaciated prisoners were all transferred to the jail and able bodied in a sent out in their stead. An order was likewise made to give six paces to each prisoner, but at the same time the pay of the Barkundates has been stopped till such time as it may be seen the prisoners get into proper condition.

WINTER.—The old Queen Dowager of Oude and young Moona Jann, have been safely lodged in the neighbouring fortress of Cunnar. The old lady shammed sick at Allahbad with a view, it is supposed, to gain time for the operation of some plan of escape, she is prepared to pay six lacs of rupees to any gentleman who will procure her liberation by fair means or foul. The indigo manufacture in this province has wound up far beyond the most sanguine expectations of the planters. The damage done to the khureef crops by the storm, referred to on a former occasion, is not nearly so great as was anticipated from the appearance of the fields immediately after the storm abated.

WINTER.—During the review of the troops at Benares by the Governor General, a native speculator was accidentally shot through the body by some confused, or careless soldier, who omitted to withdraw the ramrod before firing off his musket. The unfortunate suffered died shortly afterwards.

WINTER.—In the middle of the month upwards of 500 prisoners were in the Barkundates jail of the station, the accommodation being scarcely fit for 500. Of course sickness and mortality are largely generated by such a state of things. Even now there are between 50 and 60 in hospital, besides the sick in the hospitals of different detached garrisons, 5, 6 and 8 miles off. At present the three Insane Hospitals contain 81 patients, and about 40 or 50 in the extent of daily attendance for medical advice at the City Dispensary.

WINTER.—The sword which had been subscribed for by the non-commissioned officers of His Majesty's 44th foot for presentation to Amaga Kipling, their late and much respected sergeant major, having arrived at the head quarters of the corps on the 18th instant, on the 18th the whole of the non-commissioned officers assembled in the long room of the regimental canteen for that purpose. On the approach of the Amaga, he was met at the door by the quarter master sergeant of the regiment, viz. Martin Shirpe Whitaker, who in the name of the remainder of the non-commissioned officers assembled, presented the sword, (which has the following inscription engraved on its blade, viz. "Presented to Amaga Kipling, their late sergeant-major as a token of their sincere esteem and regard.") with the following very appropriate address:—"I Amaga Kipling, in behalf of myself and the rest of the non-commissioned officers of the regiment, I have much pleasure in presenting you with this war like badge, the most honorable that can be given from a body of brother soldiers to another. We beg you will accept it as a mark of our appreciation of the strict and diligent performance of your arduous duties as sergeant-major for these last 13 years, and as a further mark of their sincere esteem and regard, trusting that you may rise into the higher grades of the service with as much honour and respect as now marks your present well earned promotion, and which we all view with feelings of joy and delight. Should you ever be called upon to draw this honorable weapon in battle, may it be with honour and glory, to your sovereign, your country, and yourself."

After Amaga Kipling had received the sword, he delivered the following short but feeling reply:—"Non-commissioned officers. In receiving this sword from you as a mark of your esteem and regard for me, I return you my sincere thanks, and at the same time hope that you will individually consider my silence to speak more the feelings of my heart, for this your mark of esteem than if I were speaking to you for an hour."

The individual in question is an old and faithful soldier, having served 3 Kings and the present Queen for a period of upwards of 26 years. He enlisted on 1st May 1811 into the 24th Regiment of Foot, and joined the 2nd battalion in Portugal a short time afterwards with which battalion he continued to serve till the peace in 1814. On the reduction of that battalion he was sent to join the 1st, then serving in India (Bengal) and on the return of that corps to Europe in 1822, he extended his services to his present corps the 44th Foot, and in November 1824 was appointed sergeant-major to the regiment, ever since which period he has performed the arduous duties of that situation, which no doubt has been done to the satisfaction of his commanding officer, and has now been rewarded for his long and faithful services, by a commission from her Majesty, which may he long live to enjoy!

WINTER.—There is much suffering here among the agricultural classes. The station is crowded with the most miserable objects many of whom arrive too late for relief and die from pure starvation. By a calculation made, it appears that the number of deaths from starvation or debility, the effect of insufficient food, has been, since the beginning of September till the commencement of November, about 60. The poor wretches are found lying about the station unable to move, and the residents send out persons with bags of parched grain to feed the starving people flocking in, and to bring these needy medical treatment into hospital, several hundreds are led daily on private charity.

THE DHOON.—A letter from an intelligent person in the quarter speaks of the improvement in the Dhoon here as very rapid; several gentlemen with capital and talent to enable them to do a great deal of good, have taken plots of waste lands, and are getting on very successfully. Population, however, is rapidly decreasing, and these are the sinews of a new colony. It has struck persons engaged in the Dhoon, that the present drought and scarcity in the plains, or rather in some of the Western districts if them, might be taken advantage of to obtain settlers in the Dhoon, by which pressing distress will be alleviated during the present season, and the emigrants probably be eventually bettered in condition.

KURNAUL.—The case for the prosecution of Lieut. Keating and Jennings, of H. M.'s 13th L. I., who was arraigned before a court-martial for ungentleman-like conduct, in refusing an explanation, both verbal and written, as offered by Captain Hughes of the artillery, in consequence of which an attacking tank place and Captain Hughes received a mortal wound; has closed, and the prisoners recommence their defence. The charge received from these quarrels is solely for unofficer and ungentleman-like conduct, in refusing the explanation offered. The record of the deceased was asked if he considered the duel a fair one, and answered that he conceived it was not. The Court, however, would not permit any matter connected with the capital crime to be entered into, nor would they allow the deceased's second, cited as a witness, to record any of the serious impressions, as to the cause of Lieut. Keating's treatment of him, which the late Captain Hughes when dying submitted to him.

LOORNAH.—A European soldier who had deserted and sought service with Ranjeet Singh, has just been sent back, somewhat reluctantly, by the Rajah. Much distress exists in this town and district.

RAVONN.—A letter from Sangar mentions, that the harvests had been productive, but the price had advanced in consequence of the heavy rain to meet the great demand in lower Bundelcund and the Dooab.

PALES.—The plague has again broken out in the ill-fated town of Pales and is fast exterminating the inhabitants.

NATIVE STATES.

LAHORE.—The Maha Rajah is now out upon a hunting excursion on the river Jhulum. His Highness expressed to the courtiers his intention to send Monsieur Allard and Court, with a detachment of cavalry and artillery, for the purpose of relieving the sirdars and their men stationed at Peshawar, that they may come and join his suit.

Bhys Ram Sing represented, that the late sirdar Hurrey Sing, had so far succeeded in working up their minds with fear, that had he lived a few years longer, the Eusebian would have submitted themselves to the rule of the Maha Rajah before and he would have completely subjugated Fateh Khan, of Punjab, and Payand Khan, of Darband.

The vakeel of the Ameer of Attora having represented, that his principal had given way to excessive grief for the death of his son, and that some sort of token of regard from His Highness, might contribute to console him in some measure, a valuable shawl and sword were accordingly ordered to be forwarded to the Ameer.

An ams was received from Fateh Sing and Hakeem Roy, stating that Ahmad Khan, of the Emabul tribe, having set on a direction on foot, in the neighbourhood of Dera Ismail Khan, with a view to pillage the Maha Rajah's territories in that quarter, that officers, with a suitable force, confronted the insurgents and were engaged in putting them to flight, but with the loss of a number of men on both sides.

An ams was received from the Nabharwar of Peshawar, representing that intelligence had been received there, that about a thousand of the Afghans on the frontier of Khyber had formed themselves into a band, and having managed to stop the current of the river Bars for two days, the Maha Rajah's troops at Peshawar were put to considerable inconvenience, and the heads of the latter saw no other alternative than of proceeding to chastise the former. The Afghans however seeing the Sikh troops approach, were frightened by their superior numbers, and sought refuge in flight.

At the hour of audience, Kowur Now Nihal Sing represented that Ulle Dad Khan, the former ruler of Attock, had endeavoured to excite sedition and disturbances, but upon the appearance of the Nabharwar's army from Dera Gohere Khan, Ulle Dad finding himself unable to stand his ground, had fled in the direction of Cabul. The Maharaja remarked that if Ulle Dad Khan would appear before him, and repent of his misconduct, some provision would be made for him. Sirdar Dhunna Sing observed, that if His Highness would indeed take the Khan's circumstances into consideration, he would immediately present himself.

The Maharaja enquired of Raja Dhyana Sing, respecting Shumsoodeen Khan; the Raja answered that he had retreated from his encampment and sought concealment in the hills, and that the Sikhar's troops were in pursuit.

An ams was read from the intelligence of Cabul to the effect that Sirdar Dost Mahomed Khan was, as usual, residing at that place, that Mohammed Akbar Khan, his son, was very oppressive in his conduct towards the ryots; having heard of the proposed visit of Mr. Alexander Burnes, the King's counsellors recommended him not to permit English gentlemen to enter his territory, otherwise the people of that nation would, by degrees, obtain possession of their whole country. Dost Mahomed replied, that the English entertained no unfriendly designs towards himself or them, and that he relied upon the favour of the Almighty. That there was not any fear of aggression on the part of the British power.

Hukeen Duvy Dutt, who accompanied Kaseo Kaloo Sing, the Nepaul Minister, presented some koshla alms and said "If your Highness will be pleased to grant some of this koolia, it will be productive of great benefit;" in consequence of which Dhyana Raj Koonwar was ordered to take a kula for a few days by way of experiment and if it proved beneficial the Sirkar also promised to use it; and five hundred rupees were bestowed upon the Hukeem.

It was before stated, that the Sirdar Bishen Sing, has been murdered by Ram Sing, son of Sirdar Koprheel Sing; it is further made public, that the Maharaja of Lahore, notwithstanding the full proof of the crime, has not ordered the criminal to the gallows. For the satisfaction of the people, he forbade Ram Sing his presence, during a short time, but after 3 days gave him an audience to take leave; on which occasion Ranjeet Sing's officers are, more than ever, ready to oppress the inhabitants of Lahore.

KASHGUR.—A letter received from Kashgur, speaks in terms of great praise of the present ruler of that place. His Highness is represented as a man, whose attention is solely absorbed in seeking the happiness of his subjects. An instance of his impartial administration of justice is given in the following. One day, a short time since, while His Highness was holding a Court, an old woman presenting herself before him complained against His Highness's orphan for having bereaved her of a grand daughter, by seizing and carrying her away to his house while on her way home from the river. His Highness having no doubt of the fact, ordered the offender to be punished by cutting his arms up to the elbow joints.

SONS OF STORM.—Mr. Burns and some other gentlemen, in their tour on the frontiers of Hyderabad in Sind, having arrived at the Fort of Sungur in the possession of Maha Raja Runjit Sing, they requested admission into it; but the jemadar in charge of the fort, replied that he could not permit any such thing without the orders of the Maha Rajah. The Akbar-navis at the place having brought the affair to the notice of the Maha Rajah, His Highness was highly displeased with the disrespectful conduct of the jemadar towards the gentlemen in question, and has suspended him from office not to resume his duties till he obtains their pardon.

HYDERABAD IN SCAND.—It is stated by persons arrived from Hyderabad, that it having rained copiously of late, the inhabitants of this place are freed from the fear of a famine and plague with which they were threatened; but that the chief of Saiduwar Legana, having a short time since lost his only son, who was heir apparent to his manhood, was extremely grieved; indeed his death was lamented by thousands of men. The chief having no successor, gave away all his wealth to the poor, and made up his mind to proceed upon a pilgrimage to Mecca; but other chiefs of Sind having interfered, have succeeded in dissuading him from his purpose.

MEERPOUR.—It is said, news has been received from Nepal, that Ragunath Pundit has been made Prime Minister, and further, that the ex-minister Rheim Sein and General Martabur Sing have been released from prison, and the former has been allowed a pension of 3,000 rupees per month.

NOOK.—A letter from Lucknow, dated 17th December, reports, "very pleasant weather, but the country suffering from want of rain; the grass quite burnt up, and the fields only kept green by means of irrigation. Grain is rising in price, flour 10 small seers, wheat 11, and grain 13. Five companies of the 2d N. I., under command of Major Lane, left the day previous for Cawnpore with the Heir apparent, who is proceeding to pay his respects to the Governor-General, the old King being too infirm to undergo the fatigue of such a journey. In cantonments and the city the guards are standing fast for want of men to relieve them. The duty has fallen very heavy on the 14 companies of the two corps here since the 35th marched in October, and there is no knowing when the 50th will arrive from Chittagong; when they do, most likely a great number will be unfit for duty."

A change for the better has come over this place since the new accession and the nomination of the old Hukera Ally Mehndee Khan to the office of minister, as it is called. Soodhan Ally Khan has been thrown into prison, where he is, doubtless, undergoing the tender mercies of one who never spared man in his anger. Perpetual imprisonment, the monotony of it to be relieved by the occasional application of a refreshing torture, is, it is said, the doom fixed for him. The officers who had thrown aside their pen and assumed the sword, are about to remonstrate against the approaching measure of reorganizing the military establishment of this country, which will send them back to their more peaceful and congenial labours.

MEERPOUR.—The 68th regiment on its way to Allahabad from Alnow, and the 27d. on its way from Sagur to Alnow, have been halted at the request of Mr. Wilkinson, Political Agent at Bhopal, at Gonga, near Ichire in the expectation of a fight with the Begum, who refuses to carry into execution His Lordship's commands. For the last two months she has been smouldering the Political Agent with fair promises, without the least intention of fulfilling them. Mr. L. Wilkinson, to whose sagacity and judgment His Lordship has entrusted the entire management of the affair, had given her to the 15th of November, to execute the Governor-General's orders or to stand the consequence of the disobedience.

In her spirit of pugnacity she has bound on a turban and begun a sword on her thigh, and swears to die like a true Amazon in the thick of battle. In anticipation of a battle, the 68th are to furnish four companies and their guns from Hoshungabad. Captain Gelder with a detail of artillery is already at Sekore in readiness.

MEERPOUR.—It is published that Meer Alum Khan, the ruler of Bijore, with a force of 4,000 men and 12 guns, has continued to maintain his authority without dreading the power of any enemy; but at the present time Futeh Khan Panjtarree, has raised the standard of rebellion, and sent a message to the Khan of Bijore that all the higher classes of his dependance were only awaiting for an order from the Ruler of Cabul to afford him their cordial assistance in attacking Jellalabad, but he alone was unjustly opposed to Dost Mohammed, that it became his highness to write to the Ruler of Cabul craving forgiveness for former opposition, and expressing his present change of sentiments, that the bark of hope might be anchored in safety from the buffets of the waves of the Barait Zeyan troops. Meer Mohammed wrote briefly in reply, that he had separated himself from the Ruler of Cabul, and taken part with Sultan Mohammed Khan, and expected a donation of lands and other gifts from the Maharaja of Lahore; otherwise his allegiance would have been continued to the Ruler of Cabul.

GHEZNEE.—Let it be known that one of the Ashraf of Cabul has written to a person at Loodianah, that Husan Mohammed Khan, son of Yar Mohammed Khan, deceased, has protected the ryots of Gheznee, re-peopled the deserted country, and engaged its inhabitants in agricultural labours. It is said that a great increase of revenue has been attained by his very active exertions, a small fraction even of which, has not previously been collected. Suddenly a party of 200 sowars and some hundreds of foot soldiers made a descent from Baman upon Gheznee, and in like manner as they despoiled the inhabitants of Baman, demanded from the traders and wealthy men of Gheznee a sum of 4 lakhs of rupees. Upon which event, Husan Mohammed Khan, forwarded a petition to the ruler of Cabul, entreating him to restrain these lawless and insolent invaders and preserve the country in its course of prosperity, otherwise that it would again become desolate as in former days.

CABOOL.—Captain Burnes has passed through this town and gone on an excursion to the Hindoo Koosh, which he proposes to ascend as far as circumstances will admit.

BHUNUTPOOR.—Wheat has fallen considerably in price in this city, owing to a silly step of the Rajah, who purchased a quantity of grain and threw, besides, into the market, some which had been received in lieu of money payments of revenue. In Gwalior the scarcity is appalling, wheat selling at seven and eight seers per rupee.

SIND.—The principal Umser of this place has imprisoned two of his brothers, for patriotically objecting to the admission of the English into the country, and to their increasing influence; their sagacity pointing out clearly enough, the consequences of such, Colonel Pottinger had gone to Henderabad to consider the question.

FEHRAWAN.—A night attack recently made by a party of Patans on the Sikhs was eminently successful. A number of the latter were slain, and a considerable quantity of booty captured.

ULMAN.—The season has been bad, and grain is extravagantly dear, wheat 15 and gram 18 seers for the rupee: the crops of bajrah appear good, but the cultivation is scanty. The ryots are ill-treated and plundered in every way, and to such a degree, that none will remain at their homes or villages who can possibly go lands in any other district. The whole raj may be called a deer preserve, no one, on pain of having his right hand cut off, being allowed to molest these destructive animals; consequently, there is fine sport for the Rajah. The ryots suffer severely from the royal partiality for deer hunting, as the deer commit great damage amongst the crops. The present high price of grain is influenced by another cause. A relation of the Rajah's called Goordunjee, has a large store of grain; many merchants have imported grain into Ulwar from Malwah and Rewarree, who are willing to sell at 20 seers of wheat and 25 of gram for the rupee; but Goordunjee has used his influence with the Rajah to prevent these merchants entering the city of Ulwar until he has sold all his stock at his own exorbitant rates. When the troops complained of the high prices, the Rajah assembled all the grain merchants together and requested to be informed why they did not sell their stores at a lower rate; they replied—on account of the scarcity. They were then questioned as to how much they had in store, and one man declared that he had none. Oh! then, exclaimed the Rajah, we cannot rob you; and immediately gave an order to his hungry sepahes to go to the buncah's house and to help themselves to all they could find; the buncah's falsehood was punished by the loss of ten thousand rupees' worth of grain. The ex-Dewan and his satellites, are still in confinement; the Rajah wants them to pay down three lakhs of rupees, but they have no idea of complying with his unreasonable demand, consequently whenever the proposal is made, they declare they have not a cowrie, that they never made one pice beyond their salaries, and respectfully submit that their accounts should be examined. The Dewan and others in confinement, have lions on their legs. Umoojan wants to take half of the crop for the raj; and has imposed a tax upon cattle, of eight annas per annum for each cow, buffalo, &c., &c.—one anna for each sheep, goat, &c., whilst he has not yet disbursed any pay to the troops, who are consequently in a very discontented state.

DEATH OF CAPT. CLARIDGE.—Accounts have been received of the death of Capt. Claridge of the 34th N. I.

at Hyderabad, under circumstances of an extremely painful nature. Capt. C. having mounted one of several horses that had been brought for trial, the animal suddenly started with him and having cleared the yard hedge, made a sudden and dead stop, throwing his unfortunate rider over head; from the fall Capt. C. received such injury as to cause his mediate death.

SHIPWRECK.—The schooner Sweet, after taking in cargo at Poodamuddakah, was compelled to run on shore to prevent her from driving. All hands safe.

The hull of the Brig Delight has been sold for a trifle more than 2,700 rupees.

The hull of the ship Thalia was on the 29th of November, sold by public auction, and knocked down to a native for rupees 5,510, something more than a moiety of what it was expected to realize.

THE FAIRY'S CREW.—Captain Quin, of Her Majesty's sloop-of-war Releigh, was informed at Canton by H. M. Superintendent or Chief Commissioner, that there were many English on shore in one of the north eastern districts of the empire, supposed to have been cast away by shipwreck. To the coast in question the Releigh bent her way. She arrived at the mouth of a fine river up which Captain Quin with his boats, well manned and prepared against aggression, sailed and rowed some twenty or thirty miles to a place called Fou-chen. At length he found the men, who prove, however, not to have been wrecked, but to have been driven on shore by the piratical part of the crew of a small vessel called the Fairy, employed in smuggling opium. Captain Quin received the greatest attention from the Chinese authorities, and having taken the men on board, he set sail for Canton, where he left the men from thence the Rushburgh Castle or some other vessel is to take the men to Manila, where they will no doubt meet the well-merited punishment due to their crimes from the Spanish authorities, who are exemplary in the administration of the law against these criminals against the laws of nations.

THUNDER STORM.—Madras was recently visited by as severe and alarming a thunder storm, as was ever witnessed; but not a single life has been lost or bodily injury sustained by any, though in two or three parts of the town the electric fluid did damage to buildings.

THE LOO CHO ISLANDS.—Captain Quin, of Her Majesty's ship Releigh, has visited the Loo Choo Islands, and he found the inhabitants as hospitable as formerly; for they not only refused to take money for the supplies of the ship, but brought back a bag of dollars which was forced upon them as a remuneration; saying, they were not allowed to receive any thing.

ARREST OF AN OFFICER.—An officer has been placed in arrest in some station under the Bombay presidency, by the Brigadier of the station, and prevented from appealing to the Commander-in-Chief, except through the Brigadier himself. The offence of the officer is not mentioned.

FAMILY OF VENERAM.—Accounts from Baroda announce the departure of the wives and family of Veneram for Calcutta on the 9th of November. They left Baroda, accompanied with a proper escort of sowars given by His Highness.

CHOLERA.—The pilgrims who have returned from Lakshmi's Shrine say, that the cholera was making great devastation in and about those places, and the loss of lives is reported to be very great. A private letter from Kulladghness mentions that about 100 men died of cholera there and about 150 at Lakapoor, a village not far from it. It is reported here that many are daily dying of cholera in the 18th Regt. N. I. en route to Baroda, now at Suteegareem, a village about 36 miles on this side of Kulladghness.

All accounts concur in representing the cholera as ranging with considerable violence in many parts of the Deccan; and it is causing great mortality at Poona and the country around. The daily deaths at Poona are numerous and on the increase. This dreadful disease has also visited several of our regiments that are now moving through the country.

THE CROPS.—The crops being nearly ready to be cut down, the successive torrents of rain which have since fallen have done a great deal of mischief to them, and it is apprehended that the ryots will have cause to bemoan their ill fate.

MR. SUTHERLAND.—Mr. Sutherland, the late Member of Council, has been appointed to the situation of Resident at Baroda and Political Commissioner for Guzerat. This appointment does much credit to Sir Robert Grant's judgment and discretion, and Mr. Sutherland will fulfil all the hopes entertained of him in conducting the important duties which this office may impose on him.

THE INDIAN NAVY.—It is understood that intelligence has been received by the last overland packet, that the future strength of the India Navy is to be as follows: 2 steamers of 1,100 tons each, and 2 of 600 tons each, as men-of-war; 5 packet steamers, 3 of which it is supposed are to run between this and Mocha, and the other 2 between that and Suez; 1 brig-of-war, and 4 small schooners. The new steamer Simiramis, it is said, was built in Ireland, and is intended for the packet service.

EARTHQUAKE. An earthquake was felt at Cutch on the 8th of October last.

THE STEAM FUND.—The following resolutions were passed at a meeting of the Steam Committee, held on the 2nd instant.

1st. That having had under consideration a letter from the Secretary to the subscribers at Hyderabad, placing at the disposal of this Committee the amount of their subscription, for the purpose of being appropriated to facilitate the progress, and promote the comfort of passengers during the journey across the desert, between Suez and Cairo, and this Committee fully concurring in the view of the Hyderabad subscribers, and being of opinion that money may be most beneficially expended in Egypt, in being applied to these purposes; they have empowered Colonel Barr to ascertain from Colonel Campbell, the Consul General, in what manner their views can best be carried into effect, and they have also for the present placed at the disposal of Colonel Campbell and Barr, a sum not to exceed the interest accumulated on the Fund to be applied to the above uses.

2nd. That with reference to the sums actually contributed by subscribers to the fund, a public notice be given in the newspapers that every subscriber who claims the amount of his subscription before the 1st of August, 1838, shall be entitled to have the amount actually subscribed, returned to him.

3d. That the Secretary be empowered to grant orders on the Treasurers for the amount of subscriptions claimed under the last resolution.

4th. That this Committee have to record their gratitude for, and strong sense of, the value of the exertions of Major Head, and the Provisional Committee in London, in which principally they attribute the carrying into effect the measure of the establishment of Steam Communication between Bombay and Suez by the British Government and the East India Company.

With reference to the above resolutions, notice is given, that any subscriber to the Steam Fund, who applies for his subscription before the 1st August, 1838, shall receive an order on Messrs. Remington and Co., Treasurers to the Fund, for the amount actually subscribed.

OUTRAGE AND PIRACY.—In the Government Gazette, a reward of 1,000 rupees is offered to any person, who will give information which may lead to the apprehension and conviction of the perpetrators of the outrage and piracy at the entrance of the harbour, on the batella Futta Moorharuck and her crew. In this instance, the villains have succeeded in securing a large booty, and if the perpetrators should be enabled to elude the efforts of the Government and secure a consequent immunity, it will be a game often played, considering the unprotected condition of country vessels and the facility with which a gang of plunderers may be collected in Bombay.

INTELLIGENCE FROM GOA.—Intelligence has been received from Goa of the arrival at that port of the frigate Don Pedro, taking thither the new Governor-General of Portuguese India, Baron Saboso and his family, as well as the long-looked-for Archbishop Don Antonio de Santa Rita Carvalho, Don Joseph Mariano Falcao Carvalho, a Commander-in-Chief of the forces, Viera Foucoca and many officers civil and military. They arrived in the night of the 19th ultimo, and the Governor-General landed on the 23rd and was received with the usual honors. It is confidently reported, that he has brought a general amnesty to every one who had taken part in the civil disorders or revolutionary proceedings at that settlement. The Archbishop, it is said, intends very soon to pay a visit to Bombay for the purpose of inspecting that portion of his diocese and asserting his supremacy there.

CEYLON.

PUBLIC THANKSGIVINGS.—Public thanksgivings were offered up on the 12th November, both in the European and Native Churches, at the desire of the Right Honorable the Governor and family, for their late prosperous voyage and safe arrival in Ceylon.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.—The Honorable Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie, is Patroness of a Society in England for the promotion of female education in the East; in furtherance of which object she has brought out with her a lady to superintend schools to be established under the society in Ceylon.

BURMAH.

By the British Monarch, from Moulmein, a letter has been received at Calcutta from an English subject residing near the new King of Ava. It is dated the 15th October, and states among other matters, that the King says, he expects some discussion with us ere long, and that he is keeping up a large preparatory establishment, having collected no less than three hundred boats at the late boat races, each manned by fifty or sixty men. He has ordered the whole country to furnish boatsmen, and says that he requires no other revenue. The letter also states, that Ava is now to be laid waste. The gateways and palace are to be destroyed, and every man who remains afterwards must pay forty rupees.

Intelligence to the 11th of November has since been received. It is said that almost all the Kakhyeen and Singpho chiefs from the northern extremities of the Burmese dominions, have arrived at Court: sworn allegiance to the new King, and received titles and gold umbrellas. Amongst the latter is the notorious Singpho chief, Duffa Gais, who, two years ago, invaded our territories in Assam, and committed considerable slaughter and havoc on the part of Singpho villages. This affair is still fresh in the recollection of the Burmese

Letters from Rangoon, to the 1st of December state, that Tharawaddie has at length apparently yielded to the solicitations of his own family as well as of the whole of his Court, and consented to leave Khoutmoung, which has also proved very unhealthy, and he proposes to come down the country again, not to Ava, but to Umeerapura, his grand father's city, which he now talks of repairing and making his future capital. He has issued a proclamation explaining, without reference however to the solemn oath which he took, or to the rights of his nephew, that he has assumed the sovereignty in consequence of the indisposition of his brother. The brother, all accounts say, is now in a better state of mind and body than what he had been for several years past. Some traders both at Rangoon and Ava, have been very active in removing all uneasiness from the minds of Tharawaddie's officers, and assuring them, that the Governor-General has no intention or desire of reasserting their Master's insulting language or meddling with him. Tharawaddie has also sent down a proclamation to Martaban, directly opposite to our station of Moulmein, inviting back to Pegu all the 15,000 or 20,000 Talains who emigrated into our provinces during the last 10 or 11 years, promising to restore to them their houses, lands and other property, and engaging that they shall be released from all their former debts and free from taxation, and that they shall receive other immunities and honors.

Accounts have been received from Kyook Phroo to the 1st, and Akyab to the 5th of December, by which it appears, that all remained quiet at those stations, though rumours prevailed of the assembling of the Burmese in the neighbourhood of Sandoway. It is said that Major White has taken the command of the frontier in Assam, and that measures have been taken, so that in case any attack should be meditated on that side by Duffagan, the Singpho chief, who invaded Assam in 1834-35, or by any other partisan whom the Burmese might stir up against us, we shall not be found unprepared. With this view the head quarters of the Assam Light Infantry, are likely to be posted in Upper Assam, during the ensuing rains. Major White is now actively engaged in conciliating the Singpho chiefs, and settling their feuds among themselves.

MAULMAIN.—It is said that the half-brother of the late and present king, the Bo-thmoo Men-tha, has effected his escape from the capital. If this be true, he will, of course, direct his flight to the Shan states, of which he was formerly the Governor-General, and by whom he is from all accounts, much beloved. He is said to be a man of far more energy and strength of mind than either of his half-brothers and if he has escaped out of the present king's hands, the latter is likely to find in him a very troublesome disturber of his quiet, and one whom it will not be easy to put down.

An order, or proclamation, or whatever else it may be called, has been addressed by His Majesty, to all his loving subjects, in which he informs them, that while his elder brother was on the throne, the Government was bad and the people oppressed and unhappy, but that he intends to restore justice and happiness, that for this purpose he did intend establishing himself at the birth-place of his great ancestor, but that it having been represented to him that Amrapoora was the residence of his father, that it is a holy and fortunate city, and that all the omens and conjurations and divinations point to that city as the most eligible site for his throne and palace; he has determined upon re-establishing it as the capital, that he has given orders for building a palace there, and that it is not his intention to call upon his people to contribute towards the expense, which will be defrayed from the royal treasure.

Reports are prevalent at Rangoon of Mr. Sarkies having obtained from the king a monopoly of timber, and it has naturally created considerable dissatisfaction. The reports, however, requires confirmation.

Great hopes are entertained of a caravan of Chinese traders visiting Maulmain this season. Capt. McLeod, during his late mission, felt in with a considerable number of them, who all expressed a desire of visiting us, and some promised to come at all hazards. The only fear is, that the route will be found too long, but as they are known to be a bold and enterprising race, and content with moderate profits, a few of their number may be induced to try the market.

TAVOY.—It is reported that a party of Siamese have arrived at Tavoy, bringing with them a letter requesting to be informed of the real state of our present relations with Ava. It seems that reports had reached the Court of Siam of war having been declared between us and the Burmese, and that the latter, having been joined by the French, had succeeded in driving us out of these provinces.

SIAM.

The following is an extract from a letter written by an English merchant residing at Bangkok, and dated 20th October last. The King of Siam is probably desirous of taking advantage of the war, which he makes sure must soon break out between us and the Golden-footed Monarch, and of helping himself to a slice of the Burmese dominions adjoining his own Shan territories. But what will he and his brother of Cochinchina, and their paramount Lord of Peking, think of us and our Government, when they learn how tamely we have submitted to insulting language and rejection of treaties. If character is strength to a Government, ours cannot too speedily bring the King of Ava to his senses by a course of vigorous measures.

"The King's mother died three days ago, and his Majesty has taken her death very much to heart. He has scarcely spoken or eaten since. This morning, however, he ordered the wood to be cut for constructing the building in which her corpse is to be burnt, the posts to be 20 fathoms long, and directed that no time should be lost, as he is going to prepare for war; but whom he is going to visit with his royal displeasure he did not say. The Siamese have had enough of Cochinchina to go there again, but they are taking the deepest interest in Burmese affairs."

PENANG.

Penang papers to the 28th of October have reached Calcutta. They mention that the pirates have again appeared in great force in the vicinity of the pepper ports on the east coast of Sumatra; and the death of Mr. Edward Tanner, of the firm of Kerr and Tanner, is announced.

SINGAPORE.

Singapore journals to the 28th of October, have been received during the week. They intimate that the Glenelg, while entering the Straits of Singapore from the China sea, through the great inner channel, struck on a rock and was considerably damaged; and that the Julia was run foul of by the Duke of Sussex, while lying too under her topsails inside of the Carimons on the 17th of October, by which accident she lost her bowsprit and fore mast, and received considerable other injury, besides having five of her crew killed. The Julia reached Singapore with great difficulty.

Singapore journals to the 23rd of November, have been received. They intimate that the Dutch Government had framed a new import tariff for Java and Madura, which came into operation on the 18th of October last. The efforts of the Dutch, for the suppression of piracy, it is said, have been attended with considerable success; a brig had, however, been cut off in the southern entrance of the Straits of Banca, near Lacopara island.

Court, and yet the perpetrator of the aggression is now receiving proofs of the favor and approbation of the new King.

It is said, that His Majesty never dines without first sending a portion of his dinner to his deposed brother, and never goes to the pagoda without the mummery of sheking to his brother's prison.

PERSIA.

The following is an extract of a letter lately received from Persia: "Advices from Tehran of the 28th October mention, that the Asaf id Dowla (the Shah's uncle, and governor of the province of Khorassan) had joined the King's camp, and had offered to conduct the expedition against Herat if His Majesty would return to Tehran; but the Shah had declared that he would head the expedition himself. The Shah's army was said to amount to 12,000 men in all, the route was uncertain; some said by Tursheez and others by Meshid: and they were expected to have been at Subzawar on the 28th October. Kamran Shah is said to have returned victorious to Herat from a fort on the Candahar road, with 20,000 cavalry in addition to Tafanteches, and was determined to resist the Persian forces. Mahomed Tayar Khan (Cassini) had arrived in Tehran from the Shah's camp, being the bearer of 50 shawls, 15 horses and some strings of pearls as a present to the Emperor Nicolas, who was expected to arrive at Erivan on the 6th of October. This Mahomed Tayar Khan is the same person who had secreted a bag of gold under his clothes when delivering over the crown to the Russians at Khoi: he has also stolen a gold watch belonging to one of the officers of the British Detachment.

"Mr. Bonham, a British Merchant, has been appointed consul at Tabriz and had arrived in Tehran.

"The Shah's troops had taken an Island in the Caspian from the Turcoman: and as the fighting was between boats, H. M. has gained a naval victory."

CHINA.

Canton papers to the 3d of October have been received, and are full of fresh edicts against the opium trade—some of them of an important character. The loss of the Martha, from Liverpool to Canton, on the Paracels, on the night of the 30th August, which we reported before, is confirmed in the Canton Register of the 19th of September.

Canton papers to the 7th of November, have been received during the week. The state of affairs remained without change; but it was rumoured that the foreign merchants were about to endeavour to open the tea trade which the Hong Merchants were disinclined to do, and the Canton Register deprecates the proceedings of the foreigners, on the plea that experience does not justify them. Another imperial edict had been promulgated, for the expulsion from Canton of the foreigners who have rendered themselves obnoxious to the Government. Frequent instances of insubordination had been exhibited by the seamen on board of British vessels, which had elicited some severe strictures from Captain Christopher Biden, on the present class of British seamen.

"Another edict has been promulgated against the traitorous barbarians," Jardine, Dent, Davis and Morrison, directing that they should be coerced to quit the country; and the local authorities have issued a chop, ordering the "receiving-ships" at Lintin to depart within a month, and threatening a stoppage of trade in the event of non-compliance with the order. In consequence of this continued opposition of the Chinese authorities to the Opium trade, very few transactions in the drug had taken place.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From the Bengal Hurkaru Price Current, 29th December, 1837.)

INDIGO.—Shipments are still going forward through the company, who have just added 25 lacks to their advances so that unless buyers come forward early, there will be but little choice left, which added to the certainty of favorable accounts being received immediately from England, will maintain prices and we fully expect they will range little, if any thing below those of last year. The remark we lately made of the indigo, weighing off short, continues to be borne out by the invoices since received.

RAW SILK.—Some native November Band Silk has been sold at sicca rupees 8-5 per bazar seer for Madanagore, and prices are inclined to give way.

SILK PRICE GOODES.—The above remarks also apply to these, and the sales now quoted are at a decline of 8 and 9 rs. per corga on those previously circulated, which however (as lately remarked) were not real transactions, and Sa. Rs. 130 to 131 per corga for corahs may be stated as the present currency; when the November Band Goode come to the market their abundance will probably cause a further decline.

CORRUM.—Remains without enquiry, and our present quotations are nominal.

Accounts from China by the Red Rover are not very encouraging. Very little was doing in Bengal and Madras produce, which are quoted:

Bengal, Tails,.....	8	4	10	5	} Per Pecul.
Madras, ".....	8	5	10	2
Bombay, ".....	7	0	10	0

ALYPERNA.—The demand has been somewhat steady during the week, and prices remain without alteration. The purchases reported are for the English and American markets.

BAK.—The demand for this article is also steady, we have no alteration to make on our last currency.

LAC.—Both Shell Lac and Lac Dye continue neglected, but prices remain without alteration.

DRY GINGER.—A few purchases have been made on American account at last week's currency.

HEMP AND JUTE.—Have been in some enquiry, and prices are expected to improve.

LINS.—Continues in limited enquiry, and prices remain without alteration.

SAFFLOWER.—Is without enquiry, and has given way in price.

GRAIN.—Shipments of fine rice are going forward on owners' account. We have no change in prices to notice.

OPUM.—The return of the Red Rover so far from bringing better accounts from China confirms the reports which previously reached us of the determination on the part of the Chinese to throw every impediment in the way of the trade, and so effectually have they succeeded that sales on the East Coast are scarcely less difficult than at Lintin, where no smuggler dare approach the receiving vessel. Stocks were unprecedentedly heavy, and when the 4,000 chests since gone on are added thereto, it seems next to an impossibility to run them off except at an immense decline in price.

DETTLENU.—Has further improved in price.

CASIA.—Has also improved in price.

NUTMEG.—Has declined in price.

PEPPER.—Has given way in price, throughout the assortments.

TIN.—Has also given way in price, and is quoted at 1 & 1-8 per maund below last week's price.

CHINTZES.—The market continues dull for all descriptions of Chintzes, but prices remain steady.

WHITE COTTONS.—The demand continues for lighter fabrics, but we have no improvement in prices to notice.
MULB TWIST.—A few sales have been effected since our last, but the prices of some of the assortments have slightly given way.

TURKISH RED AND OTHER DYED YARNS.—Market inactive, and prices remain unaltered.

WOOLLENS.—The market as before stated, continues in active, and the prices of fine and coarse cloths are quoted at a decline.

COPPER.—There has been some enquiry for this metal during the week, and the prices of the assortments have somewhat improved consequent on some favorable advices from the Upper Provinces.

IRON.—Some sales have been effected during the week at steady prices. The Stock of this metal is large and price are expected to recede.

SPELTER.—A sale of 3000 maunds, has been effected at a reduction of about 8 annas per maund from last week's currency.

GENERAL REGISTER.

PORT WILLIAM, ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT, MARCH 6, 1837.

Resolution—Since the abolition of the Town Duties in April last year, the Government has directed its attention to the best means of replacing the loss thereby occasioned in the fund which had as circumstances permitted, been considered available towards the improvement of the large Towns in the interior of the country.

From the information collected from the Magistrates of Bengal and the North Western Provinces, it appears that the object in view may be accomplished with the least annoyance to the people, and with the least disturbance of existing institutions, by rendering the Assessment which is leviable under Regulation XXII. 1816, for the maintenance of Chokeedars of Police applicable, like the similar Assessments levied in Calcutta and the other Presidencies, to the cleansing and repairing, as well as to the watching of the Towns in which the Tax is levied.

There is reason to believe also that the maximum of the Tax viz. One Rupee, authorized to be fixed by the Panchaite of each Division of the Towns under the aforesaid Regulation is too small to admit of an equitable adjustment of the rates. On this account a higher maximum has been fixed for individuals, but no charge has been made in the maximum of aggregate amount of the Assessment, authorized to be levied under the Regulation. The effect of this alteration will be to relieve the poor, and to make a small addition to the contribution of those who are best able to contribute.

The following Draft of a proposed Act is accordingly notified for general information.

ACT No. — of 1837

I It is hereby enacted that from the day of its passing it shall be lawful for the several Magistrates and Joint Magistrates within the Presidency of Port William in Bengal to appropriate a portion of the Tax levied under Regulation XXII. 1816 of the Bengal Code to the purpose of cleansing and repairing the Towns in which that Tax is levied.

II And it is hereby enacted in lieu of the maximum rate prescribed by the annual appointment referred to in section X of the above mentioned Regulation that after the day of its passing it shall be competent to the Panchaite appointed by the said annual to fix the rate of Assessment to be levied from the Proprietor or principal occupier of any shop or habitation at two Annas, or Rupees per Mensem.

Ordered that the said Draft be reconsidered at the first Meeting of the Legislative Council of India after the 20th day of April next.

The following Draft of a proposed Act was read in Council for the first time on the 6th March 1837.

ACT No. — of 1837

I It is hereby enacted that no Native of India shall embark from any Port within the Presidency of Port William in Bengal for any part of the United Kingdom as a Merchant vessel without a Permit for an Officer authorized by the Governor General of India in Council to grant such Permits.

II And it is hereby enacted, that the Officer aforesaid shall before granting such permit require that the party engaging such Manual Servant, shall execute a Bond with two householders of Calcutta as Sureties thereto, binding himself and them in a penalty of Rupees 1000 to reimburse at the demand of such Officer, any sum that may be expended by the East India Company or by any Officer or Agent of the East India Company in maintaining such Servant, and procuring him, or her the means of return to Calcutta, and if the Officer empowered to grant such Permit shall not be satisfied with the Sureties tendered, it shall be competent for him to require that a deposit of 1000 Rupees of a Government Promissory Note for that amount shall be made in the General Treasury of Calcutta for every such servant, and if such deposit be so required the prescribed Permit for that embarkation of such Servant shall not be granted until there shall be produced to the Officer empowered to grant the same, a Certificate under the signature of the Sub-Treasurer of Calcutta, that the deposit has been duly made.

III And it is hereby enacted, that every such deposit shall be restored by the Sub-Treasurer of Calcutta on production of a Certificate by any Officer authorized to grant such Permits as aforesaid, which Certificate shall set forth either that the Manual Servant on account of whom the deposit was made is returned, or that such Servant is dead, or that the Officer certifying is satisfied, that such Servant cannot be a cause of expence to the East India Company.

Ordered, that the Draft now read be published for general information.

Ordered, that the said Draft be reconsidered at the first Meeting of the Legislative Council of India after the 20th day of April next.

Resolution—The attention of the Government having been drawn to the condition of the Indian Labourers, who have proceeded in large numbers upon Contracts of service to the Island of Mauritius inquiries were made from the Authorities in that Colony, and through the means of Public Officers of this Government who have visited Mauritius, as to the arrangements under which the Labourers have ordinarily been conveyed from India, and to the measures proper to be taken by the Government for ensuring to its subjects embarking in such undertakings, all due assistance and protection.

The communications received in reply to these inquiries, have been taken into consideration, and the Governor General in Council acknowledges with much satisfaction the attention which has been bestowed by His Excellency the Governor of Mauritius upon this interesting subject, and he has no doubt that upon any representation of defects in the existing laws of that Colony, or of the manner in which they are administered, all attention will be given by His Excellency to proposals for their amendment. His Lordship in Council is also happy to learn from the Honble the Administrators of the French Establishments in Bengal, that this subject has not escaped the notice of the Government of Bourbon.

It is shown, however that from the novelty of these Contracts, from the circumstances that the parties proceeding as Labourers are, for the greater part, of a rude and ignorant class, and from their destination to places where their language is little understood the Emigrants suffer under serious difficulties. It is not in all cases certain that they fully understand the terms of the Contracts by which they bind themselves, or that they are really willing to proceed, for long periods, to a distance from their Native Country. It is also incumbent on the Public Authorities in India, while they in no respect restrict the liberty of private Agreements, to see that all the Contracts of service purporting to be executed by such individuals, are duly consented to and voluntarily agreed to by them. The compliance of such Contracts by the Public Officers, has been felt to be so advantageous to all parties that the practice of exhibiting Contracts before the Chief Magistrate of Calcutta has been very generally adopted by the Agents by whom the Labourers are hired for service. It is now judged necessary, upon all the information which has been received by the Supreme Government to confirm this practice, and to give it the force of Law. It is further expedient, on the general grounds above stated, that all Contracts of this description should be made terminable at the option of either party after certain reasonable periods, and that the parties hiring such Labourers should be bound to ensure their passage back to their country on the expiration of their engagements of service.

Without enacting fixed rules of minute regulation and detail, it is also thought desirable, that a control should be exercised by the Officers of Government with the view of securing fit accommodation and care for the Labourers while on their voyage from India.

His Lordship in Council is not of opinion that any legislative provisions for the protection of Emigrant Labourers need be adopted beyond such as are required for securing the objects above mentioned. Under the powers which are already possessed by the Executive Government of India, either singly or in conjunction with the Governments of the Settlements for which the Labourers are engaged it will be able to arrange all other safeguards which are thought to be requisite.

The following Draft of a proposed Act is accordingly published for general information.

ACT No. — of 1837.

I It is hereby enacted, that from the day of its passing no Native of India except as hereinafter excepted, who makes a Contract of Service to be performed without the said Territories, shall embark in pursuance of such Contract on board of any ship at any place within the Territories subject to the Presidency of Port William in Bengal without an order from the Governor of the said Presidency, or a Permit from an Officer, authorized by the Governor of the said Presidency to act in that behalf.

II And it is hereby enacted, that before any such Permit shall be granted by any such Officer, such Native, and also the person with whom such Native has contracted, or an authorized Agent of that person, shall personally appear before that Officer, and shall exhibit a Memorandum of the Contract written both in English and in the mother tongue of such Native, which Memorandum shall specify the nature, the term, and the wages of the service as settled by the Contract.

III And it is hereby enacted, that no such Permit shall be granted unless the Contract of Service shall be made determinable on the expiration of one term of not more than five years, to be reckoned from the date of the Contract, or of successive terms, none of which shall exceed five years, and unless such Contract shall contain a stipulation that such Native shall be conveyed back to the Port at which he is embarked free of charge to himself at the expiration of his Service.

And it is hereby enacted, that the said Officer shall be responsible for the same. And it is hereby enacted, that the said Officer shall be responsible for the same.

VI And it is hereby enacted, that if application is made for Permits authorizing more than twenty Natives to embark on board of any one Ship, it shall be lawful for the Officer aforesaid to summon the person in charge of that Ship, and to examine that person as to the accommodations, food, and medical attendance provided for such Natives on board of that Ship, and to inspect that Ship, or by an order under his hand, to depute any other person to inspect the same.

VII And it is hereby enacted, that the Officer aforesaid shall not grant Permits authorizing a greater number of Natives than twenty to embark on board of any one Ship, unless he is satisfied that the accommodations, food and medical attendance provided for such Natives on board of that Ship, will be sufficient for their health.

VIII And it is hereby enacted, that the Officer aforesaid shall keep a Register of all Natives of whom he shall grant such Permits as aforesaid, which Register shall specify their names, the periods of the Contracts, the dates of the Permits, the places of their destination, and the ship on board of which they are permitted to embark.

IX And it is hereby enacted, that for every such Permit it shall be lawful for the Officer aforesaid, to require that a fee not exceeding One Rupee, shall be paid by the person with whom the Native in whom the Permit relates has contracted, or by the authorized Agent of that person.

X And it is hereby enacted, that whoever being in charge of any Ship at any place within the Territories subject to the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, shall knowingly suffer any such Native as is aforesaid, to embark on board of that Ship in pursuance of any such Contract as is aforesaid, without either an order from the Governor of the said Presidency, or such a Permit as is aforesaid, being produced to him by the Native so embarking, shall, on conviction thereof before a Magistrate, be punished with a fine not exceeding Two Hundred Rupees for every Native so suffered to embark, and in default of payment of such fine, with imprisonment for a term not exceeding thirty days for every Native so suffered to embark.

XI Provided always, that nothing in this Act contained, shall be taken to apply to any Native Seaman who shall embark on board of any Ship in pursuance of a Contract to navigate that Ship, or to any person who shall embark as a Mutual Servant.

Ordered, that the said Draft be re-considered at the first Meeting of the Legislative Council of India after the 26th day of April next.
